Even then, not all parts of the country are well served by the big, clear-channel stations, because these are located mostly in big cities. Today there is controversy as to whether the number of high-powered stations should be increased, with a consequent decrease in the number of small stations, or whether there should be more small stations to emphasize local news and advertise local commercial interests. At present, more than 500 of the more than 900 commercial radio stations in the United States are in metropolitan areas with populations over 50,000, while only 17 stations are in towns of under 5,000 people.

Federal Communication commission officials are deeply concerned with this situation. They point out that the rapid growth of radio in the last decade has meant more varied and additional service to city listeners, with little improvement in small-community and rural radio service. Yet the economic and social interests are enormous. Viewed from the political standpoint, the country areas send to congress almost two-thirds of the representatives.

Nevertheless, the unprofitable economics of small-station operation have been demonstrated repeatedly. Of the 300 stations which were just about breaking even, or were operating at a loss, in 1942 the majority were small, independent outlets, most of them located in communities with no other radio station. The books of 194 of these 300 borderline stations show them to be actually operating "in the red."

Break for Small Communities

The FCC in April, 1942, relaxed its wartime freeze policy on the use of critical materials for civilian radio construction to encourage expansion of radio service to small communities. It also reduced telephone line charges to broadcasting stations, which made it easier to obtain network affiliation.

In August, 1943, the FCC adopted an order permitting the use of little equipment to construct new local channels stations of 100 to 250 watts in communities where no station was located, or in communities which did not have good service from nearby metropolitan center.

A partial solution probably will be found in the development of frequency-modulation (FM) stations for local areas, while some of the local channels now being cleared and given to high-powered stations, FM stations considerably improved reception. Some half-million sets are now equipped to receive it. It operates in high frequencies and can be used in commercial broadcast. Mr. Hogan pointed out to me that a new system of relays has been developed which could hook up FM stations to each other, with the effect of creating new networks.

Refresh Yourself With Chilled Drinks (See Recipes Below)

Frosty Foods

Along about summertime, there should be a new word added to our vocabularies—coolness. That's right, something cool and luscious to make us forget sweltering sun, high temperature and humidity.

In this class of foods come the cool, tinkling drinks, dewy salads, frothy desserts. Even the main dish can be cool, a filling meal salad for those who want hearty foods, jelly tuna or salmon molds with icy cucumber sauce. Or whole meals can be made from cool foods, but it's a good idea to have something warm, even if only toasted or heated rolls so the family does not tire of them. Sometimes you'll find a cup of hot tea more cooling with cool foods than an iced drink; other times, it's just the opposite. Let your judgment guide you.

Let's begin with a round-up of cooling drinks, some plain, some perfumed.

Strawberry Frost.

1 pint strawberries
1 pint lemon juice
Carbonated water

Clean and crush berries. Pour into six glasses. Add lemon juice and stir until well mixed, then fill glasses with carbonated water.

*Fruited Tea. (Serves 8)

3 lemons
1 cup boiling water
1 cup granulated sugar
1 quart cold, strong tea
3 oranges, sliced
1/4 cup maraschino cherries
1 cup canned apricots

Squeeze juice from lemons. Cover skins with water and let stand until cool. Drain, pressing water off skins. Combine with sugar, lemon juice. Add tea, orange slices, juice drained from cherries and apricots. Chill. Chop apricots and cherries; add with ice to beverage just before serving.

Cherry Milk Flip.

6 tablespoons canned cherry juice
2 tablespoons corn syrup
Few grains salt
1 cup milk

Blend cherry juice with corn syrup. Add salt and stir in cold milk. Turn into chilled glass and top with a spoonful of whipped cream; garnish with fresh or canned cherry and a sprig of fresh mint. Yield 1 glass.

Lemonade Syrup.

(Makes 1 pint)
1/2 cup lemon juice
2 cups boiling water
1 cup granulated sugar

Squeeze juice from lemons. Pour water over them and let stand 15 minutes. Drain, press water from skins, then combine with juice and sugar in saucepan. Simmer for 10

Cool Lunch Quickies: For quick summer lunches, store sandwich fillings in tightly covered jars in refrigerator. When ready to serve, take out spread bread: Try grated carrot with chopped celery, mayonnaise, salt and pepper.

Combine chopped green pepper with salad dressing and spread over sliced tomatoes. This is colorful, too!

Flake leftover salmon, mix with pickle relish, mayonnaise and use on rye or whole wheat bread.

Cold leftover ham loaf is good with mustard or horseradish on pumpernickel bread.

Chopped hard-boiled eggs combined with sliced stuffed olives, softened butter, salt and pepper goes best on toasted white bread.

minutes. Pour into sterile jar and store until ready to use in refrigerator. Use 4 to 5 tablespoons to glass filled 3/4 full with ice and water. Cooling salads may be either the mainstay of the meal, accompaniment to the meat or a dessert. Recipes for each of the types are given here:

*Macaroni Salad. (Serves 8)

- 1 8-ounce package macaroni
- 3 tablespoons grated onion
- 1/4 cup chopped green pepper
- 2 1/2 cups chopped stuffed olives
- 1 cup chopped tart red apple
- 1/4 cup chopped nuts
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 cup salad dressing

Cook macaroni in boiling salted water until tender. Drain. Rinse with hot water. Chill thoroughly.

Add remaining ingredients and toss lightly. Serve in crisp lettuce cups.

Molded Beet Salad. (Serves 6)

- 1 tablespoon unflavored gelatin
- 1/2 cup cold water
- 1/2 cup boiling water
- 1/2 cup lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 2 1/2 cups cooked shredded beets
- 1/2 cup diced celery
- 2 tablespoons grated horseradish

Soak gelatin in cold water. Add to boiling water, stir until dissolved. Add lemon juice, salt, sugar and chill until mixture thickens. Add remaining ingredients. Mix well. Pour into a mold which has been rinsed with cold water. Chill until firm. Unmold on lettuce and garnish with green pepper slices.

Save Used Fats!

Frozen Pear Salad. (Serves 4)

- 1/4 pound soft American cheese
- 1/2 cup top milk
- 1/2 cup mayonnaise
- 1 cup cream or evaporated milk, whipped
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 8 halves canned pears
- 1/2 teaspoon salt

Watercress
Rub cheese through sieve and mix together all ingredients except pears and watercress. Arrange pears, core side down in flat dish and pour over them the cheese mixture. Allow to freeze until stiff, then unmold on watercress.

Desserts that are menu-perfect and point-easy are these:

*Strawberry Parfait. (Makes 1 1/2 pints)

- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1/4 cup cold water
- 1 egg separated
- 1 pint strawberries
- 1 cup cream or evaporated milk, whipped

Boil sugar and water until syrup forms a thread. Pour over beaten egg yolk, beating constantly. Combine stiffly beaten egg white and beat until cool. Chill, fold in berries which have been pressed through a sieve and whipped cream. Put in refrigerator tray and freeze.

PAUL IN EPHEBUS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 19:8-10; Ephesians 2:4-10; 3:14-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works which God afore prepared that we should walk in them.—Ephesians 2:10.

Not peace—but a sword! With such graphic words Jesus indicated that His coming into the world would set men apart, either for or against Him (see Matt. 10:34-42). The gospel is the good news of redemption for all mankind, but the attitude of men toward the gospel divides them sharply, into the saved and the lost. Which are you?

Our lesson, telling of Paul's ministry at Ephesus and giving part of his letter to the Ephesians, shows that the gospel does divide, but that it also gives quickening grace and strength for Christian living.

I. Dividing (Acts 19:8-10). Paul had a long ministry at Ephesus and a very successful one, but at the same time it was a stormy, trying experience. After all, do not those elements often go together?

Paul began in the synagogue. That was the proper way, and his custom. He ran into opposition, and after three months he had to seek another place to meet the people.

But not here, he did not give up and leave town.

The teaching of any truth results in division, and especially is that true of the gospel. It was found before long (vv. 23-41) that winning people to Christ interfered with the heathen business interests, and then things began to stir.

One wonders why modern business set for the destruction of men's souls by rotten plays, movies, books, amusements, and by the saloon is so content to let the church alone. Is it because our testimony does not harm their business? If so, we are certainly not walking in the footsteps of Paul or of Christ.

Christ is a divider of men. Yes, but those who stand on the right side of that divide also receive

II. Quickening (Eph. 2:4-10). Dead men, spiritually, come to life when they meet Christ and believe on Him. We were all dead in trespasses and sins, entirely unable to help ourselves, when God in mercy and grace quickened us.

He did this for us, but also for His own glory. That really is the most adequate explanation of grace. It was and is for His glory, a showing forth (v. 7) of the exceeding riches of His grace, through all the ages to come.

Being saved, then, is not (as some describe it) a foolish thing of little import, that takes place in some mission or little crossroads Sunday school. It does happen there, thank God for that, but it reaches clear up to the highest heavens, and on into all eternity. This business of bringing men and women, boys and girls to Christ is the greatest of all occupations. Let's be busy about it!

Be sure to note in verses 8-10 that it is all of grace. No works can enter into salvation. We are "kind workmanship," not the result of a cooperative enterprise or creation.

But at the same time do not fail to stress that we are created "unto good works" (v. 10). The professed Christian who talks about being saved by grace, but who does not live it out in the good works which God has ordained as the proper expression of salvation by grace, should not be surprised if the testimony of his lips is not believed.

III. Strengthening (Eph. 3:14-19). Paul prayed for the Ephesians, but somehow one feels that he prayed for the Christians of all time, for every member of "the whole family in heaven and earth" (v. 15) who bear the name of Christ. The writer is rejoicing today that he belongs to that family, but he wonders how it is with you who read these lines. Do you belong?

Paul prayed in the Spirit, that is evident as one reads these sublime words. It is a comforting and encouraging thought, too, for Paul here shares for a Christian experience for his readers, which seems quite impossible of attainment, except for one thing. It is the power of God which is to bring it about. Prayer in the Spirit is prayer that God answers, always and fully.

So we read with confidence these magnificent, enriching petitions, and we say: "O God, make me that kind of a Christian, a real Christian."

Observe that there is to be a strengthening of the inward man by the Holy Spirit. This is not something "put on" or acquired. It is God's gift.

Note also that it has a normal development, a growth in the knowledge of Christ because of an ability to "comprehend" (v. 18). Is not that our great need? For Paul here does not seem to know enough to take out our inheritance.

FOLK & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Did you hear about the boy going to the Draft Board and being turned down? Seems the order had just been issued that no man over 26 would be taken but those above are could volunteer. This fellow went in and told them he wanted to go to the Army and that he was 27 years old. They immediately turned him down and wrote across his application, "Something wrong with his head."

To the many friends of Mrs. Mark L. Tucker who are interested, she is in room 214, Highland Avenue Baptist Hospital at Birmingham, just resting, and is doing nicely, thank you.

Looks like Chilton County farmers will make a killing on their peach crop. Prospects in most orchards are pretty good and the price will be sky high. It anybody deserves a break it is the farmer. They suffered several years setbacks because of first one thing then another. Last year was a good year and now another coming. The saying nothing happens—will just about set them even.

It's going pretty hard with these married men with children who got in the armed forces within the past few weeks and now find that no registration over 26 is to be taken. Most of them feel they got a tough deal. It isn't the fact that they do not want to serve their country, the ones that have talked to us just wonder why they should have to leave their families and then leave others here with probably no families or at least no children. Confidentially, we believe like Mr. Sherman, anyway you take it, war is hell.

We will always wonder how news comes out on every "miser" but on the contrary. This week we received a newspaper letter with rather blanketing in a book "How to Make Love". Married 28 years—this time tell me, I said in one easy lesson we could learn to make love. Stop fooling around it will learn to hold your own with the opposite sex. We're laughing. It would up with "Things every man should know before he marries." (More still laughing).

We have been waiting a week for our friend Steve Hughes to come around and tell us that we can't paint our office ourselves. Steve is strictly a Union man, and incidentally so are we. In fact, we were probably a member of the Union before Steve was. But that's getting away from the point. We were just wondering if he wouldn't come around and ask why Union labor wasn't painting our floor and walls. Of course we have all the answers ready and the principal one is that we would gladly pay a premium to anyone, anywhere, who would tell us, or even give us a hint, where we can find any Union labor that will come and do the work. Even if they tell you they will come around and talk to you—they don't do it.

We received an Absentee Ballot today. The election was held May 2nd. The Absentee ballot was post marked May 20th. And here it is June 1st. It was mailed by Staff Sgt. E. D. Parrish and comes from overseas. He votes in the Fourth Precinct. We do wish that it could have been turned in and counted. We feel that if anyone is entitled to a say in this Democracy, it is the boy who is offering his life every day for it.

Governor Sparks has named Miss Sibyl Pool Secretary of State to replace Howell Turner resigned. She is the first woman in the State to hold the office. We were just wondering if the Governor holds women in such high esteem why he has never chosen one for a mate.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haakew, D. D.

According to an old story there was an old man who never referred to himself, or heard his name called by any one else, without lifting his hat in respect to himself. The story was told on the old man to put him in bad light before his neighbors, but the underlying thought in his heart was not to be treated cheaply. A proper self-respect is fundamental. When a man lives so that he knows that he can be loved and trusted, he has a right to respect himself. When a soldier goes through this war and conducts himself in a manner so that he can respect himself, and when his girl friend or his young companion, conducts herself so that she can respect herself, when this war is over, each one has a right to tip the hat to themselves. The reason why some folks cannot tip their hats to themselves is because they know too much about them selves.

I saw a leafy tree standing in an open space. Its head was lifted high and its limbs spread out in all directions in beauty. I thought it to be a perfect queen of the forest, but when I passed to the other side of the tree, it was blazed and a dark hollow was in the very heart of it. The heart of the tree was dead, and of course its rich foliage must soon die. Did you know that there are many people in whom we are deceived. They appear beautiful and commendable from more than one angle, but when we draw a bit closer and view them all around, inside and out, often do we find the world in decay. No man can long hold a commendable attitude before the world when the heart is foul with sin.

The skilled artist was putting the last touches on his painting. The night before he had gone away into the dyes and had indulged his baser nature in the ways of sin. When the picture was done, to his great dismay, he saw that he had marred his paintings with the cloud that was in his soul when he was finishing it. Ruskin said, "Whatever faults an artist may have, he always reproduces them in his works." No man can break the commandments of God without doing himself an injustice. Also his work.

COMING HOME

SGT. WILLIAM MADDOX

Mr and Mrs W. L. Maddox have received word that their son, Sgt William C. Maddox is coming home after having completed his missions. He expects to arrive here about the first of June.

S-Sgt. and Mrs. Clarence Hardy from Craig Field, Selma, Ala., have been spending a fifteen day furlough here with his mother, Mrs. J. S. Hardy.

Cpl. and Mrs. Grady Williams have returned to Wyoming after having spent a few days here with parents and friends.

was given the position of mail carrier by the government. The mail bag was dropped at a station and this carrier would shoulder it and walk many miles to the place where the natives were living. One day he had an inspector to come his way, and together they walked over his beaten path. The road was so crooked until it astonished his visitor and he asked the Zulu why he had such a crooked path way. To that inquiry he replied, "Sir, when I was making this path, my bare feet were hunting for the soft places." That answer tells the truth why so many people have a crooked way of living, they are hunting the soft way of doing things.

There is a Greek epigram that tells of the stags all covered over with snow and ice, as they would come down to the brooks of the valley to have their clogged bodies made free from the ice burdens of the mountain side. They would wade into the stream and wait for the ice to melt, but the cold followed them and soon they were made fast in the ice of the stream. While held securely in this strange snare, the natives came and killed them for table use. No one who is burdened down with sin can hope to free himself from this burden by indulging in things of a less sinful nature. Sin in any form will snare and endanger... If you want to get away from the burden of sin, make it a rule to go up and not down.

In the early days of American life, the white people would build stockades out of large tree trunks to protect their families from the Indians. At the corner of the enclosure a tall tree trunk would be much higher than the others and on it there was an iron receptacle in which were pine-knots to be fired when the Indians attacked. One stockade was surrounded and the knots must be ignited so as to call for help. A brave youth volunteered to climb the pole and light the knots. This he did and help came but that youth fell dead with his body full of poisoned arrows. He died that others might live. That is what Christ did for me and for you.

BUILD RATS OUT WITH CONCRETE

Farms and food plants aren't the only hunting grounds frequented by rats. These slinking rodents are a serious health menace in towns and cities, too. It is well known that rats carry typhus germs and other deadly bacteria, besides destroying and contaminating tons of food every year.

Rats can be kept out of buildings by the use of concrete. And it's a lot cheaper to keep them out than to get them out.

Incidentally, buildings which are ratproof are usually proof against termites.

Improvements which safeguard food and protect health are most essential in wartime. Many concrete improvements require no critical materials—save transportation because the bulk of concrete materials is available locally.

Where They Are and How They Are

MISSING IN ACTION

LT. CECIL BLOW

Word reached Mrs. Cecil Blow here Tuesday that her husband was missing in action, somewhere over Burma.

Major John D. Eiland, Base Field operating Commander of William Field, Ariz., spent the night with his parents, Dr. and Mrs. John Eiland last week when Major Eiland was passing through the City on official business.

William B. Eiland, brother to Major Eiland is stationed at the same Field, as special instructor. He is on leave in Florida for two or three months. He also spent one night with his parents while passing through.

Pfc. Woodrow W. Miskelly, son of Mr. J. Miskelly of Jemison is among the boys at a North African Port who man the searchlights, which are one of the most spectacular of the defenses against enemy raiders.

Manning these search lights is a job that calls for great knowledge of defense against enemy aircraft. More crew, headed by a sergeant, is more or less, "on its own" during any action and with the sergeant rests the decision on how to use his lights.

Members of each searchlight crew are trained to use machine guns and are pretty good shots when it comes to defending themselves, says their commanding officer.

Ensign and Mrs. John M. Higgins are on their way home from Seattle, Washington, where Mrs. Higgins met her husband on his arrival from Active duty.

Billy Callen, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Callen, received his wings last Tuesday and was commissioned an Ensign in the Navy. He came home for five days with his parents and friends. Billy reported back to Lauderdale, Fla., Monday for further assignment.

Sgt. Cleveland Driver is home with his family and friends recuperating from an operation which he had while on the West Coast. After several weeks here he will return to Denver, Colorado where he will resume his duties.

Among those graduating from an intensive course of Machinists Mate School training at recent Service School exercises at Great Lakes, Ill., May 26, 1944, was George W. Wright, Jr., 34, husband of Mrs. Mary Wright of Jemison, Ala.

MISS MARTHA BANKS IS WED TO CAPT. SPEAKS

Miss Martha Vivien Banks, daughter of Dr and Mrs J. T. Banks, was married to Capt. John Speaks, son of Mr and Mrs L. A. Speaks of Clanton, Ala., Tuesday May 16th. The ceremony taking place in her home at 11 o'clock a. m., in the presence of relatives of the families.

Rev James L. Duncan, of Rome, Ga., performed the ceremony in front of an improvised altar of ferns and baskets with beautiful arrangements of lilies, gladioli and snap dragons. Braunched candelabra flanked either side. The candles were lighted by the bride's cousin, Miss Carolyn Duffy.

Miss Frances Oliver, a cousin, sang "Oh, Perfect Love," by Joseph Barnaby, accompanied by her mother, Mrs C. E. Oliver, who played "Hymns To Joy," from Beethoven's Seventh Symphony as the bridal march.

Miss Emily Blake, of Birmingham

Southern College, served her friend as maid of honor, while Rev Sam Fleming, of Atlanta, was best man to the groom. The bride's book was kept by Miss Edith Clark. The Bride was given in marriage by her father.

The ceremony was marked by beauty and simplicity. After the wedding, an informal reception was given in the home. The dining room was lovely with the bride's table appointed with centerpiece of daisies and lacy fern sprays, the three-tiered cake embossed in white and green which color scheme was noted in the refreshments. The punch bowl was banked with daisies, ivy and fern, and was served the guests with dainty sandwiches, individual cakes, mints and toasted nuts.

The bride and groom left immediately after the reception for a brief wedding trip, after which Mrs. Speaks will return to Birmingham Southern College, where she will receive her A. B. Degree in June. Capt. Speaks will report to San Diego the 29th. He was a student at Emory University prior to service and is among the heroes who took Guadalcanal.—Dadeville, Ala Record.

EDWARDS-McLEAN

The marriage of Miss Frances Edwards and James A. McLean of U. S. Army, took place at 9 o'clock Tuesday May 23, at the home of the bride's uncle Mr and Mrs E. E. Edwards, with the Rev J. I. Bice officiating. Mrs Ernest Wilson played the nuptial music. Miss Elizabeth Edwards was her sisters brides maid and Charles McLean, brother of the groom served as best man. The bride wore a navyblue afternoon dress. Her hat was of the same color, trimmed in gardenias and navy veil. White accessories completed her costume. Only members of the family witnessed the ceremony.

Singing Held At New Harmony Church, Lomax

The Chilton County Sacred Harp Singing Convention met at New Harmony the Primitive Baptist Church at Lomax last Sunday. It was a grand success throughout the day. Many thanks to everyone who helped in any way to make this day a success.

The Chairman sang the opening song and our morning prayer was offered by the pastor of the church, Elder J. B. Williams.

In the morning the following directed three songs each: G. W. Akers of Sylacauga; Elder J. B. Williams of Tallassee; T. C. Jackson of Sylacauga; J. W. Hayes and Mrs Era Culver of Mobile, Ala.

At 11 o'clock the pastor preached a wonderful sermon which was enjoyed very much.

At noon a beautiful table was spread out in the grove and there was plenty of dinner for all and some to carry back home.

We wish to thank one and all who helped in bringing out those nice baskets. The members at New Harmony Church appreciate this in their many friends. May the Lord bless you, everyone is our prayer.

The singing in the afternoon was really good. Seems like everyone did their part to make it a success.

The following directed: Ellie Shirley, Mrs Vester, M. Oaks, M. C. Jackson, J. R. Scott, Elder A. T. Davis, W. L. Jackson, Marlow Williams, Mrs Grady Jones, W. B. Cooper, Mrs Emmitt Jones, Mrs Ruth Henley, J. W. Hayes, Elder J. B. Williams, T. C. Jackson, Mrs Era Culver and G. W. Akers.

A song was sung in memory of Mr Stagon Knight. Also three songs were sung by Mr W. L. Sanders for Arnold Jackson who is in the Army stationed at Kelly Field, Texas. Arnold is the younger brother of all these Jackson singers. Sons of the late T. J. Jackson, who before them was a true lover of these dear old songs.

A song was sung for Vester M. Oaks, who is also in the Army, now stationed at Camp Adair, Oregon. This song was sung by the request of his wife and it was truly a pleasure of this Class to sing these songs for the ones who are in the army and was not permitted to attend the Convention.

Mr and Mrs Oscar Davenport all attended the singing at Mars Hill Sunday afternoon. Bryce Rotenberg is visiting his sister Mrs A. E. Nettlemen in Birmingham. Ira Kelly of South Alabama visited his family this week-end.

Reunion In Honor Of 84th Birthday

Mr. W. W. Kliner, of Clanton, celebrated his 84th birthday last Sunday by having a reunion of all the family. Many friends also attended the picnic dinner in Mr. Kliner's honor.

By mid-morning, all the family had gathered and at noon the picnic was spread under the large oaks in the front lawn of the Kliner home. A two-tiered cake with twenty-one candles was the center of the picnic table.

Later in the afternoon presents were presented and pictures of the group were made. Games were held and old friendships were renewed.

Those in the family who attended the birthday celebration were:

Mr and Mrs W. E. Broadhead and daughter, Mrs Walter Prescott; Mr and Mrs E. L. Kliner all of Birmingham.

Mrs E. V. Buston and son Ray; Mr and Mrs O. P. Kliner and sons, Chas and Joe Phillips; Mr and Mrs C. C. Kliner and sons, B. F. and Marcus and daughter Betty Joe; Mr and Mr. W. H. Kliner and daughters, Carolyn Donnie and Emily; Mr and Mrs Wilton Dickinson and daughter, Caroline, all of Clanton.

Mr and Mrs Harold Kliner of Selma, Mr and Mrs K. V. Kliner and daughter Elverna and son Kent, Jr., of Opelika; Mrs Gertrude Pounds and granddaughter, Elaine Marlow, and Mr and Mrs R. A. Kliner, and daughters, Jackie and Sandra all of Gadsden.

Friends who attended were: Mr and Mrs Pat Hamilton, Mrs Olga Martin, Miss Patty Jean Broadhead, Mr and Mrs John Cherry and Bro. Ruben Bearden, all of Clanton, and Corp. Long of Opelika.

All of the family were present except for three grandsons who are in the armed forces: Van Buston and Carl Pounds, both of the Army Air Corps and LaVern Kliner who is now in the Southwest Pacific, serving with the Marine Corps. A Fourth grandson who was not present was Lynn Kliner, Jr., who is attending Riverside Military Academy in Ga.

Anzio Forces Push Toward Rome; Approve Simplified Income Tax; Lend-Lease Hits 24 Billion Mark

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Italy—U. S. engineers clear road under railroad trestle near Itri in Italian drive.

EUROPE: Rome Goal

In the greatest single Allied blow of World War II, the U. S. Fifth and British Eighth armies sought the annihilation of German Field Marshal Kesselring's 17 divisions below Rome in the historic fight for the Eternal City.

Even as U. S. and British troops struck out from the Anzio beachhead to press Nazi forces there against other enemy units fighting desperately to the south, thousands of Allied bombs thundered over western Europe to continue the non-stop aerial offensive against the Germans' invasion defenses and communication lines.

At no other time during World War II has the fighting been more bitter than below Rome, where Allied aircraft, commanding the skies, joined with artillery to blast German defenses built in the rolling terrain, and infantry edged forward behind the belching fire of heavy tanks. With their backs to the wall, the Nazis struck back viciously, contesting every foot of ground.

SUPREME COURT:

Upholds OPA

Because illegal sales of rationed goods constitute an inefficient and extravagant distribution of scarce materials vital to the war effort, the President acting through OPA has the right to withhold such goods from dealers or retailers violating the price agency's regulations, the Supreme court ruled.

However, the court pointed out, the OPA cannot revoke a dealer or retailer's license to sell merchandise in punishment for breaking the price agency's rules, since the law specifically provides fines and imprisonment for such actions.

The President's authority to withhold goods from OPA violators who promote unequal distribution, derives from the second war powers act giving him the right to allocate material for the fight against the war effort, the Supreme court said.

LEND-LEASE:

Tops 24 Billion

Equipped through lend-lease, fighting men from many nations have taken their places beside U. S. Doughboys in the fight against the common enemy, President Roosevelt declared in his 15th report on lend-lease operations.

During the first 60 days of this year, the report showed, more than 2,100 planes, almost 2,000 tanks, and more than 60,000 other military vehicles were sent abroad under lend-lease to use in coming offensives.

INCOME TAX:

O. K. Simplification

Following the collapse of the opposition of Sen. Langer (N. D.) to quick passage of the income tax simplification bill, the senate approved the bill and then sent it back to the house for concurrence of minor changes.

Drawn up after the nation's taxpayers' hair-raising experience following last year's forms, the new simplification bill eliminates the necessity of 30,000,000 persons earning up to $5,000 annually to make formal returns, since their full liability will be taken through pay-as-you-go.

In addition, 10,000,000 other persons with incomes over $5,000 annually will be able to file simpler forms.

Although the 3 per cent victory tax will be scrapped when the new law goes into effect next March 15, rates were readjusted to make up for its elimination and keep payments at about the 1943 level.

PACIFIC:

Stilwell Advances

Checked by the determined stand of British and native forces in the Imphal-Kohima border region of India, the Japanese reportedly reinforced their troops in the area for a resumption of activity aimed at the Assam-Bengal railroad, feeding Lieut. Gen. Joseph Stilwell's U. S. and Chinese forces hacking out a supply route to southwestern China through northern Burma.

While General Stilwell's troops drove from the west, Chinese forces advanced from the east in an effort to hook up the two ends of the new supply road. Torrential seasonal rains slowed up General Stilwell's drive, however, after delays caused by the need to ferret stubborn Japanese squads from tangled jungle defenses.

In the Southwest Pacific, Doughboys expended their hold on Dutch New Guinea, while U. S. airplanes ranged far to the west to bombard Japanese bases on islands guarding the approaches to the Philippines and India. Remnants of enemy forces in the strategic Marshall Islands also came under the bomb-sights of U. S. army and navy fliers.

U. S. ECONOMY:

Groups Agree

Meeting in New York at the invitation of the National Association of Manufacturers, 21 major organizations representing agriculture, labor, business and finance drew up a five-point program for a U. S. at war and peace.

For a U. S. still at war, the assembly recommended the prompt settlement of cancelled war contracts to provide business with funds for future operations, and, it also went on record for an orderly disposal of surplus goods and materials now to prevent the threat of glutted markets after the war.

For a U. S. returned to peace, the assembly asked for (1) congressional rather than executive direction over the reconversion program; (2) removal of the interests of agriculture, labor and business from mutual prosperity and preserve private initiative.

MISCELLANY

JUMPING FROGS: With a record-breaking leap of 16 feet, 2 inches, a yellow-spotted frog named Magno won the annual contest held in Calaveras county, California. The curious "derby" is an observance of Mark Twain's story, "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County." About 100 frogs were entered in the dusty ring, and a crowd of 5,000 attended.

CLOTHING:

Cut Lines

Buyers crowding Chicago's Merchandise Mart for the fall and winter women's, children's and infants' wear market found fewer lines but better quality woolsens in wider color ranges.

With demand exceeding production and the labor situation still critical, manufacturers reduced the number of their lines, and then shortened these remaining lines to meet basic retail requirements.

With an easing of limitations on black, a better range of colors was promised, and more all-wools and new wools were included in medium and low-priced lines.

Prices Rise

After a year-long swing upward, clothing prices were arrested in April, but not until some items had risen almost 100 per cent, the U. S. bureau of labor statistics reported.

Pointing out that prices in certain stores have advanced even above the national average, the BLS said that during the last year, percale house dresses rose up 23 per cent, men's shirts 18 per cent, women's cotton nightgowns 16 per cent, and women's spring coats 14 per cent.

Although rises in clothing costs as a whole showed only a fractional gain in April, the BLS said, appreciable gains were registered in women's inexpensive rayon dresses, percale house dresses, girdles, men's and women's felt hats and business shirts. Some increases in shoes and men's work clothing also were noted.

CIVIL RIGHTS:

Protection Affirmed

The matter of obtaining evidence against an individual cannot be accomplished by denying the civil rights of that individual as guaranteed by the Constitution, Federal Judge John P. Barnes ruled in the government's treason case against Mr. and Mrs. Hans Haupt at Chicago.

Basing his stand on a Supreme court decision, Judge Barnes ruled that the FBI could not go through the Haupts' flat without a search warrant in quest of evidence to discover whether they had harbored their son, Herbert, a Nazi spy, who was later executed. As a result, Judge Barnes dismissed as evidence clothing and money uncovered by the FBI during the investigation.

Although the FBI showed that the Haupts signed papers waiving their rights against unwarranted search, Judge Barnes said that the Haupts' own testimony indicated they did not know what they were signing.

The Haupts now are standing retrial following reversal of a previous conviction.

WAR FINANCE:

Fitted to Needs

Money no longer stands in the way of nations producing to capacity where natural resources and manpower are available, the National Bureau of Economic Research concluded in a study of Germany's prewar finance.

Seemingly reversing the orthodox conception of finance, wartime activities of all belligerent nations have proved that if a country has material and workers both can be employed to capacity, and money merely is adjusted to their use, instead of the old principle of adjusting them to the availability of money.

At about 5 billion dollars before Hitler's ascent to power in 1933, Germany's national debt now approximates about 80 billion dollars, with borrowings chiefly made from banks and savings institutions. Revenue totals above 50 per cent of national income, the reporting agency declared, compared with the prewar figure of between 30 and 40 per cent.

Proud Papa

To Lieut. Gen. James Doolittle, left, chieftain of the U. S. Eighth air force, came that moment which generals dream about—the decoration of a son for meritorious service. Here General Doolittle is shown awarding his son, Capt. James Jr., the Distinguished Flying Cross for action in the European theater.

Said Gen. Jimmy Sr.: "This makes me very proud, Son."

ICELAND

Following the action of its parliament in renouncing the treaty which tied it to Denmark, the people of Iceland went to the polls to formally make the move and thus end a relationship of over 500 years.

Iceland's action came with Denmark under occupation of German forces, and was accomplished after a rejection of Danish King Christian X's plea to withhold action on the severance until after the war, when any movement could be undertaken by mutual agreement.

Tulagi Native Makes

A Trade With A Yank

HUMBOLDT, IOWA. — Corp. Richard Shlievert, home from the southwest Pacific, relates this merchandising sidelight: An American soldier at Tulagi carved a pipe and sold it to a native for $15. The native displayed it to a second American who gladly paid $75 for it and who still thinks he has a rare piece of native handicraft.

Hunt Graves of Yanks in Tunisia

Band Prowls in Mined Area To Recover Bodies.

GAFSA, TUNISIA. — A grim little band of American troops has been prowling through the mined and body-trapped Tunisian hills to locate isolated graves of doughboys who were buried hastily on the battlefield.

The bodies are being transferred to ever-growing American military cemeteries sprinkled across Tunisia. Exploding mines have wounded several of the searchers, but they have brought in scores of bodies that otherwise might never have been recovered.

"It's easy enough to locate the plainly marked graves," said one of the graves registration workers, Sgt. Donald McHenry, an actor from New York City. "But a lot of Americans were buried by Arabs who stripped their bodies of their clothes before burial. The Arabs didn't mark the graves — and don't like to tell where they placed the bodies."

McHenry, however, has won the Arabs' confidence by giving them cigarettes and candy and by doing his best to act on friendly chats in pidgin French.

"Finally an Arab will admit he knows where one American is buried," said McHenry, "but when we go to the burial place, there will be several bodies. And when an Arab is convinced that I'm not going to shoot him for stealing, he suddenly 'remembers' where there are other graves."

Although the Arabs steal a soldier's clothes, they seldom take his "dog tags," which carry his own name and that of his next of kin.

Women Now Head Family

In 5 Million U. S. Homes

WASHINGTON. — Women "wore the pants" in 5,302,940 of America's 35,088,840 families even before the war took fathers, a survey based on the 1940 census and made public by the U. S. census bureau showed.

In 1,909,905 cases, the women family heads themselves constituted their entire family, but were nevertheless counted as one-person families and accordingly the heads of those families.

The survey showed that 3,326,060 of the women family heads were widowed; 393,520 divorced, and 898,340 single.

Housing shortages by 1940 had put lodgers in 2,853,560 of the nation's total households, the survey showed.

'Jettisons' His Bombs

On a German Airdrome

A UNITED STATES BOMBER BASE IN ENGLAND.—The Flying Fortress Spang Parts was forced to turn back from a raid on Berlin because of mechanical difficulties and was about ready to jettison its bombs in the channel.

Then Lieut. George H. Nye, 27, of Cornhill, Calif., but bombardier spied a Nazi airfield. Drawing a bead with the toe of his flying boot as a sight he dropped his bombs. They tumbled into the operational building beside the airdrome, sending up a big column of smoke.

German defenders of the field, caught by surprise, failed to take a single shot at the lone Fortress.

400-Year-Old Murders

Bared by Allied Bombs

LISBON.—A murder mystery 400 years old has been uncovered in the Italian city of Viterbo by Allied aerial bombs, according to a Rome dispatch in a copy of the Hamburger Fremdenblatt received here.

The dispatch said the bodies of two men and a woman, all with fractured skulls and in 16th century dress, were found in a sarcophagus of Cardinal Vice Domini when preparations were made to move it from a bomb-damaged church. The cardinal died in the 13th century.

A 16th century murderer, the dispatch added, apparently hid the bodies in the sarcophagus.

Yanks in India Have Good Malaria Record

PHILADELPHIA, PA. — Because of better general health and nutrition, American troops in India without malaria better than natives of malaria ridden regions, Lieut. Col. Thomas Fitz-Hugh, army medical corps, said at a meeting of the American College of Surgeons.

"I think that the reason for the disease has been less than one-tenth of 1 per cent, while among our Chinese allies it ran as high as 1 per cent," he said.

"I think this illustrates the benefits of the American background of general good health and better nutrition."

THE STORY TOLD FAR: Lieut. Col. Frank Kurts, pilot of a Zeros, tells of that fatal day when the Japs struck in the Philippines. Eight of his men were killed before he sheltered, and the many older Fortresses, was demolished on the ground. After escaping to Australia, what is left of the squadron flies to Java, where they go on many missions over the Philippines and Macassar Strait. Sgt. Boone, gunner, tells how Queens die. Nine Forts are out looking for Jap carriers when they make a flight of "P-40s" who fly with them. Too late they discover the forged stars. The "P-40s" Jap planes—open up at close range on the Forts and three Queens go down in flames.

CHAPTER XV

"When that chute cracked open, the jerk pitched him out of the harness head-first, and as the chute billowed loosely back the Japs saw him. We saw him dropping down with his clothes smoking, getting littler and littler. Oh, Heaven! I couldn't look any more.

"The plane was settling faster, in that steepening curve now, because it had all the wings, and we have seen a Fortress die in battle can tell you how they do it. They die like the men who fly them and fight in them would want them to die. They die like the great Queens they are. And Queens die proudly.

"Just then I heard our pilot Captain Strother over the interphones, telling Jim Worley, our bombardier, that he had opened a bomb-bay doors, and for the bombardier to go back and salvo all the bombs and the gas tanks carried there.

"Well, Jim Worley is about to obey, but just then he sees a Zero coming right in on us, and his gun there in the nose is the only one who can handle this attack, so he's got to stay on it.

"He gives her one burst and then starts to salvo his bombs and gas tanks, but there's a crashing sound, and the controls don't work, and doesn't realize a bullet has wrecked his controls—doesn't know what has happened.

"Then all of a sudden—Bang!—there's a hell of an explosion inside our plane, and dust, and the stink of gasoline. After seeing what had just happened to the other two planes, we thought it could mean only one thing. We were hit. And later on, ask me about that railroad spike.

"But somehow there were no flames, so we kept on pounding away at the Zero, swimming in it—it was the only thing to do. What had happened was that a bullet had smashed into our compressed-oxygen tank, and also cut a gasoline line, so that the gas was spilling all over the cabin, but we didn't know it then. Finally the tail gunner, seeing gas streaming along the plane's belly past him to trickle off the tip of the tail, guessed what had happened, and called to the rest of us over the interphones for God's sake not to smoke. With that cabin filled with pure oxygen and gasoline fumes, it would have been a bad idea. Don't ask me to ask me about the railroad spike.

"When we got back to our field and were telling about it, someone asked our tail gunner if he wasn't scared when, right after watching those other two go down in flames, that bullet burst our oxygen system with a big bang. 'No,' he said, 'there wasn't time to be scared. But if someone had pushed a railroad spike into my mouth, I would have bit the head of it off, clean and sharp.'

"The Flying Fortress was designed for the high skies, and for you keep her in her groove, for her crew sits in the safest place in the air and for her enemies the most deadly. We found this out not from any book, but we learned it that day in combat, which is learning it the hard way. And we hoped it wouldn't take too long for this lesson to percolate upstairs."

"On the way home," said Frank Kurts, "three of the remaining Forts hit a heavy afternoon rainstorm. Visibility and ceiling were low, and for hours they flew around the island of Madura, off the coast of Java, looking for a place to land. When gas was almost gone they decided to beach there, and when no one was killed, but two of the three were completely washed out on the seashore rocks—they set fire to the wreckage so the Japs couldn't find out anything about the planes. But Lieutenant Fred C. Cummings did a magnificent job of setting his plane down on the beach in the rain. He made two passes, looking at his gas in between, then squared away. I don't think he was a hero, but he was a little. I had the harbor-master's wrecking barge, with tools and Dutch engineers, on its way before daybreak. They were having a little trouble with the natives, but they were working against Jap parachutists, and our boys had to yell at them a password the Dutch had taught them to use if we were shot down: 'Kancha Kompani.' It means 'Our Army,' they explained to us.

"They worked a full day—shoring up the plane, building a base of logs and sand under it, clearing a runway strip. And then, in Java's regular afternoon rainstorm, in the early afternoon, they took us to the field. He explained he'd stripped the plane of everything he could un-screw to lighten it and then, turning the motors on full blast, had made a jump take-off from that little strip. He grabbed a sandwich and went on to in Malang.

"The air-raid alarm in Surabaya was going off regularly, sometimes three times a day, because the Java Sea was stiffer than an old sock with Jap carriers. Colonel Eubank was now faced with a real problem. The three main bases for our Forts were at Malang, Madiun and another town which was spelled Jokyakarta, but the American boys couldn't chew this one, so they all gave it up and everybody just called it Joekstrap.

"The Dutch had no system to detect planes coming in from over the sea. Their only warning system was a tiny island about seventy-five miles out. It had a radio, so Surabaya got fifteen minutes' notice and Malang about thirty.

"So what was the Colonel to do? Our P-40s were badly overworked, so when the alarm sounded, the Forts took to the air the Zeros might shoot them down, while if they stayed on the ground, the Jap bombers might blow them up. Never were we able to keep more than twelve planes in the air, even including reinforcements, for we were losing them about as fast as they were coming in, and a number were always under repair and therefore un-usable.

"Also we had some bad breaks in luck. One afternoon Lieutenant Ray Cox had his plane up on a high-alti-ty, and he was waiting for the Japs to show up. The plane was in a bad way, and he was waiting for the Japs to show up. The plane was in a bad way, and he was waiting for the Japs to show up.

"On our return we found that storm had moved on down Java and was squating on Malang Field. The turf was soaked into apple jelly, and our pilot did a wonderful job on the landing. We were worried, because we knew that a single round weight on the brakes would start our twenty-five tons sliding over that slippery field like it was the frozen surface of a pond.

"So to keep from piling up in a crash and losing the plane, we had to be careful. We had all our bombs aboard and couldn't dump them because they were precious, our pilot ground-looped her, so she would start sliding sideways in that track. Skidding along, he waited until he had revolved in a 180-degree turn and was sliding backward. Of course she would have crashed tail-first into the end of the field and blown up all of it, but he was able to stop her by gunning the motors. Even if the wheels couldn't bite into that slippery ground, the propellers could bite the air. It was neat.

"Another trick we had on Malang Field was the food. The mess was in charge of the Dutch. They served only one hot meal a day, and this was always at noon—usually hot soup with boiled beef and potatoes. But I only got to eat this hot noon meal three times—I was always out on missions, which should give some idea how busy we were.

"We had baskets of food for us to take up in the plane—pineapples, tropical fruit, and then sandwiches which were either a slab of cheese, or else raw bacon, in between two thick hunks of bread. We found this heavy stuff made gas in your intestines just as you got to high altitude going over the target, this gas swelled up, giving you the gripes. So we'd eat the fruit and throw the sandwiches away.

"Also Malay cooks don't know hot food. The breakfast soft-boiled eggs were always hard, and they'd bring out a No. 10 can of jam for a hundred and fifty men. What with getting two or three hours' sleep a night, and the weight—two of us lost sixteen pounds and Charlie lost twenty-three, and it wasn't scared off us, either.

"We all felt that with a decent meal we could do a lot more. So we made up our minds to sleep, at eight or nine o'clock at night we'd take the Dutch bus into town to a restaurant owned by a Javanese, which had a Dutch waitress who spoke as much as you got to high altitude. Americans have got to have red meat to fight on. Give them that and they'll manage to sleep when they can.

"The first night over the mess, but then the field was being bombed regularly. The mess sergeant had his kitchen blown up three times in a single day, and this didn't improve the favor of the Dutch. But the worst thing was, he'd got hold of three truckloads of Reigel pale beer, and had the cases neatly stacked when a Jap bomb scored a direct hit, leaving a crater more than three dozen bottles. I never saw men any madder than we were when we came out of our foxholes and word went around they had blown up our beer."

"The Dutch moved us over to Madiun Field," said the Bombardier, "and we had your troubles and some more besides. When we first arrived there were no P-40s, only a few aircraft guns for miles to keep the Zeros up. But we did have three D-model Fortresses out of commission we were using for spare parts. So Lieutenant McGee decided to get their guns, and Master Sergeant Silvers and I decided to mount them in holes around the airfield. At least these would keep off strafers.

Allies, Holding Offensive, Have Invasion Advantage

'Veritas,' Famed British Military Expert, Sees Nazis Handicapped by Being Pinned Inside Defense Circle.

Washington, D. C. What happens when "the coiled springs of action" are released in the cataclysm of invasion?

Europe is enveloped in the smoke and confusion of battle and only occasionally does this fog lift "showing the swaying forms of vast armies amid the screaming clatter of mechanized combat." It descends again "blotting out the view and leaving us uncertain as to the slights of the plan."

This is the observation of one of the keenest British military experts, "Veritas," whose privately circulated analyses are called to this country and eagerly scanned by persons most interested in the conflict now going on.

And Veritas reminds us that we can only maintain our sense of perspective and proportion if we keep carefully in mind the disadvantages which the military situation from the German standpoint. This, likewise, applies to the political aspects.

Well-known psychologist, Dr. Norman Maier of the University of Michigan who predicted the failure of the Munich appeasement program by demonstrating in advance that according to psychological principles, it could not succeed, recently made some interesting observations.

He said that Hitler would be liquidated and a revolution would take place in Germany as soon as the last of the "myths" created by German propagandists for the purpose of lulling the Germans into a false sense of security were exploded. The Germans, he explains, believe in the "myths" created by Hitler, and their frustration with aggression, when aggression is frustrated, nothing else will be left.

Revised Propaganda

This type of "security" propaganda being fed to the German people had to be revised recently. So much had been said about the strength of Nazi fortifications that the leaders realized the people had developed what they called a "Magnet mind."

In other words, they had become measured to the point of complacency. Therefore, the more recent propaganda foreshadowed successful landings by the Allies and played up the second line of defense.

For instance, we are told that the city of Lyons was fortified to resist operations in case it became the center of the conflict (Lyons is 200 miles inland).

Thus, the effort was made to preserve the myth of security up to the last moment. As to the possibility of revolution before desperation seizes the Germans, that is slight.

It is probable that the Germans might not be so sure of their strength; but it is doubtful if anything short of the sheer desperation following defeat will turn them against the guns of the black ships.

A Swiss who returned from Berlin just before the day and night bombing of Germany began, said:

"There can be no thought of revolution. The Gestapo and the SS are too powerful for that."

He recited this incident:

"An Italian worker who was passing through the Friederichstrasse was just about to pick up (after the bombing of a cigarette factory) one of the many boxes of cigarettes lying around on the ground. Nearby was a young SS man armed with an automatic pistol."

"I saw him, but he took aim and shot the Italian down."

This is said to be a typical incident and the Swiss declared that a German woman who drops her pocketbook does not dare to stoop over and pick it up.

The Military Aspects

The military aspects to this very different matter. The great strength of German strategy built on "interior lines" has been turned to a weakness. A nation on the offensive who can attack from a number of points at any point it chooses along the perimeter of the territory it controls has a great advantage.

Its lines are short, they are protected, they are covered by the center of gravity, like the radii of a circle. The opposing power must laboriously follow the circumference—witness the supply lines from the Allies to Russia which have to sweep around all of Europe to Murnansk or all around Africa to the Middle East.

But interior lines become a weakness when a nation goes on the defensive. As a matter of fact, General von Clausewitz, who wrote one of the most authoritative books on strategy, said:

"When you have to go on the defensive, it is too late to go on the offensive."

Veritas comments on the position of the enemy in the present situation as follows:

The strategic position of the Allies, coupled with their superiority in manpower, air power and amount of equipment, gives them a decided advantage.

Through the fog of the battle, the occasional glimpses we catch must be interpreted in the light of these fundamentals.

Training for Farmers

Recently, the Office of Defense Transportation announced that public vocational training schools in 190 cities throughout the country were turning over to the automotive industry a "constantly increasing number of workers trained in one of more phases of automotive industry."

The United States Office of Education is sponsoring the automotive workers training program. They are trying to help fill the gap in automotive maintenance personnel caused by the war.

But what many people do not realize is that the complete courses that directly touch the farm. Congress appropriated $12,500,000 for the food production war training program which the Office of Education administers.

These courses are conducted both out-of-school and in-school programs have now been removed and all courses are now offered to urban as well as rural persons.

Twenty-two courses are being offered in the vocational agriculture department, scattered widely throughout the entire country," says Mr. Spanton, "have available on the local school ground a well-equipped farm building, and the courses in farm machinery repair are given to farmers and where, at the same time, their much-needed farm machinery and equipment can be and is being actually overhauled and repaired."

William T. Spanton, chief of the division of vocational agriculture, says he believes that on a dollar-for-dollar basis, no appropriations made by congress to stimulate increased food production have contributed more to this end than these courses of the appropriations already made to the U. S. Office of Education for these specific vocational training programs.

"Practically all of our 8,000 local departments of vocational agriculture, scattered widely throughout the entire country," says Mr. Spanton, "have available on the local school ground a well-equipped farm building, and the courses in farm machinery repair are given to farmers and where, at the same time, their much-needed farm machinery and equipment can be and is being actually overhauled and repaired."

In Placing Veterans In Training

Alabama has the distinction of having the all states with the exception of California in placing veterans in training in connection with employment in war industry during the period of January 1 to April 1, 1944, according to figures compiled by the War Relocation Commission Headquarters in Washington and just received by Ernest L. Marbury, State Relocation Director.

The total number of veterans on Alabama War Relocation courses during the period of January 1 to April 1, 1944, was 285. In this group, 285 veterans were placed in training in connection with employment in war industry during the period of January 1 to April 1, 1944, according to figures compiled by the War Relocation Commission Headquarters in Washington and just received by Ernest L. Marbury, State Relocation Director.

These veterans constitute the first group of "Class A" veterans of this war to be placed in training after their war service.

Of the 285 veterans enrolled, 2,332 were placed in training in connection with employment in war industry during the period of January 1 to April 1, 1944, according to figures compiled by the War Relocation Commission Headquarters in Washington and just received by Ernest L. Marbury, State Relocation Director.

These veterans constitute the first group of "Class A" veterans of this war to be placed in training after their war service.

SHIELD EXPERT HERE

H. M. SHEVNAN, widely known expert of Chicago, will personally be at Jefferson Davis Hotel, Montgomery, Friday and Saturday, only, June 9-10, from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M.

Mr. Shevnan says: The Zoetich Shield is a tremendous improvement over all former methods, effecting immediate results. It will not only hold the rupture perfectly but increase the circulation, strengthens the weakened parts, thereby closing the opening in ten days on the average case, regardless of heavy lifting, straining or any position the body may assume no matter the size or location. A nationally known scientific method. No under straps or cumbersome arrangements and absolutely no medicines or medical treatments.

Mr. Shevnan will be glad to demonstrate without charge. Add. 6509 N. Artesian Ave., Chicago. Large incisional Hernia or rupture following surgical operation especially solicited.

Giant Terracing

Program Planned

Auburn, Ala. -- The Extension Service, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and the Agricultural Adjustment Agency have launched a program to help Alabama farmers terrace 1,000,000 acres of land this fall and winter.

Under the plan the terraces will be constructed by tractor owners on their own farms and those of their neighbors. They will receive conservation payments from the Agricultural Adjustment Agency for doing the work.

Preparatory to actually doing the terracing this fall and winter, terracing schools and demonstrations are being conducted throughout the state by Extension Service and AAA employees. District terracing schools have been held throughout Alabama. County terracing demonstrations are now being conducted in each county. Present indications are that from 10 to 75 tractor owners in each county will build terraces this fall and winter. The terraces will be constructed with regular farm tractors and tractor equipment.

The program is being directed by J. B. Wilson, Agricultural Engineer of the Alabama Extension Service. He is being assisted by Extension Service and AAA district agents. In the counties, the program is being conducted by the County Agents and AAA Administrators. The AAA is employing a terracing supervisor to supervise the work in each county.

Tractor owners, machinery dealers, farmers and agricultural workers throughout the State are enthusiastic over the program.

Throughout the State are enthusiastic over the program.

What a 4-H Club Daughter Taught a "War Worker" Father

"MY DAUGHTER HELEN came home the other day with the nicest dress she's ever had. She made it herself, as a 4-H Club project. I was mighty proud, and told her so."

"Do you know what this represents?" she asked with a twinkle in her eye. It represents $18.75 I didn't have to pay out of my egg money, and therefore it means another War Bond toward going to school."

"She taught me a lesson, all right. Guess I'd been thinking too much about the things that can't be done today, instead of all the things that can."

It's our part in this fight to keep the home front going with as little spending as possible, so that most of the country's money and productive strength can go into planes, ships and guns to win the war.

For instance, you can invest in War Bonds the money you would normally be paying out for new machinery—machinery you can't get today. Then you'll be ready for the day when new equipment will be on the market again.

War Bonds thus serve a double purpose. Today they buy "fighting tools" for our boys; Tomorrow they will help to "re-tool" the farm.

Thousands of owners and tenants on farms and ranches all over the country are already salting down their money in War Bonds against their future needs. Join them. Put every dollar you can spare into your future. Do it with War Bonds!

YOU NEVER GET LESS THAN YOU LEND! And you can get 3 1/2 more than you invest. When held 10 years, Series E War Bonds yield 2.9% interest compounded semi-annually. You get back $4 for every $3.

Of course, no one should cash a Bond unless he has to; but in an emergency comes along, Uncle Sam will redeem them in cash—at full purchase price—any time after you've held them 60 days. BUY WAR BONDS!

FACTS ABOUT WAR BONDS (Series E)

STATE READY FOR DRIVE—Thousands of war bond workers in Alabama have reported "READY" for the Fifth War Loan Drive which opens June 12.

State To "Hit The Beach" June 12th At 11:00 A. M.

"Meet The Challenge" Will Be Battle Cry As Alabama Begins All-Out Drive For $102,000,000 5th War Loan Quota.

Alabama will "Hit The Beach" at 11 a. m. Monday, June 12 for its own particular "D-Day" attack—the opening of the Fifth War Loan Drive.

After weeks of intensive organization all counties have reported "READY" to State War Finance Chairman Ed Leigh McMillan of Browning.

Seeking a quota of $102,000,000, and with "Meet The Challenge" as their battle cry, these county organizations will begin their house-to-house, farm-to-farm, bench-to-bench solicitation after listening to a statewide radio presentation, "More Than Before."

This program, the story of how Alabama's dollars march into the front line battles of the world, will be carried by radio stations WSGN, Birmingham; WJFO, Mobile; WBHP, Huntsville; WAGF, Dothan; WBBB, Selma; WMSL, Decatur; WSFA, Montgomery; WJRD, Tuscaloosa; WHMA, Anniston; WERC, Birmingham; WAPI, Birmingham; WLAY, Sheffield; WALA, Mobile; WULD, Bessemer and other stations to be announced.

Working with the county war bond groups in their all-out effort will be hundreds of service men from the army installations of the state and area.

Paratroopers from Fort Benning, chemical warfare units from Camp Sibert, big guns from Fort McClellan, equipment units from Napier and Brookley Fields and Camp Rucker, bands from Gunter, Maxwell, Craig and Courtland Fields and veterans from the fighting fronts will all take part in the all-out drive to put idle dollars actively behind the men on the battle fronts.

Calling the June 12 drive a home front "Hit The Beach" attack, State War Finance Chairman McMillan has called upon every man, woman and child in the state to be "ready" to do their part.

"Thousands of volunteers are ready to go out and sell the Fifth War Loan quota," Mr. McMillan said.

"It is the duty of the man, woman and children of the state to be ready to buy those bonds . . . buy more than they have ever bought before."

"Every bond that is bought here is a ticket for some mother's son, some father's fighting boy to come home."

"It is now or never for Alabamians, for if we do not make possible the sinews of war . . . sinews that must be bought with American dollars . . . our fighting men cannot win the beachhead battles that are to come . . . there can be no final victory . . . no lasting peace."

"I urge every Alabamian to meet the challenge of the Fifth War Loan . . . a challenge to do our home front best . . . to join the Fighting Fifth . . . to hit the beach at 11 a. m. June 12 . . . for B-Day victory over here, and a D-Day victory over there."

Sacred Harp And Christian Harmony Singing At Mt. Zion

The Harp and Harmony singers met at Mt. Zion Church last Sunday June 4th. Mr. A. A. Jackson, president of the Sacred Harp Convention, was elected Chairman for the day. The opening song was sung by the Chair and prayer was offered by J. W. Hayes.

The Chair appointed the following committee: T. C. Jackson of Sylacauga, J. H. Gaines of Clanton and Joe Cobb of Jemison.

Directors for the day were as follows: W. L. Jackson, J. W. Hayes, Mrs. Altamie Jones, G. W. Akers of Sylacauga, M. C. Jackson, J. H. Gaines, Mrs. Flora Oaks, W. L. Sanders, E. A. Shirley, T. C. Jackson of Sylacauga, A. A. Jackson, Mrs. Gaines and Mr. Joe Cobb.

The Memorial lesson was sung by E. A. Shirley and T. C. Jackson.

One song was sung in memory of J. H. Willoughby who was a great lover of the old music. Walter Gordon of Calera, Ala., who is in the service somewhere in England had one song dedicated to him.

Other songs were dedicated to the boys in service.

A bountiful dinner was served and enjoyed by all.

This was a great day for all who attended.

The old book singers solicit the support of all singers and lovers of the old music.

MAPLEVILLE BAPTIST WMS HOLDS MEETING

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Mapleville Baptist Church held its regular fifth Monday social meeting, Monday May 29th at the church.

Programs were handed to the members as they entered the door which read as follows:

MAJOR AID CHARGED IN CIVIL SUIT

That Major Waldo E. Ord, former Plans and Training Officer of the Alabama State Guard, lost his temper and hurled a coffee cup with unerring accuracy and painful effect at a waitress in a local coffee shop, was charged in a suit recently filed in Montgomery circuit court. The waitress Mrs. Margaret Mancoke, charged that her arm was cut, bruised and lacerated by the heavy china cup allegedly thrown with great force by Ord, and it was necessary for her to have several stitches taken in it by a physician. She asked $5,000 damages from Ord in the suit. In addition to the civil suit she also swore out a warrant in the Court of Common Pleas, charging assault with a weapon.

A wire egg whip is the best piece of equipment for removing eggs, doughnuts, fritters, apples, etc. from hot fat.

LARGEST INVASION IN HISTORY

The Allied armies under the protection of 11,000 planes and with more than 4,000 ships landed on the French Coast Tuesday morning. Landing between Le Harve and Cherbourg the troops fought their way into Caen which is approximately 10 miles inland. Reports are Wednesday morning that American paratroopers had also landed in Rouen 41 miles inland.

Within one hour after hitting the beaches the Allies had won complete mastery of the skies over the landing area, and German air resistance failed to materialize.

Nazi broadcasters acknowledged that Allied tanks had cut several kilometers inland and that heavy fighting was going on around Caen. Caen is 115 miles from Paris on a direct railway line.

Radio reports were that casualties had been light among the air-borne troops who spearheaded the invasion, dropping behind the German lines. The wounded were already reaching hospitals in England late Tuesday afternoon. More than 20,000 parachute troops participated in the invasion.

THE INVASION AT A GLANCE

(From Montgomery Advertiser)
Landings—Along 100 miles of Normandy coast between Cherbourg and Le Havre.

Progress—Masses of tanks, infantry move inland; Germans say beachhead 15 miles long, "several kilometers" deep south of Le Havre; reports parachute troops in Caen and Rouen, 41 miles from coast; Prime Minister Churchill, Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery pleased with advance; President Roosevelt says it's "up to schedule."

Casualties—Light on beaches; naval casualties less than expected.

Weather—Wind blowing, barometer falling; supreme command worried.

Aerial—11,000 planes pulverize defenses; 1,000 troop transport planes, gliders carried thousands of paratroopers into France.

Naval—4,000 Allied warships pounded west wall, thousands of landing craft ferried troops; U. S. Battleship Nevada, two cruisers revealed among striking forces; early U. S. losses two destroyers, a landing ship.

PEDESTRIANS GUILTY IN MOST ACCIDENTS

A thorough study of accidents in which 231 pedestrians were killed or injured showed that the pedestrian is more often at fault than the driver, according to Director Van Buren Gilbert of the Department of Public Safety. He pointed out that few pedestrians realize the vast difference between walking speeds and vehicle speeds, which is such that while the man afoot takes one step and advances one yard, an auto driven at 30 miles an hour advances nine yards. Stepping into the roadway from behind parked cars or buses is another frequent accident. Pedestrian "casualties" were particularly heavy in Alabama during 1943, when, of a total of 502 persons killed in motor vehicle traffic accidents, 146 were pedestrians.

WILLIAM BENDIX, star of the Blue network's Sunday airshow, "The Life of Riley," and the movies' "The Hairy Ape," showed that he had lost none of his sales ability when he operated a booth recently at the bazaar for the new Birmingham hospital in St. Fernando Valley. Bendix's booth, which sold unrationed groceries, did more business than any other. "Nothin's strange about that," remarked William. "I sold groceries for a livin' long before I thought of becomin' an actor."

The jig-saw puzzle photos which Ann Miller sent to servicemen fans had an unexpected aftermath. "I got your photo," one corporal wrote the star of Columbia's "Battle-ship Blues," "but one of your parts is missing."

The formation of Bing Crosby Productions, Inc., just had to happen; it was one of the few fields left. Bing had made his name in pictures, radio, sports, phonograph records. He organized, at his own expense, entertainment units to tour army camps. He's chosen "The Great John L." the story of John L. Sullivan, as his first story. Frank Tuttle as his director, United Artists as releasing agent.

Like many another star, Gary Cooper has been bitten by the producer bug. He made known his yearning to produce movies while filming "Casanova Brown." International promptly signed him up on a dual producer-actor contract.

The new issue of the March of Time brings to the screen an exclusive story, "Underground Report," which shows how the people of Germany and their conquered victims are living. It is compiled from Nazi films recently captured in Europe, as well as from film footage smuggled out by the Underground.

Some servicemen overseas will see his baby for the first time when "Three's a Family" is released. Producer Sol Lesser intends giving a featured role in the comedy to a six-month-old child, preferably one who was born after his or her father sailed. It is Lesser's custom to send a 12-millimeter film abroad for the men to see before the picture is released here.

The most exclusive theater circuit in the world is that founded in Hollywood by Laraine Day; other members are Cary Grant, Deanna Durbin, Lou Costello, Alice Faye and Tyrone Power, who's non-active while in the service, of course. Each member has a theater and exhibits 16-mm. prints of movies in which he or she has appeared. Miss Day will soon be showing "That Hunter Girl."

The four Lily Pons and Andrew Keelchets are making through the Persia-Iran-Iraq area is expected to last from six to eight weeks. Miss Pons will sing the arias that we've all heard her do so often on the air, her husband will direct the soldier orchestras and will play piano duets with Carolyn Gary. Frank Versaet, the fourth member of the USO troupe, accompanies Miss Pons on the flute and also plays solos.

Anne Seymour, who stars as "Prudence Dane" in NBC's "A Woman of America," has just received her Stage Door Canteen pin for two years' service. She works in the kitchen, making coffee and maintains a production schedule of about 400 cups an hour.

Maurice Costello, father of those two beauties, Dolores and Helen, is appearing in "Heavenly Days," the Fibber McGee and Molly picture. All other movie stars owe him a lot; screen players are anonymous till he made Vitaphone star him.

ODDS AND ENDS—Anne Shirley celebrated the completion of her 40th screen year and the start of her 32nd year in pictures by giving a big party at the RKO studio, where she started as a baby actress. . . . If the voice of "Dietrich Kimble" in "When a Girl Marries" sounds familiar, it's because you've been hearing him as "Homer" in "The Aldrich Family." . . . Wallace Ford, who's been off the screen for two years, serves bread in the "O'Brien in 'Secret Command'." Pat's first producing venture. . . . The first eight roles as ally Alan Jones broadcast (CBS, Wednesday) are reserved for girls in the WAVES, WAC, SPARS and marines.

Let's Face Facts

Teamwork Solving Farm Truck Problem, Toughest Bottleneck
By BARROW LYONS
WNU Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C. How would you like to be responsible for moving, with too few trucks, more than half of which are over seven years old, and many driven by green drivers, one of the biggest crops the United States has ever produced?

That is the job assigned to Robert A. Hicks, chief of the farm vehicle section, ODT division of motor transport. He has to organize and bring into line the finest bunch of rugged individualists ever lined up in one group—the farmers and truckers of America.

There is just one thing that makes the job possible—the farmers and truckers know that if they don't use their trucks to best advantage, a large part of one of the greatest crops ever harvested won't get moved to market.

Here are some figures that pretty much speak for themselves:

In 1941 there were 1,583,000 trucks owned by farmers available for moving crops to market. Today the number is about 25 per cent less—about 1,200,000—and hundreds are going off the road every day due to old age and smash-ups. There are some 500,000 for-hire trucks also available, many of them running on worn-out tires.

Of the trucks now owned by farmers, 55 per cent—about 660,000—are more than seven years old, and about half of these are more than ten years old.

To organize the operation of these trucks, most of which are owned by individual farmers, 142 district offices were set up and 20,931 transportation advisory committees formed, involving 38,913 persons.

Working Better This Year

This organization working pretty well in most areas last year, although there was a good deal of grumbling, which was only natural. It is working better this year, and there is less grumbling because the necessity for cooperation is considerably greater and is generally recognized.

Everyone realizes this year why there is so great a shortage of trucks. Our army has prepared for the greatest invasion operation of all times. It knew that virtually any advance made on any front would have to be accompanied by heavy truck movements, for the enemy will tear up every bit of rail line he can as he retreats, and it takes time to repair railway beds, bridges, culverts and lay new track. So the army has taken virtually the entire output of new trucks for military purposes.

In 1941 there were 750,000 trucks produced for civilian use, of which number 456,000 replaced worn-out or obsolete equipment. When the United States entered the war, about 150,000 trucks in the hands of manufacturers or dealers were "frozen." These have been placed where there was greatest need, and now are all working. During 1942 and 1943, only 3,000 new trucks were turned out for civilian use. The program for 1944 calls for 36,000 trucks for civilian allocation, but most of these will be produced in the second half of the year.

If we get all that have been programmed this year, the total available for three years will be only 241,000 to replace a normal disappearance of 1,368,000 trucks.

That gives only the statistical picture. The more difficult operation has been to get a great many people, strong on managing their own affairs in their own way, to work together toward the common goal of winning the war.

Schedule on All Crops

The first move in this direction was to program crop-moving operations. Schedules have been set up in every area for important crops. For instance, through cooperative use of trucks, dairy farmers and creameries plan to save 56,000,000 truck miles in moving milk and cream. Duplication of routes has been almost eliminated. Fruit and vegetable crops for canning have required special planning.

Where perishable crops must be moved to canning factories, round-the-clock programs have been worked out, wherever canning facilities are large enough to take care of this traffic. In some instances, hours of waiting at both ends of the haul have been eliminated by careful planning.

When there are not enough trucks in one area to take care of the traffic, the committees study the problem to see how many can be diverted temporarily from other occupations. Trucks used for hauling lumber are large enough to take care of this traffic. In some instances, hours of waiting at both ends of the haul have been eliminated by careful planning.

Requisitioning of equipment is possible, but persuasion is generally effective.

THERE is a shortage of metal curtain rods, yet for two generations we have not seen such elaborate window treatments. The formal swags, cascades and jabots so dear to our grandmothers seem to be exactly right with the Victorian furniture that is gaining in popularity all the time.

Each piece of the draped valance shown here is cut separately. The diagram at the left gives the dimensions of the end jabots. The side swags cross in the middle and a center swag overlaps them. The measurements of this center swag are given here, but these will vary according to the space the swag is to fill. Each swag is cut bias at the ends and pleated and tacked over the pole, as shown at the lower left. The method of taking measurements is shown at the right.

Wedding Bells Bring Out Brides, Beauty and Gayety

Bride's Shower Cake is a delicate angel food frosted prettily with fresh strawberry icing, garnished with whole berries.

Here comes the bride! There's nothing so rare as a day in June, nothing so glamorous as a wedding, even in these days of frugal brides, quick-as-a-wink weddings, everything is made as nice as possible for this is the happiest day of her life.

Weddings should have beauty and gayety, even when purses are slim, for when the boys are doing their jobs in the far corners of the earth and the girls are left behind, they should have the one thing that keeps them going—a bundle of happy memories tied with a white satin bow.

So let the linens for the table be white and fresh smelling, the silver polished and gleaming. Take out your best china, yes, the kind that you use only for "best" because that's what a wedding is! Though the food be simple as it must necessarily be in these days of rationing and shortages, cook it well and serve it handsomely.

Save Used Fats!
Three kinds of repast are usually used for weddings. The first, a shower, precedes the wedding and should be light and very simple.

Bride's Shower Menu.
Molded Fruit Salad.
Tiny Cream Cheese Brown Bread.
Sandwiches.
Tiny Ham Sandwiches.
Bride's Shower Cake.
Coffee.

Molded Fruit Salad.
(Serves 6 to 8)
1 tablespoon gelatin
2 tablespoons cold water
1/2 cup boiling water
1/2 cup lemon juice
2 tablespoons sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup orange segments
1/2 cup seedless grapes
1/2 cup red cherries
1/2 cup black cherries

Soak gelatin in cold water and dissolve in hot water. Add lemon juice, sugar and salt. When mixture begins to harden, fold in fruit. Pour into mold and chill. Serve on lettuce with salad dressing into which whipped cream or chilled evaporated milk has been added.

Bride's Shower Cake.
1 1/2 cups egg whites (12 whites)
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cream of tartar
1 1/2 cups sugar
1 cup sifted cake flour
1/2 teaspoon almond extract
1/2 teaspoon vanilla

Place egg whites into large bowl, sprinkle salt and cream of tartar over them and mix together with several strokes of flat wire whisk. Sift sugar. Sift flour once, measure, add 1/2 of sugar and sift together 4 more times. Beat egg whites with whisk, using slow, gentle motion that keeps whisk beneath surface. Continue beating until whisk leaves faint line when drawn across surface. Continue beating until whisk leaves faint egg whites. Add remaining sugar gradually, beating as before, until texture is firm and even. Mixture begins to form slightly rounded surface when whisk faces when whisk is released. Do not overbeat. Add the flavoring. Remove whisk. Sift flour gradually over surface and fold in slowly and gently with a spoon, folding towards center of bowl and rotating both bowl and spoon. Keep spoon beneath surface of batter and fold until mixture is smooth (2 minutes). Turn into large (4 quart) ungreased tube pan. Bake in oven (350 degrees) over 30 minutes; then increase heat slightly (325 degrees) and continue baking 40 minutes longer. Remove from oven and invert pan on rack for at least 1 hour or until cold. Remove from pan. Let stand 12 hours or longer before cutting. Ice top and sides with Strawberry Icing.

4 cups sifted confectioners' sugar

Lynn Says
The Bride's Day: She's the center of attraction. Let everything work toward that end.

Flowers and linens for wedding repast are white. When there is a wedding cake let it be the primary decoration—in the center of the table.

For the family sit-down breakfast, the bride and groom sit together at the head of the table.

Dash of salt
1/4 cup fresh, crushed strawberries
2 teaspoons lemon juice (about)
Add sugar and salt to crushed fruit. Mix well. Then add lemon juice until of consistency to spread thinly on cake.

Buffet Breakfast.
Minted Grapefruit Juice
Chilled Grapefruit Pie Olives
Celery Curls
Sweet Pickles
Finger Rolls
Wedding Cake
Ice Cream
Coffee

A wedding breakfast is called breakfast no matter what time of day it is served. The simplest method of serving is from a well set buffet.

Chicken Pot Pie.
(Serves 6)

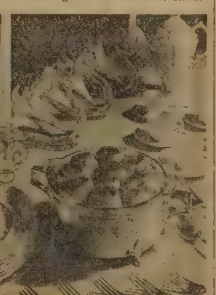

2 1/2 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca
1/4 teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
Dash of paprika
2 cups cooked, diced chicken
1 1/2 cups milk or chicken stock
2 tablespoons melted butter
6 to 8 unbaked baking powder biscuits

Combine tapioca with remaining ingredients in order given. Turn into greased casserole and bake in hot oven (425 degrees), stirring twice during first 10 minutes of baking. Place biscuits on top of chicken mixture, return to oven, and bake 12 to 15 minutes longer until biscuits are browned.

Light Reception.
Chicken Sandwiches
Lettuce Sandwiches
Salted Nuts
Wedding Cake
Coffee or Punch

Wedding Cake.
1 1/2 cups butter or other shortening
3 cups sugar
6 cups cake flour
3 tablespoons baking powder
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
2 cups milk
1 1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 teaspoon almond extract
6 egg whites

Thoroughly cream sugar and shortening. Sift together flour, baking powder and salt 3 times. Add alternately with milk, vanilla and almond extract, beating after each addition. Beat egg whites stiff but not dry and fold in. Place batter in 3 round, paper-lined tins, 10 1/2, 8 1/2 and 6 inches in diameter. Bake in a moderate (375-degree) oven 25 to 30 minutes. Cool and put together with frosting. Frost cake at once.

A wedding breakfast or supper to satisfy the immediate family may consist of chicken pot pie served in a shining casserole.

Save Used Fats!

Ornamental Butter Frosting.
1/4 cup butter
10 cups sifted confectioners' sugar
1/4 cup cream
4 unbeaten egg whites
3 teaspoons vanilla extract
1/2 teaspoon salt
Cream butter, add 4 cups sugar gradually, blending after each addition. Add alternately remaining sugar, cream and egg whites, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Add vanilla and salt. Spread frosting over top of two lower layers; place 3 tiers together and frost entire cake. With a pastry tube, use remaining frosting for decorations and rosettes.

PAUL PLEADS FOR A RUN-AWAY SLAVE

LESSON TEXT—Philemon 4-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God also in Christ forgave you.—Ephesians 4:32.

Brotherhood is one of those fine qualities or impulses of the soul of which men like to speak when all is fair and prosperous, and promptly forget in times of distress and struggle. That is just where Christianity shows forth at its best, for it is in the hour of need, sorrow, or affliction that real Christian brotherhood shows its depth and durability.

Paul was in prison when he wrote to Philemon. The one of whom he wrote, Onesimus, was a slave who had deserted his master and probably defrauded him (v. 18). He had been converted, and now was being sent back to his master. So we have three Christian men dealing with a very delicate matter, and providing a picture of brotherhood in action. We learn that it is—

I. Courteous (vv. 4-9).

After a fine spiritual salutation, Paul enters upon an appeal to Philemon which is a model of tact and courtesy. One could almost think that who think that being faithful to the Lord and true to His Word means being blunt and unkind, would learn of Paul.

First, he lets Philemon know of his prayerful interest in him. Paul had been praying for him, that's why he could say such a helpful word. Praying for our fellow man prepares us for genuine brotherly love.

Then he recognizes Philemon's goodness, and his effective testimony for Christ. This is an excellent approach to the making of a request, but be sure that it was not empty or hypocritical flattery. We do well to recognize the fine qualities of our Christian brother, and we could probably speak of them more than we do.

Then Paul was ready to make his request. See how nicely he does it. He skillfully reminds Philemon that he might make some demands, and especially in view of his age and his imprisonment. But he will not do so, rather he says, "I beseech thee." There is fine Christian courtesy.

II. Considerate (vv. 10-18).

Paul, the aged prisoner, had found in his new convert, Onesimus, a real helper. He would have liked to keep him. In fact, says he to Philemon, Onesimus could do for me the things you would want to do if you were here (v. 13).

Undoubtedly Paul could have been sure of the willingness of Philemon. He could have assumed that the request would be granted. And in any case, Philemon did not even know where Onesimus was, so why not keep him?

True Christian consideration respects the personal rights and the property rights of another. We must not assume, or demand, or put pressure on anyone (v. 14) to get what they have or to draw out their service.

Another expression of consideration is found in verses 15 and 16. Philemon had lost a heathen slave, now he is receiving back a Christian brother. No worker will give less in service, and no master will demand more, because the two are both Christians. We need to recognize that fact, for all too often men presume on their relationship as brethren. But the fact that they are Christians should make a great difference in their attitude toward one another.

III. Cooperative (vv. 17-21).

Partners share the benefits and the burdens of their joint enterprise. Partners in the gospel, like Paul and Philemon, shared not only spiritual blessings, but also the responsibilities. Paul was presenting such an item to Philemon in the return of Onesimus. Something had to be done about the debt of Onesimus, his failure as a servant. Paul says, "Charge it to me, your partner."

It has been pointed out that there is here a blessed example of the important doctrine of imputation, which is the "act of God whereby He accounts righteousness to the believer in Christ," because He "has borne the believer's sins in vindication of the law." So we note that verses 17 and 18 perfectly illustrate imputation.

Paul's promise "I will repay it" (v. 19) was the legal phraseology of a promissory note in his day. It was a bonafide partnership transaction, yet it was coupled with a reminder of indebtedness. Everything Philemon had and was he owed to Paul; but, says the latter, "I will not speak of that now." Consideration again, but open the door wide for Philemon's cooperation.

No right thinking person is content always to be on the receiving hand. The humblest recipient of favor or the smallest debtor feels the love of another wants to respond. The considerate friend will, therefore, not always insist on giving, but will graciously (like Paul) open the way for cooperation, for partnership.

FOLK & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Literally we have received more than a hundred pounds of 5th War material. That, roughly speaking, is more than was sent in all the other drives combined. As we have said many times before, we intend to do ALL that is possible in promoting this campaign. But won't some of you patriotic merchants and business men step forward and help in this endeavor? If the Treasury Department hadn't thought it was necessary and they hadn't known beyond a doubt that newspaper advertising paid dividends they would not have been making those expensive plates and costly Press Books. The advertising that they have failed to do is a product advertising campaign to provide a way to finance it. They are leaving that up to the weekly newspaper editor and the patriotic merchant and businessman. Are you going to do your share?

A story appearing in one of our dailies the past few days carried a story about negro soldiers "shooting up" a small Mississippi town. Upon questioning, it is reported, the Post Commander, Col. Ira A. Ryder said, "the incident is of minor importance" and did not need anything more about it. If this be true, higher authorities should investigate a certain Col. in the United States Army, who treats infraction of army rules and regulations so lightly. It matters not whether the soldiers were white, or black, or green, or purple, the idea is soldiers, or civil servants; don't ride through the streets of the United States firing their rifles at will. If this Colonel won't listen to the townspeople of Duck Hill, Miss., then he should be made to listen to the powers that be.

Word comes that Mrs. W. M. Polk, who has been confined to her home many months, is very much improved. We're glad. With all sincerity we wish for her continued strength to win her home life.

There's no use talking, juvenile delinquency begins in the home. Let's take the measure of your "teen age" pun. Where is he or she? Do you know? Are they busy in some worthwhile play or work, or they just "out somewhere"? Too many excuses are presented and published and argued for the actions of our children. It isn't the war. It isn't the times. It isn't anything but the parents and the juvenile. The whole responsibility of child delinquency goes back to one thing—one environment—the home. All the outside influence in the world will not correct the fault, if the fault is bred in the home.

Drove to Birmingham Monday with brother "Buck." Here's contemplating spending a while in Europe on a sight seeing tour. Of course Uncle Sam is going to pay all necessary expenses. He expects to have quite a time. According to what he tells us he hopes to contact several representatives of the German Government while there—and in the best places. This was probably his last trip home in a long time. We enjoyed his stay immensely. The wife, Mary Robinson Tucker and little daughter, Mary Kate, will come back to Clanton to reside for the duration. We wish "Buck" God speed and happy landing. And also a safe return.

A WAC went for a walk in the woods, and coming to a beautiful lake decided to go for a swim. She laid her clothes carefully on the ground and took a dip in the clear blue water. As she emerged she saw a Lt. coming down the path. Not having time to dress she quickly hid from him behind a tree. The officer approached, stopped and shouted, "Camouflage Company No. 2, dismissed." And all the trees marched back to camp.

Linens laid away for a long time should not be starched, but should be wrapped in fast-color blue paper to keep them from turning yellow.

one said that he was going to be a brick mason. Then he added, "When I deal with a man I want him to pay me what I am earned, and not slip into my hand anything that he has a mind to give." In other words the colored boy wanted to earn all that he had and he wanted to be paid for his services according to his value. Lots of people want God to be just a porter to them. They want to give to Him tips. I wonder if it would not be better for us to render the tithe unto God, rather than to drop in the tip. Which is it with you—Tithing or tipping?

There is a story told in a beautiful poem to the effect that when God made the birds that He made them without wings. They had an abundance of gorgeous feathers and their voices were crowded full of melody, but they could not fly. Then God laid wings upon the ground beside them and said, "Take these burdens and bear them." Without a note of murmur, the birds picked them up and folded them over their hearts and cheerfully struggled along with their load. Soon their wings grew fast to their breasts, and they spread them and with them they did fly. What they thought to be a burden, were changed into pinions and on them they did fly. Often do we groan and moan as we struggle along with our burdens, when if we would bear them with good cheer, they would turn into blessings.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

A little boy sitting next to a lady in church noticed that she did not have any money to go into the collection plate, and he was very much disturbed. The collector was approaching and still the lady had nothing to give. In desperation he slipped his coin into her hand and whispered into her ear, "Here lady, take my money and I will slip under the bench until he gets by." On saying this, under the seat he went. Such sensitive souls as this little boy is exceedingly rare. We see them in almost every service who can sit like a statue while the collection plate goes by.

It is said of the soldiers of a certain king in the olden days that they lost a battle by mistaking the shadows for the person of their enemies. Late in the afternoon the enemy approached on the top of a hill, so that the setting sun would fling their shadows on an embankment. Those soldiers saw the shadows moving toward them and they shot the shadows with their arrows. Then without warning the enemy leaped over the hill top and rushed the fort with a withering fire. A sad mistake had been made, when the shadow was taken for the real enemy. Our safety depends, not on striking the shadow made by the snake that strikes at us, but on hitting the snake. It is not always the influence of sin that should have our attention, but the sin itself. It is not the shadow, but the thing itself that counts.

I heard two negro boys talking over their future. One said, "I is gonna be a porter when I grows up." The other upon our lives.

I went out to the yard with a man who raised chicks for the market. The night before this man had put his chicks into a glass enclosure where they would be well protected. When we came near the brooders the little chicks were running to and fro, falling over each other trying to get out. The owner knew that it was not time for them to be out in the open and he left them there to peep and push as we went on our way. It was best for the biddies that the door remain shut. Thus are God's dealings with His children. Often are shut in and yet it seems so light and bright on the outside. We wonder why God does not remove the things that hold us back. God knows what is best for us and when we are ready for that best, the door is opened and we walk out into God's day light.

I stood by a skilled Physician who was about to begin a delicate operation on the ear of a patient. Before starting work he stood erect and in a reassuring way said to the patient, "I may hurt you, but I am not going to injure you, or your hearing." How often have we heard that same reassuring statement coming from the lips of the Great Physician. Often we may suffer under the skill and wisdom of God, but remember that God never injures us in His dealings with our soul. To be sure we are going to flinch but God is not going to injure us.

AT THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The regular second Sabbath services in this church at 11 A. M. and 8 P. M. The pastor expects to reach Clanton Saturday morning, and will be glad to know if there be any sickness among our people. Your pastor is among you to serve.

The theme for the morning service will be: The Christian Sabbath, much depends upon our attitude toward this day, and our willingness to keep it sacred; the evening theme will be: evangelistic in scope. The theme for our study in the Sabbath School will be, Paul Pleads for a Runaway Slave. A cordial welcome awaits all who will worship with us at any and all of these services.

EASTVIEW

There will be no preaching service at Eastview this week-end, but there will be the Fourth Sunday.

The Women's meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Esther Moore Saturday afternoon at 2:30.

Everyone is urged to go to Sunday School every Sunday at 10 A. M. Mr.

Tom Traywick is Sunday School Superintendent.

The Vacation Bible School will be held the week after the fourth Sunday of this month with Mr and Mrs. Dave Clark teaching it.

POPLAR SPRINGS

We met again over the week-end in two wonderful services. There were several visitors which were welcomed. There were lots from Refuge visiting here Sunday night. We enjoyed having them and invite them back any time they can come.

We also had Mr and Mrs E. S. Ford and son Lonnie from New Jersey with us. They are making their home in Birmingham now and we invite them back any time.

Everyone come back next Sunday and Sunday night and bring someone with you.

Keep praying for all of our boys and girls in service.

PROPERLY built and controlled electric fences may be a convenience and economy

electric fences improperly built or controlled often constitute a danger to person and property. We have never heard of an injury chargeable to a properly built and controlled electric fence, but there have been injuries caused by persons coming in contact with "home-made" electric fences. We don't like to discontinue service to a customer but we are unwilling to risk injury or property damage which may result from operation of an unsafe electric fence. Therefore if we find our service being used to operate an unsafe electric fence it will be necessary to discontinue it immediately. We believe that electric fence controllers carrying the label "Approved by National Board of Fire Underwriters" are safe.

If you use an electric fence be sure it's safe. We offer these suggestions:

1. Do not operate an electric fence without a standard controller.
2. Do not use any controller unless it bears the label "Approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters".
3. Warn your neighbors who are using unsafe electric fences.
4. Warn your children of any unsafe electric fences you know of.

Observe these precautions for your protection and for the protection of your neighbors.

Recipe—

Put 2 tablespoons fat into 2 cups self-rising flour. Beat together 1 egg, 3 tablespoons sugar and 1/2 cup milk. Combine with flour by stirring until smooth for about 1/2 minute. Then beat vigorously for 1/2 minute. Spread in a lightly greased 8" x 8" deep cake pan. Prepare a topping mixture by rubbing together 2 tablespoons fat, 2 tablespoons self-rising flour, 1/4 teaspoon cinnamon, 1/2 cup sugar, chopped nuts if available and sprinkle on the top of the batter. Bake in a hot oven, 400°, for 22 minutes. (All measurements are level.)

Whipped up in a jiffy
with self-rising flour

Company coming? Here's a tender, tasty morsel you can whip up in a jiffy. That's because the baking powder has already been carefully sifted and thoroughly mixed with our flour. Cuts mixing time in half... saves money, too. Yes, and that leavening we've added does wonders in the oven. Just try a sack today.

Where They Are and How They Are

MISSING IN ACTION

LT. MELVIN S. WEIL

1st Lt. Melvin S. Weil, Jr. son of Mr. and M. S. Weil, Sr., of Birmingham has been reported missing over Romania since May 5th. His parents were notified by the War Department. Lt. Weil enlisted in the U. S. Air Forces Oct. 1, 1941, and had been over seas 21 months. He is the grandson of Mrs J. H. Williams of Clanton.

Pfc. and Mrs George H. Tucker and little daughter from Camp Fannin, Texas, are here with relatives and friends for a few days.

Pvt Hance Wyatt, son of Mr and Mrs W. M. Wyatt of Clanton, Rt. 3, has been transferred from Camp Murphy, Fla., to Camp Crowder, Mo. He wishes his friends and relatives to write him. His address is: Pvt. Hance Wyatt, 34398031, Co. F. 847th Sig. Tng. Bn. Camp Crowder, Mo.

Sgt. Albert J. McKinnon, Jr. son of Mr Mrs A. J. McKinnon of Clanton is now overseas and has participated in a course designed to bridge the gap between training in the states on soldiering in an active theatre of war. At one of the Air Service Command Stations known as control depots, Sgt. McKinnon was carefully processed by classification experts who make certain that he was well fitted for the job assigned to him.

Security training, personal hygiene, a talk by a Special Service Officer informing him of facilities for healthful recreation and a lecture by the Chaplain are all in turn a part of the soldier's preparation for duties overseas.

His next station will be one from which America's fighting planes take off to smash the Nazi war machine.

Before entering the Army, he was employed as a Posting Clerk by E-I-DuPont of Tulsa, Oklahoma.

EM-3/C Charles Messer who has been serving some time over seas is here with friends for a few days. From here he will go to Tampa, Fla., where his parents Mr and Mrs C. D. Messer formerly of Clanton, now reside. Mr. Messer has a thirty-day leave. He says that he has been getting the Chilton County News every week and enjoyed it very much.

Pvt James W. Coburn enlisted in the Army Sept. 1, 1943, and since last March has been in England. He is the son of Mrs Maggie Coburn of Clanton. He would like for all his friends to write him the news from home. His address can be obtained at this office.

A letter comes from Cpl. Charles Simpson. He says he went to New York several times and has visited his father's brother who lives there. "That's all the news," he says, but we imagine there's more than that, only it won't do to tell at least through the newspaper.

Lt. Guy Higgins from Seattle, Wash. is home for 7 days with his mother. His brother, Ensign John M. Higgins who has been serving overseas for some time is also home on leave.

Isabella Wins Honors At State FFA Convention

(By Jesse Culp)
Second place honors in the state Future Farmer's of America's two top contests were carried away by the Isabella chapter in the Alabama state convention of that organization last week.

The Isabella chapter was judged second best in the state, exceeded only by Athens in the better chapter contest. These two were the best out of 207 chapters in Alabama.

The public speaking contest, described by spokesmen as the best in Alabama FFA history, was held Tuesday night in Langdon Hall. Five contestants were there, ready to defend the honor they had won in defeating the 1500 boys who were in the contest at the outset.

After considerable deliberation by the judges, the winner was announced as Jack Helms of Enterprise, Alabama who spoke on the subject, "Food Will Win the War." Second place was given to Jesse Culp of Isabella, whose topic was "Food for Freedom."

All of the contestants spoke some phase of the farmer's part in producing food for the war effort. They were, as a coincidence, placed in exactly the same order in which they spoke.

The prizes were as follows: first place, a $25 War Bond; second, $10 in War Stamps; third, fourth, and fifth places, $5 in War Stamps.

It was announced by the state reporter, Hansel Grooms of Isabella, that only eleven chapters in the state got all reports in complete and on time. Isabella was one of these.

Hershell Patterson, Judson Cummings, and Jesse Culp received state farmer degrees with 127 others in the state. Since the state FFA constitution limits presentation of these degrees, (highest awarded in the state), to only two per cent of the total membership, only 130 could receive them.

One agricultural instructor and FFA advisor in Chilton County—Mr H. H. Denson of Jemison was given the honorary state farmer degree. This degree is based on community service and general contribution to FFA work.

Although necessarily shortened by the war, the Alabama convention of the Future Farmers of America described as the best ever held in the state. Featured on the program was a talk by the first state president, Earl Dabson, who took up the gavel when the organization was born 14 years ago.

Also present was the president of the Alabama Future Homemakers of America, Miss Elizabeth Groover of Hartselle, Alabama, and several state FFA officers of the past.

Thad Salmon of Auburn was elected to wield the state president's gavel next year.

PRODUCE GOOD-QUALITY MILK AND AVOID WASTE

Good quality milk makes good quality food—Neither the farmer nor the Nation can afford to waste time, feed, and labor producing milk that cannot be used... Herds must be kept free from disease; sanitary methods of production and proper cooling are essential.

The 8 Point Program

1. Grow more legume hay, pasture, and grain.
2. Fertilize to increase quantity and quality of feed.
3. Feed to avoid summer milk slump.
4. Feed cows liberally during their dry period.
5. Keep as many cows as feed and labor permit.
6. Market more whole milk whenever possible.
7. Produce good-quality milk and avoid waste.
8. Breed for better herd replacements.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

German Army Retreats in Italy; FDR Discusses Foreign Policies; UAW President Sounds Warning

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Italy—Pummeled by shellfire, only tattered walls remained in the Italian village of Santa Maria Infante, as doughboys entered.

EUROPE:

Foe Retreats

Unable to hold against the Allied steamroller on the southeast Italian front, the 10th German army fell slowly back to the north over bombed roadways, while other enemy forces below Rome sought to prevent any U. S. break-through to the rear of the main body.

As the Allies slugged the Germans out of the vicinity of Rome in the bruising Italian campaign which saw the bag of enemy prisoners well above the 15,000 mark, U. S. and British bombers thundered over occupied Europe in their continuing destruction of Axis industry and communications, preparatory to the big invasion. In the east, the German air force struck at Russian reinforcements being assembled for an anticipated Red push in conjunction with the invasion.

No longer able to stand up and slug with the Allies on even terms, German Field Marshal Kesselring's chief concern seemed to be to pull back his army northward, under cover of costly delaying action in the rugged and mountainous terrain of the Italian peninsula.

FOREIGN POLICY:

FDR's Stand

With the GOP beginning to press the administration on foreign policy, President Roosevelt stole some of its thunder by an espousal of U. S. sovereignty and independence in postwar collaboration to keep the peace, much to the chagrin of the Republicans.

Mackinac Island declaration establishing the same principle. The President expressed this position at a press conference, which followed Secretary of State Cordell Hull's invitation to Great Britain, Russia and China to attend discussions on the nature of a postwar peace organization. According to the administration's conception, such an organization would be built around the four great powers, rather than around a combination of many states like the League of Nations, although the latter would be consulted.

Seeking to avoid the friction caused after the last war by President Wilson's presentation of a peace treaty without prior consideration by the senate, the administration's invitation to the other three Allied powers came only after consultations with members of the senate foreign relations committee, which laid down the principle that no commitments should be made on enforcing postwar peace until an opportunity has been presented to study the fairness of the terms.

AGRICULTURE:

Because of smaller feed stocks, the War Food administration reportedly is considering smaller meat goals for 1945 while maintaining the high level of field crops.

Because large reserves of feed have been eaten up and there is not a sufficient availability of land or manpower to expand feed production, WFA plans reportedly call for raising 95,000,000 hogs in 1945 as compared with about 100,000,000 this year, 700,000,000 head of poultry as compared with about 856,000,000 and 4,250,000,000 dozens of eggs as compared with about 4,600,000,000.

However, it was reported, wheat and corn acreage would remain almost the same as this year's, with wheat at 68,000,000 and corn at 103,000,000. At 119,000,000,000 pounds, milk production also would equal this year's output.

FERTILIZER PONDS

Fish grow bigger and faster when they can get plenty of the right food, just like any other living thing, scientists have found. An abundant growth of water plants which support the animal life on which fish feed, can be stimulated by putting fertilizers in ponds and lakes, it was found. Commercial preparations and minerals were used.

It was reported that fertilized ponds yielded 500 pounds of fish per acre of pond surface while unfertilized lakes gave up from 100 to 200.

AIRPLANE OUTPUT:

Nearing Peak

While the War Production board set up the mechanism for guiding conversion of wartime industry to civilian manufacture upon the cancellation of military contracts, the war and navy departments reportedly considered reduction in airplane output in 1945.

Indicating that the U. S.'s record-breaking airplane production will have reached its peak by this year, emphasis in 1945 reportedly will be on heavier bombing planes, with other features of the program centered on replacements and development of new types for particular fields.

Reports of the prospective trimming of airplane production dovetailed with WPB's reconversion studies, since 2 1/2 million workers presently are engaged in the airplane industry and any curtailment in output would seriously affect employment.

WOMEN'S APPAREL:

Shipments Assailed

Holding a seersucker dress in his hand, Rep. Hartley (N. J.) stood up in the house of representatives and declared that the garment was one of 6,000,000 to be shipped abroad under lend-lease and the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation administration while American women were unable to obtain clothing of comparable value.

Pointing to two other dresses which he said were the most expensive that could be purchased in New York, Rep. Hartley said: "The three dresses were inspected by the Hatch textile research bureau which reported the export garment has a thread count of 36 x 37.2 per square inch compared with 44.8 x 64.8 and 88 x 78 for the other two."

Rep. Hartley holding lend-lease dress, gave that could be purchased in New York, Rep. Hartley said.

Even inferior seersuckers no longer can be made for the American public under recent War Production board regulations, Rep. Hartley asserted.

TIRES:

More Released

With production schedules being advanced to attain a goal of 22,000,000 tires in 1944, Rubber Director Braden Dewey announced the release of 1,600,000 passenger tires for essential civilian driving during June, an increase of 200,000 over the May quota.

At the same time, Dewey authorized the release of 125,000 heavy-duty tires for essential trucking and 20,000 rear farm tractor and heavy implement tires during June.

Along with the availability of high grade comeback for recapping, the 22,000,000 new tires will fill the needs of all essential drivers during 1944, Dewey said, but he added that there was little prospect of "A" card holders sharing in the distribution.

Combining of the army, navy and air corps under a single department, and creation of a unified staff of various service officers under leadership of one officer who in turn would be under command of the president, was proposed in a measure by Sen. Lister Hill (Ala.).

Following Thomas' warning, UAW workers at Chrysler's Highland Park plant in Detroit, Mich., returned to their jobs, on agreement that 16 members would be reinstated by the company after a row in which they sought to prevent an AFL chauffeur from delivering beverages into a building while another GIO union was fighting to organize shop drivers.

SINGLE COMMAND:

Urged in Congress

Combining of the army, navy and air corps under a single department, and creation of a unified staff of various service officers under leadership of one officer who in turn would be under command of the president, was proposed in a measure by Sen. Lister Hill (Ala.).

WORLD MONEY

Invitations have been sent to representatives of 42 nations by President Roosevelt to a conference on postwar financial problems to be held in Bretton Woods, N. H., beginning July 1. Chief proposal for discussions is expected to be the international monetary plan, in which each nation would have the value of its currency fixed on a gold basis and fluctuations in values would be restricted.

More than 30 nations have accepted the plan in principle.

'Hairy' Sea Monster

Reported in Chile

PARIS. — A huge, hairy sea monster stalked through the streets of an unidentified town in Chile, the Vichy radio reported.

It was five yards long and weighed more than 4,000 pounds. After spreading panic among the population for several hours, the monster returned to the beach and disappeared in the sea.

Saga of Seas Is Closed by Death

Last of Trio of Fearless Tars Passes Away.

SAN PEDRO, CALIF. — A saga of the days of iron men and wooden ships ended with the death of Peter E. Lind, 91, last of a trio of fearless, witless and hardy seafarers.

For 60 years "the three musketeers" sailed together out of San Pedro, on windjammers, then fishing barges and finally by "talking" in a neighborhood saloon. Never separated for long, they died within a year.

First was John Larson, the Dane, who cast off with paralysis a year ago. He was 86.

Next Charlie Erickson, 87, a Swede, who succumbed while fixing his dinner. His uncle, John Erickson, invented the screw propeller and built the Monitor which battled the Merrimack.

Lind, the Finn, died at Los Angeles county hospital, where he had been confined for months with a broken leg and a stroke.

Each towered more than 6 feet and had sailed the seven seas since boyhood. Once they rode out tempestuous waters in the East Indies in 1883 when the volcano Krakatau blew up, sending waves hurtling around the world.

When sailing vessels disappeared, the three fished for salmon in the Pacific Northwest; trapped lobsters off the southern California coast until Japanese competition chased them out; and then did a bit in such motion pictures as "Old Ironsides" and "Nag Po."

On shore their steps often wandered to the old Mervig saloon where their tall tales and boisterous antics caused them to be known as the "unholy alliance."

When the present war broke out they were offered $15 a day to teach rigging, but to their disgust they had to turn it down. Their legs, which once had been the heaviest seas, wouldn't stand up.

Australians Seized For Murder; Teeth Are Clue

MELBOURNE. — After a world-wide investigation lasting nearly ten years and costing thousands of pounds, Antonio Agostini, 41 years of age, an Italian waiter living in Sydney, has been charged with the murder of his wife, Linda, an Englishwoman, in Melbourne on August 26, 1934. The crime with which Agostini is charged, popularly known as the Albion Palace girl murder, is one of the most famous in Australian history.

The victim's body was found near Albion, New South Wales, and comparison of her fingerprints with those in 87 countries failed to establish her identity. So the body has been preserved in a formalin bath in Sydney ever since in the belief that some day the mystery would be solved.

Police say the victim now has been identified as Mrs. Agostini, whose maiden name was Platt, who was born in Australia, England in 1927, and was married in Sydney April 22, 1930, came to Melbourne in 1933 and disappeared in August, 1934. It is said work done by a Sydney dentist provided the clue for identification.

Spanking Approved by

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—District Judge George A. Faust dispensed with formalities in a custody case.

"Does that man ever spank you?" he asked John Beaver.

"Yes, sir," he replied.

"That's fine. And what does he call you?"

"Jack."

"And what do you call him?"

"Johnny."

"There is a fine and friendly family relationship," commented the judge. He awarded custody of John, 8; James, 10; and Paul, 12, to Sergt. Clifton Willis, 28, who had married the boys' mother a year ago.

Aussie 'Talking Skull'

Loses Voice and Power

SOMEWHERE IN NETHERLANDS NEW GUINEA.—Claudius, the "talking skull," has lost his voice, so Australian troops in this liberated part of Netherlands New Guinea are no longer sending additions to their army rations.

Claudius was an old skull set up appropriately and provided with a voice by an officer acquainted with ventriloquism. It lives, awed by Claudius' ability to speak, brought propitiatory gifts of food and fresh fruits.

But Claudius lost his voice — and the Australians their fresh food — when the officer left for another station.

Lost War Prisoner Returns To Camp

What started out to be a good news story fizzled when the subject supposed to have escaped was returning to camp all the time. Seems that one of the prisoners at the camp was with a crew at a saw mill 15 miles south of Clanton Monday working. When time came to start homeward this war prisoner was asleep and the truck and guards left him. Upon discovering the man missing word was sent out over the state with a complete description and orders to pick him up. However when our local sheriff and deputies went after him they found him trying to get back to his Prisoner of War camp. Trying to escape apparently hadn't entered his mind.

4-H GIRLS TO SHOW PUBLIC HOW TO PREPARE DAIRY FOOD PRODUCTS FOR FAMILY DIET

Rural girls are taking advantage of an exceptional opportunity to gain experience in public speaking and in being of community service both important phases of 4-H Club training by participating in the 1944 National 4-H Dairy Foods Demonstration Activity.

In this activity they learn how to demonstrate to others good methods of preparing dairy food products, particularly in relation to the nationwide "Food Fight for Freedom" program.

Outstanding achievement records will receive recognition in the form of special awards provided by the Kraft Cheese Co., which include a silver medal to the county champion demonstrator, and gold medals to each member of the county top ranking demonstration team. From these county winners, State champion individual and team demonstrators will be selected, each of whom will receive a $50 War Bond.

Last year's state champion individual demonstrators in Alabama were Beth Jimmerson of Opelika and Evelyn Bolton of Sylacauga, and members of the state top ranking team were Virginia Austin of Ider, Mary Jo Patton of Hennegar, Betty Lou Zeigler and Daye Burnette of Elmore.

REGISTRARS TO MEET

The Chilton County Board of Registrars will meet at the Courthouse for ten (10) days, beginning July 3rd, 1944. Anyone qualified for registration is urged to do so at this time.

A. B. Burns, Chairman.
D. D. Culpe, Clerk.
Watson Jones,
—Registrars.

CEMETERY CLEANING

Come to Collins Chapel cemetery early Friday morning. Plans have been made for a cemetery cleaning. All who can spare the time will be needed to help, so if you can come and help, please do so. Also remember to bring the necessary tools to do the job.

SINGING AT FRIENDSHIP CHURCH

There will be an all day singing at Friendship Church in Perry County 6 miles west of Lawley the second Sunday in July. Everybody is invited to come and bring a well filled basket.

C. J. Littlejohn,
Lawley, Alabama.

T. T. Roseberry, a boy, April 4.
These statistics are obtained from the records of the County Health Department and are published for the purpose of promoting better registration of births and deaths. Filing of a certificate for births and deaths with local registrars is made compulsory by the State Vital Statistics Law. Responsibility for filing of a birth certificate within five days after the birth rests on the physician or midwife in attendance; undertakers or persons in charge of burials are required by law to obtain a burial permit before the body is interred. Such permits are obtainable only on the presentation of a completed death certificate to the registrar in the beat in which the death occurred.

Anyone having knowledge of birth or deaths occurring during May and not included in the above list should report this matter to the County Health Office immediately.

TO EVERYBODY IN CHILTON COUNTY

The Invasion of Europe is on, millions of our sons, brothers, husbands and sweethearts are sweating, bleeding and some are dying that my home and your home, my church and your church my job and your job, my rights and your rights may still be kept and enjoyed by us. The Fifth War Loan is also on and that is where you and I can, in a small measure, do our part to keep this great land of ours what we want it to be. We can buy bonds to the limit of our ability. We can not carry and shoot the guns but we can buy them, we do not have to go out in no man's land, and dig fox holes, crawl under barb wire entanglements, go for many hours without sleep and bare our breasts to the bullets of the enemy, but it is our plain duty to furnish the money for the training and supplying our men who do have to endure these hardships and face these dangers.

Let's buy bonds to meet our quota at once and be one of the first counties of Alabama to do this. We should do more than meet our quota, we certainly can not do less.

Committee Named To Aid Veterans

A reemployment committeeman has been named for every one of Alabama's 155 local boards, to help discharged veterans get their old jobs back and assist them with other problems. Col. James T. Johnson, Jr., State Selective Service Director, announced today. Col. Johnson announced also the appointment of Capt. George T. Murr, of State Selective Service Staff, to have charge of the veterans assistance program, under the State director.

"The people of Alabama seem to feel that local boards, which took men from civilian life, should assume some responsibility in getting the demobilized soldier readjusted," Col. Johnson said. "Moreover, the law charges Selective Service with responsibility for seeing that ex-soldiers get their old jobs back. So far, no difficulty has been encountered in this field, because to date so few men have been discharged, and these have been eagerly grabbed by prospective employers. The real problem will come when we reach the period of general demobilization, and masses of men are returned to civilian life. We expect to meet this problem and carry out the law. The local reemployment committees have been carefully selected for ability and interest in problems of returning veterans, and will be set to do a good job."

Col. Johnson pointed out that the Federal law providing for discharged veterans getting their old jobs back goes so far as to make it the duty of the State Selective Service Director to bring failure of an employer to give a job back to attention of the Department of Justice, with provision that the U. S. District Attorney may bring suit against the employer, without cost to the veteran, if this is necessary.

Except in the matter of getting old jobs back, Selective Service acts as a routing or channeling agency, referring veterans seeking new jobs, or on matters such as claims, pensions, rehabilitation, emergency relief, advice and assistance, to the appropriate agency for help.

Gov. Sparks several months ago designated Col. Johnson to have general charge of the veterans assistance program. Working with him is an advisory committee composed of representatives of the Veterans Administration, War Manpower Commission, Civil Service Commission, State Department of Education, Red Cross, State Service Commission, American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, State Defense Council, State Department of Industrial Relations, State Planning Board, State Chamber of Commerce, State Committee on Economic Development, and Agricultural Extension Service. These various agencies are working together harmoniously, Col. Johnson said.

V-mail Letters Soon From Boys Who Were In Invasion

V-mail letters, direct from Naval personnel to their home town newspapers and radio stations, will bring back to home town news that the individuals took part in the European invasion.

This is the way it will be done. When Naval personnel who have participated in operations against Continental Europe return to their bases in the European theatre they will be given a V-mail form, which they may fill out, if they so desire.

Explicit instructions are printed on the form which reads in part: "Naval Personnel: This letter is to inform your home town newspaper or radio station of your part in the European invasion. Fill in the name and location of newspaper or radio station. DO NOT include the name of your ship nor any information other than that requested."

Spaces are then provided for such material as the name, age, and rank of the individual, the country invaded previous action, promotions, medals or citations, home address, parents' name and address, wife's name, brothers and sisters in the service, former occupation and last school attended.

The V-mail form prepared by the Navy's Public Relations Office in London is designed to promote fleet and civilian morale by the quick release of information identifying personnel taking part in the invasion. It will be filled out by personnel who are members of the American Assault forces and only after their return to bases within the United Kingdom. When completed, the forms will be handled in the same manner as ordinary V-mail, after passing mail censorship. Censors have been instructed to pass only those forms which are completed exactly in accordance with the instructions.

It's Victory Canning Time Again!
(See Recipes Below)

Can What You Can

Markets are becoming green dotted with new vegetables like asparagus, spinach and peas. There are bits of bright red too, a welcome sight, those strawberries, raspberries and cherries.

They're good fresh, so use them in every way you can. But plan to put up some of the best produce in jars. Jams and jellies will come in mighty handy when you're point conscious about butter next winter. Jars of vegetables will put nutrition into those winter meals when canned food points are at a premium.

There's one rule about canning that you'd best remember when you put up those jars of fruits and vegetables: "Two hours from garden to kettle." That means using only foods at the peak of condition, for you get out of your can only what you put into it.

If vegetables turn brown in their jars and look unattractive as compared with the fresh produce, it's probably because of overprocessing (overcooking) or lack of fresh vegetables when you started canning.

When you overcook those bright red berries, they can't possibly be fresh looking or taste like a reasonable facsimile of the original product. Follow directions and cook just long enough, and the result will be well worth the effort.

Save Used Fats!

Now's a good time to put up conserve like grandma used to make. This contains a mixture of fruits popular now:

Strawberry-Rhubarb Conserve.
(Makes about 10 glasses)
1 quart prepared strawberries
1 quart prepared rhubarb
6 cups sugar

Wash and hull strawberries. Wash rhubarb and cut into 1/2-inch pieces. Mix strawberries, rhubarb and sugar. Cook mixture slowly until it is thick and clear. Pour into hot, sterile glasses.

Three-Fruit Preserves.
2 pints raspberries
2 pints strawberries
1 to 1 1/2 pounds cherries
Equal amount of sugar by weight, of all fruits

Combine all ingredients and boil 25 minutes. Add 1/2 cup lemon juice and boil 2 minutes longer. Remove from fire and allow to cool. When cool, pour into sterilized jars and seal. Although the preserves look thin when you finish cooking, they will thicken upon standing.

Lynn Says

Popular Observations: You like certain foods, but you like them better if you don't let them fall into a rut. Instead of serving these favorites the same way all the time, try these variations:

When the milk sours, use it in muffins. It spells extra lightness.

Rice pudding is good with cream, but better still with chilled fruits in season—cherries, strawberries, raspberries and peaches.

Spread lamb or ham patties with mustard before frying or broiling—you'll get good results.

Orange juice and grated orange rind in place of milk in baking powder biscuits is something to cheer about.

Good accompaniment with fish: Tiny beet cubes mixed with sour cream.

Tomatoes stuffed with cucumbers, cottage cheese and sour cream is something new by way of a tomato surprise.

Making Slip Covers

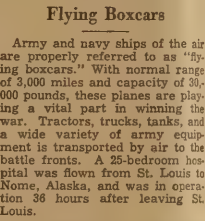

ONCE you know how to go about it, it's really no trick at all to make your own slip covers! Thousands of American women are becoming expert home-decorators and upholsterers—the slipcover instructions in this design will show you how to cut, fit and finish covers for your chairs and sofa.

Flying Boxcars

Army and navy ships of the air are properly referred to as "flying boxcars." With normal range of 3,000 miles and capacity of 30,000 pounds, these planes are playing a vital part in winning the war. Tractors, trucks, tanks, and a wide variety of army equipment is transported by air to the battle fronts. A 25-bedroom hospital was flown from St. Louis to Nome, Alaska, and was in operation 36 hours after leaving St. Louis.

This Is the Way It Happened

Long Awaited 'Second Front' Spells Liberation for Many Occupied European Countries

Nazi sources first broke the story, announcing that naval units were shelling Le Havre, France, and that landing craft were nearing the shores. Landing attempts, general along the English channel coast, followed in reality the arrowed diagram of planes and ships from England to France.

Light broadened on the horizon . . . Thousands of planes blotted out the pale sky as their wings carried them onward to the thunder of their engines . . . Below, more than 6,000 ships of all types moved in a mass over the English channel.

Short moments later, hundreds of paratroopers tumbled from the planes and the sky over French Normandy was filled with the little, white billows of their 'chutes; big battleships opened up a quaking fire on the French coast, and then landing vessels poked their snub-noses onto the sandy beaches and U. S. and British troops poured ashore, with tanks and other equipment unloaded behind them.

The invasion of Europe was on, the second front had been established.

Thus did June 6, 1944, go down in history as the date on which the democratic powers of U. S. and Britain challenged Adolf Hitler's "New Order" on his own battlegrounds of western Europe, the mighty gate to the Nazis' continental fortress, organized under the dominion of the German wehrmacht.

Taking place 80 miles across the channel from England, the first Allied landings were made between the great ports of Le Havre and Cherbourg on the French coast, while masses of planes and ships bombarded Dieppe, Abbeville and Boulogne, farther to the east.

From the start, the invasion was a fight to the finish, with German destroyers and E-boats attacking the huge Allied fleet off the French coast. German reservists concentrated behind the lines for emergency service, rushed forward to meet U. S. and British paratroopers descending from the skies, and to combat Allied armored units pressing inland with tanks.

In the thunderous crescendo of the early fighting, the Allies penetrated from seven to ten miles inland, and reinforcements were put ashore to support the attack.

Under supreme command of U. S. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, with British Gen. Bernard Montgomery in charge of ground troops and British Adm. Bertram Home Ramsay leading the naval forces, U. S. and British fighting men spearheaded the invasion, receiving support from smaller units of Norwegians, Poles, Dutch, French and Greeks.

As the Allies secured beachheads on the French coast and thrust inland toward Paris, German forces counterattacked vigorously under Erwin Rommel, 60-year-old Field Marshal von Rundstedt and storied Erwin Rommel. Adolf Hitler, himself, reportedly rushed to the invasion area to preside over the enemy's military directorate.

Speaking in Britain's house of commons after the invasion got under way, Prime Minister Winston Churchill declared that the landing operations were supported by 11,000 first-line aircraft, available for use in any particularly critical sector.

The Allies' invasion came after the victorious assault on Rome and weeks of intensive aerial bombardment designed to wreck his communications, defenses and industry in the west.

Throwing the full weight of the U. S. Fifth and British Eighth armies at the Germans in the Italian offensive, the Allies successfully tied up an estimated 25 divisions, or about 300,000 Nazis, in that country.

Rather than call upon additional reserves to stem the Allies' determined drive in Italy, the Nazi high command decided on a laborious retreat up the mountainous peninsula to the north, where they could eliminate the constant threat of landings in their rear and yet fall back upon

'Good Luck'

Bombs are happily sped on their way on "D-Day."

'D'-Day Tests Allies' 4 Years Of Planning

The most daring undertaking in military history—the Allied invasion of western Europe—came as the result of four years of complex, methodical planning on the part of United Nations' military leaders.

It was just after the "miracle of Dunkirk," when Britain's army in France was rescued from almost certain destruction, that Allied military leaders began planning for a return trip. Observers recall that except for that almost unbelievable evacuation, Britain might have fallen in the months that passed. Dunkirk was one of the greatest feats of military history, with 337,000 men rescued from that little port city in the face of terrible odds.

During the months that followed, Britain was forced to content herself with a superbly courageous defense of her home islands against the Nazi blitz from the air. The blood, sweat and tears promised by Prime Minister Churchill proved a true prophecy. England suffered bloody blows. The crescendo of the battle was reached in September, 1940. Although air attacks continued, it was then the Germans realized their aerial losses were greater than the results warranted.

Although the story has never been told in its entirety, it was then, too, that a hastily planned Nazi invasion of Britain was choked. Fragments of news told how hundreds of German invasion boats had been located and sunk by the Royal Air force. That, more than anything, proved to the British that an invasion must be carefully, methodically planned to the most minute detail.

Then the Commandos were organized under Lord Mountbatten. All through the next year they developed their own techniques by hit-and-run raids against enemy-held coastal areas. The damage they did managed to keep the Nazis in a constant state of alertness.

Then came the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor December 7, 1941. Britain had gained a powerful ally. It marked the beginning of the end for the Axis powers.

American troops landed in Northern Ireland in January, 1942. Plans for the invasion were shaping up. It was only a question of time. It wasn't long before U. S. fighting men were stationed in Britain itself.

Three months later American and British troops invaded French North Africa. The landings, carefully planned and perfectly timed, were brilliantly successful. It was here that an inexperienced American army got its baptism of fire. It learned the caliber of the foe, finding that the Germans were stubborn, brave opponents.

In May, 1943, the Americans, British and Fighting French eliminated the Nazis from Africa. Then followed the invasion of Sicily. It was a surprise assault and resulted in victory in 38 days. The Sicilian campaign marked the highest point to that time in Allied cooperation. But they still operated with separate armies, navies and air forces. Complete integration was impossible.

Then came the invasion of Italy. A mixed British-American army stormed the Salerno beaches on September 9. The landing was successful because of the smooth combination of air, sea and land forces. British and American air superiority was never questioned. Naval units of both nations landed men and equipment and kept them supplied.

During all these operations, plans for the invasion were going ahead in England. Nazi propagandists boasted of their fortress, all the while admitting that invasion was inevitable.

The battle of the Atlantic shipping lanes had been won. Submarines were still a menace, but the grave threat had been removed. Huge convoys of men and war material moved to Great Britain with losses at a minimum.

Air attacks on Germany and on the coast of France were stepped up almost beyond belief.

Record Escape

The greatest ocean depth at which men equipped only with a breathing device have escaped from a submarine is 210 feet, a record held by two crew members of the British P-32, sunk in the Mediterranean on September 17, 1941, says Collier's. At the lowest depth, their bodies were subjected to a pressure of 133 tons, or nearly seven times as much as at the surface.

Due to an unusually large demand and current war conditions, slightly more time is required in filling orders for a few of the most popular pattern numbers.

These Are Our Leaders in Battle . . .

Here are "thumbnail" biographies of the Allied invasion leaders:

Gen. Dwight David Eisenhower, 53, supreme commander of all Allied forces, led the successful operation in North Africa, Sicily and Italy. He was born in Texas but reared in Kansas. In two years he rose from lieutenant colonel to a full general, and top-man for the invasion.

Air Chief Marshal Sir Arthur Tedder, 52, wounded infantryman of World War I who successfully commanded Middle East and Allied Mediterranean air forces, is deputy supreme Allied commander.

Lieut. Gen. James H. ("Jimmy") Doolittle, 47, "the man who bombed Tokyo," is in command of the U. S. Eighth air force.

FOLK & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Of course you have heard about the husband who had gone to the induction center and wired his wife, "Darling have been weighed and found wanted"

Looks as though our patriotic merchants and businessmen came to the aid of their Bond Drive this week when the Ladies' Committee raised close to three hundred dollars in half a day from contributions. These contributions are to go for 'prize money' at our Bond Auction to be held during the War Loan Campaign. We believe that this Drive is being taken more seriously than any other since Pearl Harbor. If there is such a thing as raising $474,000 easily it should be this time—however we don't think there is any such thing. As is the usual schedule we are all going to have to push our shoulder to the wheel and PUSH. And push HARD.

We talked to Mr. Pattillo Friday afternoon before he left on a trip to the northern part of the county. He needed two or three boys badly to go with him to put up War Bond posters in windows in that part of the county. They could not be found. We believe he finally had to go without any help what-so-ever and do the best he could to get these posters displayed. This isn't fair. Mr. Pattillo as Chairman of the County Committee, has a big job on his hands. It is one that you would not like to have under any circumstances. The least thing that any of us could do would be to lend our assistance. Contact Mr. Pattillo and find out if there is anyway that you can help in this campaign. We are sure that it would be appreciated immensely. And too, it is just as much your job as it is Mr. Pattillo's.

Comes this week from Cpl. Willard C. (Clark) Headley, printer, linotype operator, etc. etc. He is in India and sends his Company paper for our inspection and constructive criticism which is, of course, quite flattering. "Bakshish" is the name on the masthead. What that means you will have to ask someone else. Someone from India. We do not know. But, it is extremely readable. A very interesting little sheet of 8 pages, 9 inches by 11 inches. Here is a sample and if we are not mistaken it was written by Cpl. Headley. We quote:

Anderson Has Short Run As Keeper Of Bees

"Much to the disapproval of his war-time buddies T/Sgt. Sam Anderson a while back took to the interesting hobby of honey gathering, and set up a hive at the entrance of his sleeping quarters. Watching the numerous bees which buzz around the mess hall the idea dawned on him that nothing would be better insurance for peace and quiet than a fortress of stingers at the front door.

So Sam improvised a hive and clad in hood, gloves, and numerous other safety devices, he induced the queen and her workers to take over their new home.

Only for a short time was the mess sergeant free from outside interference. The bees left shortly after, bag and baggage, leaving with an embittered Andy the poignancy of yesterday's honey in an empty hive.

BUT—There is a happy ending after all. By late news flash we learn that Sam and Conley of the MP's have set up again a bigger and better hostel for the industrious little inmates, this time out in the MP tent area.

So the bees have a happy new home, Andy can sing once more, but (and we are sorry to have to say it) Conley got stung.

MULBERRY CHURCH

Bro. Stuckey brought us an inspiring sermon Sunday, and we had a good crowd at both services in Sunday School and BTU.

Plan to be with us the 2nd Sunday in July when we will have a great missionary day at Mulberry.

The BTU Study Course at Mulberry last week was a success. With about 65 average attendance. All four classes were attended well. Mrs. E. E. McCarty teacher of adult class. Miss Francis Lockridge teacher of Sr. class. Miss Nina Tyler teacher of Intermediate class and Mrs. O. F. Davenport teacher of the Juniors. All enjoyed a social at the Church on Friday night.

The W. M. S. met at the church Tuesday in their monthly meeting with 9 attending. We had our regular business meetings with reports. Minutes etc., for our community missions. We are to help the needy and aged of our Community. Mrs. O. F. Davenport had charge of the Missionary Program with Miss Lockridge bringing us a very inspiring devotional, followed by sentence prayers by all, especially remembering our men who are in the invasion. Then Miss Tyler gave us a fine talk on our duty to the boys when they come home. Meeting was dismissed with prayer by Mrs. R. W. Stuckey.

The Doreen G. A. will have a special Missionary Meeting at the home of Annie Lee Mizell Saturday, June 17, and they will study the G. A. manual.

Growing Pullets Should Get Special Attention

Growing pullets will need special attention if they are to make their best growth and come into full production this fall, County Agent, A. R. Glasscock for the Extension Service, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, declared this week.

Pullets should be removed from the brooder house when they are from six to ten weeks of age and put in range shelters, he continued, as brooder houses are usually too small to grow pullets out in. Over-crowding is one of the worst things that can happen to growing pullets.

"Range shelters should be located where there is plenty of young tender grazing and near enough to shade that the pullets will have excess to it on hot days," Mr. Glasscock said. "Lespedeza, Bermuda grass, or rape furnish ideal grazing and will save part of the feed bill."

"No poultry should have been on the ground for two years and the ground should not have been fertilized with chicken droppings in the past two years. Growing pullets should uld never be allowed to come in contact with older chickens, turkeys, or any other fowl."

The construction of a range shelter is fairly simple and can be built from material generally found on the farm. The Extension Service Agent pointed out. The range shelter is built with shelter room and roosts to house the birds at night and protect them from rain. Wire sides are generally provided. If the range shelter is mounted on skids, it can be easily moved to a new range.

"Feed troughs must be constructed to protect feed from rain." It is better to have too much feed space than have too little. The water trough should be elevated to insure cleanliness and prevent waste and keep the shade.

Detailed plans on construction of range shelters can be obtained through your County Agent's Office.

All restrictions on the farm slaughter of livestock and delivery of meat have been lifted by the War Relocation Administration. An amendment rescues the requirement that farmers must have a permit to slaughter livestock and deliver meat to persons living on the farm.

Value of Grading Farm Products

Demonstrated in Yam Sales

LATE in February, 3,000 bushels of brushed, graded and packed U. S. No. 1 Puerto Rican Copper Skin yams were shipped from Alabama* to the Chicago market. They brought $4.00 a bushel, outselling all others—Nancy Halls from Illinois, Indiana and Tennessee, and Puerto Ricans from Louisiana and Texas, which brought only $3.60 to $3.85 per bushel.

The Alabama yams were of "Alarico" quality, and were labeled with the Auburn Extension Service copyrighted Alarico label. (This label insures uniform quality to all markets, and can be used by any Alabama farmer complying with the standards for quality.)

During the fall of last year, the groundwork for the sweet potato market was laid when representatives of the Auburn Extension Service, the State Department of Corrections and Institutions, the State Chamber of Commerce and the Farm Products Division of T.C.I. made a tour of northern markets to ascertain the market requirements for the coming season.

Other Alabama crops will be handled through the marketing system as marketing plans become accepted.

This experience clearly demonstrates the value of cleaning, proper grading, and neat packing of farm products before they are offered for sale. This advertisement is published to make the experience more widely known.

WHAT IS THE NEWS BACK HOME?

Have you heard from your boy lately? Have you asked your neighbor if he has heard from his boy lately? Ever notice how the boys ask, "What's the news back home?"

Well, what is the news back home? During June and July the most important news back home will be the progress of the Fifth War Loan Drive.

In World War I, Chilton County met every quota.

In World War II, Chilton County has met quotas No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, and No. 4. Now we have the Fifth War Loan Drive. What will we do with it?

WHAT'S THE NEWS BACK HOME?

There is no magic way to meet a bond quota. There may be auction sales, there may be brass bands, there may be speeches, there may be articles given away. But after all THERE IS ONE AND ONLY ONE WAY TO MEET A QUOTA. The way is for you and you to buy bonds, talk bonds, sell bonds.

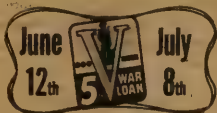

Hundreds of boys get the County papers. Will they be proud of the news from home?

The Answer Is With You!

There is no middle ground: We either support the boys or we support the enemy. To support the boys it is necessary to buy bonds. To refuse to buy bonds is to support the enemy.

WHO'S SIDE ARE YOU ON

Back the ATTACK, Buy More Than Before, Buy, Talk, Sell BONDS!

Allied Forces Push Forward
After Success in Landings
Along 100-Mile Coastal Area

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

On Way—Allied sailors stand at alert in early morning hours as invasion fleet moves on French coast.

SECOND FRONT:
Allies Drive Inland

June 6, 1944, marked historic "D" day, and in the hours that followed, the battle against Germany's desperate defenders developed into a grim fight to the finish.

Borne across the English channel to French soil by a mighty armada, thousands of U. S. and British soldiers first poured onto the beaches between Cherbourg and Le Havre, 80 miles from Paris, while thousands of other paratroopers and specialists landed behind German lines to accomplish particular missions.

As the Allies established footholds along a 100-mile shoreline and mechanized equipment and other supplies were hurriedly unloaded on the beaches, Doughboys and Tommies pressed inland to encounter Germany's emergency reserves rushing up to prevent sizable penetrations of their front and combat the spreading paratroopers.

Heaviest of the early fighting developed near the mouth of the Seine river below the big French port of Le Havre, with Allied mechanized units fighting for control of the coastal stretch immediately to the south, and swarms of paratroopers battling German detachments near the large industrial city of Rouen, farther to the east.

In Air

No less than 10,000 tons of explosives were dumped on Nazi defense positions by swarms of Allied bombers preparatory to the landings, and more than 1,000 air transports dropped paratroopers and glider-borne specialists over the French countryside on specific missions.

Extending across 200 miles of sky, the massed Allied aerial fleets flew above a thick overcast, which hindered the German Luftwaffe's counter-measures. Among the first Allied troops to land at strategic points were the paratroopers and specialists, and the enemy's early counter-action was against these units.

Besides bombing German defenses and transporting troops to vital areas, the U. S. and British air force, 11,000 planes strong, also busied itself guarding the convoys and the beachheads, and striking back at the Luftwaffe, showing its first stroke of life in the blazing battle zones.

On Sea

While the huge Allied aerial fleet took command of the air, an equally huge naval armada of 4,000 vessels took over dominion of the sea, pouring deadly fire from belching guns into the enemy's boasted coastal defenses.

Taking part in the thunderous naval bombardment of the French littoral, under the over-all command of British Adm. Bertram Ramsay, were many U. S. units, including the battleships Texas and Arkansas and the cruisers Augusta and Tuscaloosa. In the early fighting, U. S. losses were reported at only two destroyers and a landing ship.

Among the vessels that bore troops and supplies ashore were 36-foot LCVPs carrying vehicles and men; 200-foot LCI's bearing infantry; 200-foot LCT's stacked with tanks, and 300-foot LST's transporting everything from jeeps to bulky road-builders.

Tumbling from craft were naval personnel to direct landings, tend wounded, repair or blow up disabled craft clogging the coastal approaches and establish communications with ships at sea.

Invasion Highlights

COAST GUARD: Units of the U. S. coast guard assisted in landing operations, and marines manned the secondary guns on battleships and cruisers.

TRAFFIC CONGESTION: "There are so many planes over there (the LCVP's coastal area) that you have to put your hand out when you want to turn," commented Capt. Thomas Montang of West Bend, Iowa, a Thunderbolt flight leader.

RUSSIA:
Attack Awaited

While Moscow received word of the opening of the "second front" with jubilation, the world kept one eye cocked to the east for the opening of a large scale Russian attack to synchronize with operations in France.

Indeed, the Germans sought to unbalance the big Russian offensive by attacking in northeastern Rumania, where Berlin expected the weight of the Reds' drive to fall. In attacking in that region, the Germans claimed to overrun high ground, giving them command of the lower land where the Russians reportedly massed large forces for their smash.

Although the Germans expected the Russian drive to center to the north of the Carpathians where they have thrown a deep spearhead into Nazi positions in old Poland, action also was anticipated farther to the north, where the enemy held a long front which bulged far behind the Reds' rear. Battle also loomed in the Baltic region, where the Russian airforce attacked leading German transports bringing in supplies to that front.

Shove Off

"It's the Thing!" Doughboys exclaim as they take positions in landing craft in British port before sailing into invasion area.

ITALY:

Nazi Retreat

With Germany unable to furnish any more troops for the fighting in Italy and the Allies swinging the full weight of their mailed fist in western Europe, Nazi Field Marshal Kesselring continued to withdraw his forces to the waist of the peninsula, where they could hold up behind the last of the Apennine peaks without being threatened by landings to their rear.

As the enemy fled northward, Allied medium bombers ranged far ahead, blasting bridges and rail facilities, while fighter-bombers poured a withering fire into the retreating columns themselves, leaving behind a trail of burning vehicles and abandoned equipment.

Despite the fact that Kesselring managed to extricate his troops from the Allied trap set by the British 8th army attacking from the south and the U. S. 5th attacking the enemy rear from the west, the Nazis suffered heavy losses in absorbing the full shock of the first charge and in covering their general retreat.

UNDERGROUND:
Put to Test

With France once more Europe's bloody battleground, her distressed people found themselves tossed between the appeal of Gen. Charles de Gaulle to rise against the Germans in the wake of Allied operations and the plea of Marshall Petain to remain in the service of the Nazis.

With the strength of France's vaunted and storied underground movement facing a crucial test, General de Gaulle told Frenchmen "... whoever and wherever they may be, the simple, sacred duty is to fight with all means at their disposal." However, he urged caution to avoid detection and imprisonment, declaring "anything is better than to be put out of action without fighting."

Imploping Frenchmen to refrain from action which would bring bloody reprisals, Marshal Petain declared: "The circumstances of battle may compel the German army to take special measures in the battle area. Accept this necessity." Further, he called upon all officials, railroad men and workers to stay at their posts "... in order to keep the life of the nation ..."

Allied Chief

GEN. DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

Soldier-diplomat, the U. S.'s four-star general, Dwight D. Eisenhower, as the supreme commander of the Allied invasion, pitted himself against Germany's icy, 69-year-old Field Marshal, Karl Rudolf Gerd von Rundstedt, for the biggest battle in world history.

Texas-born, Kansas-educated, 53-year-old General Eisenhower, long known as an armored-force specialist in the U. S. Army, gained his first renown through the successful conquest of North Africa, when his diplomatic dealings with former Vichy collaborators led to the agreement on occupation of the French colonies.

Typically Prussian, Von Rundstedt is considered one of Germany's military geniuses, the man who successfully directed the Nazis' early drive into the Russian Ukraine and then took over command of Hitler's western invasion defenses. From the start, Von Rundstedt was a supporter of the Nazi cause.

PRE-INVASION:
Battle Plans

Loud though their boasting might have been, Germany's generals are not putting all of their hopes into the celebrated "Atlantic Wall." Recognizing the impossibility of adequately defending a long coast line, the Nazis have concentrated large reserves behind it, to be shifted to endangered areas.

Although Germany's military spokesmen stressed that the high command intended to go onto the offensive to combat Allied operations, every preparation reportedly has been made in the event their counterattacks are blunted by the invading forces and they are pushed back.

To meet this contingency, the Germans reputedly erected concrete and steel artillery and machine-gun fortifications running many miles inland from the invasion coast, with the object of making any Allied advance slow and costly. Behind these field fortifications, stands France's once-mighty Maginot line, which the Nazis have converted into a German defense system, and Germany's own famed Siegfried line, or west wall.

Road Cleared

Preliminary to the Allied invasion of the continent, U. S. and British bombers conducted an unrelenting aerial bombardment of German defenses and communication lines along the channel coast and of Nazi industries supplying the wehrmacht.

The attack upon German industry was two-fold: first, it was designed to draw up as many Nazi aircraft as possible into the sky for battle, and, second, to knock out the enemy's airplane production and thus reduce the number of replacements of losses.

Before pounding the Germans' channel defenses against invasion, U. S. and British bombers also worked on the railroad system, over which the Nazi command could shuttle troops to areas most endangered by Allied landings.

MARKET REVISION: In the first news of the invasion prices of grains declined as much as 1 1/2 cents a bushel, but soon rallied, and the day closed with net gains of one or two cents. Traders believe the future price trends will depend on the speed with which European countries are freed from Nazi domination. It is expected that North America will supply most of the wheat, meat and other foods needed by people of the liberated nations, at least in the early stages of the invasion.

A GOOD SOLDIER OF CHRIST JESUS

LESSON TEXT—II Timothy 2:14, 8-12; 4:5-8.
GOLDEN TEXT—Suffer hardship with me, as a good soldier of Christ Jesus.—II Timothy 2:3.

"A good soldier"—what a wealth of meaning there is in that simple phrase. We think of our own hometown boys who have distinguished themselves in the service of their country, who have proved again that there is that in American life which can meet a crisis and do it well.

"A good soldier of Jesus Christ" is an even more significant phrase, speaking of that fine loyalty and devotion which Christians of all ages, yes, and of our day, are giving to the Captain of our salvation, our Commander-in-Chief in the great spiritual warfare going on in all the earth.

In our lesson we note that the soldier is:

I. Obedient (2:1, 2).
There is something to be done, and the soldier is enlisted for the purpose of doing it. In the case of the Christian soldier, it is to see that the gospel message which he has received is passed on to others.

Personal work is God's method, one man telling another, and another, and another. This is to be a continuous matter, not just now and then, and each one is in turn to become a soul-winner.

As each one wins others and the witness is multiplied by the law of arithmetical progression, the total result is tremendous.

Why, then, has the entire world not been long since completely evangelized? Because we who are Christians are not all obedient soldiers of Christ.

II. Loyal (2:3, 4).
No soldier can serve well with a divided loyalty. He cannot be running a business back home, or taking on outside interests to divert attention. Being an efficient and useful soldier is his first and only business.

Have not the military authorities in this war asked those who are at home to keep their minds out of the home and business, out of the letters to men in the army? Do they not require a man to leave home and family and give his all to the service?

The soldier for Christ must please the Lord, even though it involve bearing "hardness." It is no soft and easy business to be a soldier. "Blood, sweat and tears" are the order of the day. Shall we not do so much for our Lord?

III. Prepared (2:8-12).
Training is of highest importance for a soldier. He must know what to do, and why he is doing it. He must understand the reason for obedience and the purpose of the warfare. In other words, he must be a disciplined man, prepared to serve effectively.

The soldier for the Lord is to "remember Jesus Christ," his resurrected Lord and victorious Commander. He knows for whom and under whom he fights.

He also knows (vv. 10, 11) that the message he bears is God's Word, and will succeed even though the bearer of it suffer and die in the preparation to do it, if need be, before he will deny his Leader (v. 12).

IV. Faithful (4:5-7).
Faith, endure, work, be faithful to the very end. Such is the obligation, yes, and privilege of the soldier for Christ. He is to stand in testimony to young Timothy to such complete faithfulness because he had himself exemplified these virtues in his own life.

Those who are called upon to command must themselves be good soldiers. There is an encouraging note from the battlefields of this great war. One learns that the commanding officers are at the front, not hidden away in the rear behind the lines. The men take courage as they see the bravery of their officers.

What that meant in Paul's case may be learned from the story of his life which is condensed in a brief statement in II Corinthians 12:23-33. He really endured affliction for Christ's sake.

V. Victorious (v. 8).

A nation at war can stand the strain and bear the agony if it can be sure of ultimate victory. The grave disappointment of losing a battle, or the deep sorrow of heavy casualties, can and will be borne for the sake of the final triumph of the righteous cause.

In the battle for Christ, we know that the result will be victory. The faithful soldier shares the fruits of victory. The Christian soldier shall one day receive from his Lord and Leader a crown of righteousness.

When will that great day come? When Jesus Christ returns (Matt. 18:27). He is coming again; first for the living and then in glorious revelation of Himself as the Judge of all the world. His victory over all His enemies will then be complete, and He shall reign forever and ever.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT

Synthetic inner tubes need lubrication before being inserted in a casing. Partially inflate the tube and use ordinary pure soapuds as a lubricant in the absence of a special tube lubrication preparation. Dry synthetic tubes do not "slide" in the tire and unless lubricated may not adjust themselves properly.

Proponents of the continuance of our synthetic rubber insurance policy after the war hold that jungle growth on the rubber plantations and the probability of the Japs wrecking the plantation equipment may mean a loss of two years before normal levels of rubber production can be realized.

COUNTY AGENT OFFERS SUGGESTIONS FOR SAVING SEEDS

Chilton County farmers can have seed when ready to plant, no cash out lay will be necessary and in many cases these seed crops can become cash crops, by producing and saving all planting seed possible, County Agent M R Glascock said this week. Pointing out that good seed are scarce and that farmers should save them, the Agent offered these suggestions for saving seed.

VETCH - A good many vetch seed are being produced. They can be saved by cutting the ripe vetch with small grain or harvesting alone. The seed are then threshed. If in small grain, the vetch seed may be separated by the use of a spiral separator or cleaner. If small grain-vetch mixture is to be used, no separation is necessary.

CRIMSON CLOVER - Seed can be saved with a combine mower and rake stripper or by hand stripping. The greater part of these seed are sold as clean seed and harvested with the combine. The other methods are used for seed in the chaff which are preferred by many, especially when the seed are sown without covering.

BLUE LUPINE - Seed can be harvested with a combine or by cutting and beating out or whipping over a wagon body. Care should be taken that the seed are dry before storing.

SMALL GRAIN - If a good variety of small grain is being grown, enough seed should be saved for planting. If not arrangements should be made early enough for good seed for planting.

OTHER SEED - If other crops like burr clover, white clover, or any other cover crops are being grown and the seed can be saved, it should be done.

ALABAMA ONE OF LEADING STATES IN CENSUS OF ILLEGITIMATE BIRTHS

Montgomery --- Alabama is one of a group of seven states shown in black on a map recently issued by the Bureau of the Census, the color indicating that they had higher ratios of illegitimate births to total live births in 1942 than any of the other states.

The seven states in this category, each of which had a ratio of 60 or more illegitimate births per 1,000 live births, were Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia. The District of Columbia was also shown in black on the map, its ratio having also in excess of 60 illegitimate births per 1,000 live births.

In calling attention to the map, the State Department of Health pointed out that this state's abnorm-

The Farmers' Contribution to Financing the War

by B. M. Gile
Head, Dept. of Agricultural Economics
Louisiana State University

FARMERS are buying War Bonds to help make it possible for their countrymen fighting on the battle fronts of the world to defeat the armed forces of the aggressor nations. As a whole, farmers have shown that they are willing to make as many sacrifices as any other group in order to win the war. In proportion to their net incomes, they have and will continue to purchase their full share of War Bonds, which constitutes one of the important means for obtaining money or credit to finance the conduct of the war.

While farmers would help finance the war for patriotic reasons alone, fortunately War Bonds also serve to help them accomplish certain personal welfare ends. Among these ends are the future security of their farm business and the attainment of certain accomplishments for their families. During the war, at least half of the productive effort in industrial plants is being used to produce the instruments used for fighting. This means a shortage of goods available for civilian purposes, both for production and consumption. Farm machinery, buildings, fencing materials that are depreciating and wearing out with use cannot be replaced at the usual rate. The ability to maintain as good a standard of living as we have under wartime conditions is to a considerable extent explained by the fact that we had acquired durable capital goods before the war which are being worn out in production during the war. By purchasing War Bonds with the money which normally would be used for replacements, safe keeping is provided for reserves which can be used after the war to purchase new machinery, building and fencing materials not available now.

There is also an income which would be normally spent for durable consumption goods. By spending as little as possible now, farmers help to prevent further inflation in the prices paid for the inadequate supply of manufactured goods for civilian purposes and also by refusing to follow the upward spiral of land prices, they can help prevent undue inflation in land prices.

While we hope that farm prices will not drop too severely, it seems fairly certain that wartime prices will not continue indefinitely after the war ends. Many farmers are wisely investing as much as possible of their wartime cash incomes in War Bonds as a sort of prudent insurance to protect their family against the hazards of a possible low income period sometime in the future. It also serves to provide a special reserve fund for sending the children to college when they reach that stage in their development.

For the tenant farmers, War Bonds furnish an excellent means for creating a reserve for the down payment on a farm, when more farms are for sale at normal prices. Past experience has shown that the tenant farmer who has accumulated his operating capital and is ready to buy a farm at a time when a land boom is raging, will do better to remain a tenant a few years longer. The increased cost of land rents when prices of farm products are at high levels is small compared to the capital losses on a 160-acre farm that declines 25 dollars per acre below the purchase price, due to lower prices for farm products. It requires a good part of the productive lifetime for most people to save $4,000, for about ten dollars must be earned in order to save one dollar. In any event, it is a serious matter for anyone to lose the savings accumulated from many years of productive effort. This did happen to many thousands of both farm and non-farm families during the drastic decline in prices following World War I.

As contrasted with the last war, farmers are following sounder financial methods. More of them are aware of the truism that prices rise when many are eager to buy, and that prices are low when sellers are plentiful. From the standpoint of personal finances, usually only those things which are immediately necessary should be purchased when prices are high. If credit is used to gain ownership control over land or any durable production goods at materially higher prices, the source of repayment should be in cash within a reasonably short time, a year or so at most. In general, it would be advisable to incur only small debts which can be repaid before prices rise. War Bonds furnish a convenient investment medium to help farmers who wish to follow a prudent financial policy.

PAYING AND RECEIVING

Nobody is going to save your money for you. You'll have to do it yourself!

BUY WAR BONDS NOW!

LOOKING ahead to the future and planning wisely is more important today than ever. With the longer hours and harder work the war has brought, your equipment is wearing out pretty fast. Few replacements are available. But the day is coming when full lines of everything will be on the market again--and then you're going to need a lot! Nobody else will save the money to meet those future needs. It's up to you to do it yourself.

On farms and ranches all over the country, owners and tenants are salting down their dollars in the War Bonds which will mean so much to their post-war prosperity. It's the safest and easiest way to save. Uncle Sam stands behind them. You can buy them in large or small denominations, to suit yourself, and you can get them at bank or post office or Production Credit Association. Between trips to town you can buy by mail, or ask your rural mail carrier to get them for you. The wise, farsighted plan is to keep right on buying them.

Save your money for your boy, too. His great dream, wherever he's fighting, is to get home as quickly as possible. The least you can do, now, is to buy the War Bonds that help provide his fighting equipment. But when the war is over, then the money you've lent to the Government will come back to you... and you and the boy can use it together. The farm will mean more to him than it ever has, and he'll be proud of you for the way you've stood behind him, and provided ahead for future needs. War Bonds are your duty to your country, to your boy--and to yourself.

YOU NEVER GET LESS THAN YOU LEND! And you can get 1/2 more than you invest. When held 10 years, Series E War Bonds yield 2.9% interest compounded semi-annually. You get back $4 for every $3.

Of course, no one should cash a Bond unless he has to; but if an emergency comes along, Uncle Sam will redeem them in cash--at full purchase price--any time after you've held them 60 days. BUY WAR BONDS!

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

An American soldier went through the battles of North Africa and the invasion of Italy and never shed a drop of his blood. He was granted a furlough and came home to see his people. While handling a fire arm to show his skill as a soldier, an accidental bullet went through his lungs and every drop of blood in his body was shed on the floor of his home. This thing happens in the moral life of every man. There are souls that can brave successfully the outstanding perils of temptation and then become a victim to smaller ones. When a temptation is dishonorable, we stand up like men and battle through, but many yield to the temptation to be unduly anxious about small things. When we think ourselves to be least in danger then it is time to be on our guard. Many go down under the power of small temptations.

On a trip through the West I entered a glass house to watch the workmen as they made the glass that was so clear and bright. While standing at a distance from the burning furnaces I saw a man take a piece of glass and put it into one furnace, then into another and finally into a third furnace. I said to him, "Why do you put it through so many fires?" He answered, "Because the first furnace was not hot enough, neither was the second; therefore we put it into the third. This extreme heat makes the glass transparent." In life we are carried through one furnace after another. There is always a purpose in nature. I told when we are severely tested. From the furnaces and trials we come out with a shining soul.

Standing in a pottery at Cincinnati I saw a man shaping a vessel on a wheel. As it kept moving about he kept us his vigorous poundings with his mallet. "Why do you do that," asked one of the observers. "Watch and wait," answered the workman. Soon bubbles were bursting from the mass of clay and the workman said, "I could never have formed that clay into a vase if these air bubbles were left in it. They had to be pounded out." God must beat out the bubbles of pride and self will to make out of us a vessel that will hold heavenly treasures.

There is an invisible attraction of the moon and the sun that spreads itself above land and sea and raises a vast amount of water into the air, until it breaks over the face of the earth to give moisture everywhere. Every rain drop that falls over the face of the earth speaks of this invisible power. In like manner there is an invisible force going out from the life of Jesus Christ and for twenty centuries this force has lifted human life wherever it has touched them. This power coming out of the Galilean Life has lifted life above its surroundings and caused it to fall in multiplied blessings on mankind. Truly we are blessed that we may be a blessing.

A preacher friend of mine brought back jars of Jordan water for baptismal purposes. He seemed to forget that the Jordan water had various forms of tiny vegetable and animal life in it, and quickly it spoiled on his hands and had to be thrown away. That is often true of the gospel that is preached by many who claim a strong following. In Los Angeles California I attended a temple service where an outstanding religious leader spoke to her thousands, but her gospel was shot through with the life of this world, and it spoiled on her hands. We want our own gospel, or very own, but if it is to last, it must be dipped from the living stream of the Christ. Keep the human out of the gospel if you want it to last.

One moonlight night I stood on the shore of the bay, as the full moon stood high in the sky toward the east. On the face of the water there was a lane of light that came straight from the moon to me, as if I were the only person in the world to whom the moon would shoot her beams of light. My wife who was a hundred yards up the beach received the same beam of light, and it was just as bright as mine. Did you know that all the lanes of light coming from Jesus to us, is the same for every man. Jesus is out there as the central light, and the rays of His truth to each of us alike and it is our duty to receive that light and then let it shine through us.

GOOD MANAGEMENT NEEDED FOR TOP MILK PRODUCTION

With the 1944 demand for milk and dairy products the greatest in history, a well-planned program of feeding and management is necessary to meet milk goals and overcome the obstacles of limited feed supplies and labor. Well improved pastures are essential in this program to provide spring and summer grazing, and the best pastures are those that enable a cow to "fill" in two hours of grazing. Even on good pastures, when grass is sap-py or "watery," cows need hay, cottonseed hulls or other roughage to furnish dry matter and prevent scouring. Superior pastures, such as good legume pastures, will usually furnish enough nutrients for a cow to maintain her body and produce about two gallons of milk, daily; but cows that can produce more milk or those showing a tendency to lose weight, should receive 1 1/2 to 2 1/2 pounds of grain mixture for each gallon of milk produced.

Over-rating the value of pastures is a common weakness, especially when feeds are scarce and high in cost; and this accounts for the summer slump in milk production on many farms. To avoid this costly grazing should be provided when permanent pastures play out.

A mineral mixture of equal parts ground limestone or oyster shell flour, bone meal or defluorinated phosphate, and salt should be kept available. Cool, fresh water should be the pasture and near the barn. For available in shaded troughs both in Victory and better farming methods, feed cows grain ration as well as supply good grazing to prevent a decrease in milk production this summer.

This day came W. F. Broadhead, Executor of the estate of said deceased, and files his account, vouchers, evidence and statement for a final settlement of his said Executorship.

It is ordered that the 31st day of July, 1944, be appointed a day on which to make such settlement, at which time all persons interested can appear and contest the said settlement if they think proper.

Witness my hand, this 7th day of June, 1944.

J. LEE SMITH,
Judge of Probate

JACKSON CHAPEL

Services were very well attended Saturday night and Sunday although there is lots of room for improvement. Rev. Ocie Payton brought the message both Saturday night and Sunday which was enjoyed by all. We invite him back again.

Next Saturday night and Sunday, Rev. J. R. Cost will preach for us. Then Rev. S. P. Gray will preach for us Sunday evening at 3 o'clock. Third Sunday.

Rev. Sandlin will preach for us the Fourth Saturday night in this month. Let's not forget these services and our S. S. each Sunday at 10 o'clock. Come praying that we might keep our Sunday School going.

FSA Family Making Good On Home Front

The Lester Coody family, Route 3, Clanton, is doing a fine job in strengthening our home forces which must surely back our men on the battle fronts. Considering the obstacles that have come their way, this farm family has made outstanding progress in the past five years.

After having to sell their only good work stock and most of the year's supply of corn to pay a large hospital bill, Mr. Coody borrowed money through the Farm Security Administration for farm running and family living expenses in 1939. At that time, Mr and Mrs Coody say they had not even food enough to feed their family through the crop season. They owned about 15 hens, no milk cow, no brood sow, and they canned an average of 125 qts per year. A 25 dollar horse and an unbroken steer were their work stock when the family came to the FSA for help.

In the fall of 1943, Coody paid his entire debt to Farm Security. This year he has a loan for an additional week animal and for expanding his operations. The family now has two milk cows to furnish their large family a good supply of milk and butter and they own two good work animals. Their laying flock has been increased to sixty hens, and their number of canned quarts to 500 or more. As he keeps his own brood sow now, Mr.

This poster "Fire Away" shows a scene aboard the U. S. Submarine, "Dorado." The artist, the celebrated American painter Georges Schreiber, has caught the action during the very tense moment before the passing craft is identified as friend or foe. The painting is authentic in every detail for the artist was actually aboard the Submarine at sea. He ate and slept with the crew. He worked with the men and stood watch with the officers. A short time after leaving the Submarine, it was lost with all bonds.

Coody raises his home supply of meat as well as some for the market.

Judging by the snap beans, butter beans, peas, squash, tomatoes, and other vegetables in the garden and fields, we know this family will eat well, can even more than ever before, and probably have some foodstuffs to put on the market this year. They are still making plantings of late vegetables, too.

The Coody's have about 30 acres of corn and twenty of cotton to provide feed for another year, to meet debt obligations, and to furnish operating capital for another year. Other 1944 crops include: peanuts, hay, oats and sorghum.

Revival To Begin At Methodist Church Sunday July 16th.

Rev. Gaston Foote, pastor of the First Methodist Church Montgomery, will assist the pastor of the First Methodist Church here, Rev. O. C. Lloyd, in a revival beginning Sunday morning, July 16th.

He has recently assisted in a revival in Opp. An editorial in the Opp News of the past week has this to say: "Dr. Foote is not only a forceful preacher and scholar who has travelled extensively over the world, but possesses unusual characteristics along with a sense of humor, that no minister should want to be better qualified. And speaking of the masses, they are congregating at each service to hear him preach and Opp is enjoying a great revival."

Everyone is invited to attend these meetings.

Letter From Mr. J. C. Pattillo About Bonds

Dear Friends of Chilton County: We are getting off to a very VERY poor start toward making our quota in the Fifth War Loan. This is discouraging to the home committee, to our State committee and most especially to our boys on the fighting fronts.

There are approximately 2,400 Chilton County boys in the service and $100,000 invested in war bonds for each boy would make our quota.

The Government is sending quite a lot of money back to Chilton County as allotments to the dependants of our soldiers and if a part of this money for the months of June and July were put into War Bonds, just that in itself would go a long way on our quota.

Please think this over and see if you can not stop up the buying of War Bonds for the coming weeks and let's make our quota at least by July 4th. Let our slogan be: "OVER THE TOP BY JULY FOURTH."

J. C. Pattillo, Executive Chairman, War Finance Committee, For Chilton County.

TEEL BROTHERS OPEN NEW AUTO PARTS STORE

OLD-AGE PENSION MEETING HERE SATURDAY JULY 1

All people who are correctly informed on Old-Age Pensions as the necessary means of many thousands of our aged citizens in Alabama to live in some degree of comfort know full well that Old-Age Pensions are but the material affect of (THE FIFTH COMMANDMENT) that is of a fact irrevocable.

Old-Age Pension Association Inc. after many months of diligent work and study has fallen upon the only plan by which Old-Age Pensions will be obtained from the Alabama Legislature in session next Spring.

In carrying out the plan at least one Pension rally will be held in each of the counties in Alabama by the time the Legislature meets for its 1945 session.

One of such meetings will be held at Clanton Saturday, July 1st, in the court house, at 10 o'clock.

As you all know, it takes concrete action to produce the desired results. If you really believe in Old-Age Pensions it is highly important that you old and young people attend this pension rally that is different to any you have yet attended. It won't be hard for you to do, although there will be something for each and every individual to do.

This meeting as all of the said meetings will have no time nor place for selfishness, prejudice, personal likes and dislikes it is purely a matter of business to require action for the much discussed and long over-due old folks pensions.

Come! Hear! See, and Act! for yourself. At Clanton, in the Court House, Saturday, July 1st. Be there by 10 o'clock prepared to attend four hour session.

Most respectfully, Old-Age Pension, Ass'n Inc. (Pd. adv. by Old-Age Pension Ass'n)

County Health Officer Urges Parents Bring Children To Clinic

As part of the summer work for Chilton County your County Health Officer thinks that children under the school age should have all the protection against the (catching disease) possible and under the general term Pre-School Clinic, we are asking that you bring your child to us at the time as scheduled below.

The purpose of the Clinic is to find any defects which might retard the school progress of any child in the county. It's reasonable that a child with defective vision, throat, or underweight, or with hookworm cannot adjust himself to the competition and strain of the school. The findings which an examination of your child reveals will be sent to you in order that you can contact your family physician to make the child free of defects in order that his school life will be more pleasant and more effective.

Be sure to come with the child so that you can understand what we propose to do for and to the child at these clinics. It is desire to have children without defects ready to go to school when school time comes.

June 28, Pre-School Clinic:
9:00 a. m. Cooper,
10:30 a. m. Verbera,
1:00 p. m. Enterprise.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Invasion Armies Maintain Pace Established by Allied Timetable; Red Troops Advance in Finland

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Where updates are expressed in the columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.

U. S. soldiers waded through shallow water to an invasion beachhead along the northern coast of France. On shore LST boats unload more troops and supplies as reinforcements for the initial assault wave. At the left a demolition charge goes off.

THE INVASION: Keeping Pace

As hints of forthcoming additional invasions of Europe came from General Eisenhower, supreme Allied commander, a high command communiqué made it plain that the invasion armies were keeping pace almost to the hour with a timetable laid out a year ago.

But the biggest battle in history was not without its setbacks. While the Allies were breaking through at Balleroy on the south edge of the Cherisy forest and were developing a strong attack on the eastern sector of the bridgehead to throw a pincer around Caen, the Nazis had started a strong counter-attack against Montebourg and Carentan, both of which were previously captured by the Americans.

Liberated Territory

Allied sources said between 600 and 700 square miles of French territory had been liberated—almost exactly the amount which it was planned should be captured in that time under the master invasion plan developed in 1943.

Field Marshal Erwin Rommel had thrown a fourth of his entire available forces in France and the Low Countries against the ever-growing invasion front. According to an Allied official spokesman, the Germans are "fighting like hell," but our casualties have been far lower than expected.

A strong pincer was clamped on the battered city of Caen by twin drives to the north and south of the city. The Nazis' desperate stand at Caen was with good reason. The city, it held by the Germans, would be a buffer against advances toward Paris and Rouen.

There were at least four identified German divisions in the Caen sector, where the fighting was toughest.

IMPORTANT VISITORS: To Invasion Fronts

Day after it was announced in Washington, that Gen. Charles de Gaulle, French leader, was coming to this country to confer with President Roosevelt, it was learned in London that he would visit the invasion coast to stir the resistance of underground forces in his native country.

Some sources said that his visit to France would take the nature of a gamble for a popular demonstration by the French people to be used in strengthening his hand when he sits down to bargain for recognition by the United States.

Earlier, other Allied leaders had visited the scene of action in Normandy. Within a week after D-Day Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, accompanied by Gen. George C. Marshall, U. S. chief of army staff, Gen. Harry H. Arnold, commander in chief of the air forces, and Adm. Ernest J. King, commanding the U. S. fleet, crossed the English channel for a five-hour inspection tour of the front.

Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain, together with his chief of the British Imperial Staff, Gen. Sir Allan Brooke, and Premier Jan Christian Smuts of South Africa, visited British forces on the French coast the same day as the American inspection. The two parties did not meet.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

STOCKS ACTIVE: Success of the initial stages of the invasion of Europe boosted "peace" shares on the New York and other stock exchanges, with automobiles, utilities and steel most active. Stocks of companies manufacturing many kinds of civilian goods also benefited. Volume on June 11 touched 2 1/2 billion shares, highest since November 8, 1943.

ITALY:

Nazi Retreat

From the Tyrrhenian coast above Rome to the Adriatic sea at the eastern end of the 200-mile front, the German army in Italy everywhere was in a retreat that approached a rout.

The advance was most rapid on the Adriatic sector, where Eighth army troops crossed the Saline river, some five miles north of captured Pescara. On the Tyrrhenian coast, American infantry encountered a new series of dug-in defenses east of Orbetello, and attacked through high ground, about 90 road miles from Rome.

South of Terni, in the center of the advance line, the enemy came to put up a stiff resistance but some progress was made there also. Bad weather limited air activity, but RAF bombers managed to sweep over Hungary and attack the Almatu oil refineries near Komarom, northwest of Budapest, starting large fires.

FINLAND:

Red Troops Advance

As a Helsinki dispatch admitted that civilians were prepared to evacuate Viipuri and other Karelian towns, Finland hurled fresh reserves into the battle in a desperate attempt to stall the new Russian offensive.

Although Finnish resistance had stiffened all along the line, Gen. Leonid A. Govorov's Leningrad armies made deep penetrations along a 25-mile front and overran more than 40 towns and villages.

The Red troops had gone completely through the new Mannerheim line, built by the Finns following their initial advance of the present war in the summer of 1941. The Russians were approaching an intermediate defense line south of a third defense belt protecting the immediate outskirts of Viipuri.

MARIANAS RAID:

New Defeat for Japs

An American carrier task force, operating in three days in the Marianas Islands, 1,500 miles from Tokyo, sank 13 Jap ships, damaged 16 more and destroyed 14 aircraft. U. S. losses totaled 15 planes.

Ten ships were sunk and another 10 were damaged when a Jap formation was surprised as it attempted to flee from Saipan.

Meanwhile, Allied headquarters in New Guinea announced that the American air force on Biak Island has been put into operation. Infantry troops on Biak pushed west toward the Borokoe air field. American casualties in Biak through the first week of June were announced as 85 killed and 340 wounded.

JAPAN:

Earlier Defeat

Cheering news came from President Roosevelt in a nationwide radio talk when he said that "we can force the Japanese to unconditional surrender or national suicide much more rapidly than has been thought possible."

The President said "we still have a long way to Tokyo," but added that our smashes in the Pacific have deprived the Japs of the power to check the momentum of "our ever growing and ever advancing military forces."

The Allies have put Germany's back to the wall—"in fact three walls," Mr. Roosevelt said. And, he continued, the United Nations armies in France are ready to hurl back the full might of the Nazi military machine.

CANADIAN LEND-LEASE:

In the ten months ended March 31, Canada has sent goods worth $912,000,000 to the Allies on a lend-lease basis. Most of the materials went to the United Kingdom. It is estimated that the total has now passed a billion dollars. Canada is the only member of the Allies that does not receive lend-lease help from the United States.

WHEAT:

Record Year

Over a billion bushels of wheat will be harvested in the United States this year to establish the largest crop record in history, according to the current estimates of the U. S. department of agriculture. Figures just released forecast 714,148,000 bushels of winter wheat and 320,637,000 bushels of spring wheat for a total of 1,034,785,000 bushels.

Bumper crops of both winter and spring wheat are largely responsible for the huge production, but the crop is not record breaking for either kind of wheat taken separately. In 1919 and again in 1931 there was more winter produced than there will be this year. In five other years between 1910 and 1930 the spring wheat total of 1944 was topped.

While there are weather factors which may still cut down estimated production, agricultural officials state that the crops are making excellent progress after a late start.

AFTER VICTORY: Demobilization Plans

Urging immediate action by congress to meet postwar problems, James F. Byrnes, director of the Office of War Mobilization, announced the establishment of a plan for the discharge of men from the armed forces after Germany's defeat. Priority will be given to fathers and men who have seen front-line action.

At the same time, a report to the senate by the special committee on postwar economic policy and planning said 2,500,000 men from the army ground forces will be released during the year after Germany's collapse. The release rate will be from 200,000 to 250,000 a month.

The postwar committee said jobs must be provided for between 57,000,000 and 58,000,000 men and women compared to 46,000,000, which was the highest employment the country saw before the war. It also listed 16 ways to avoid "economic chaos," mentioning legislation in the fields of postwar taxes and unemployment compensation.

Aid for Nazi

In the corridor of a damaged building in Rome, an American medical corpsman gives aid to a wounded German soldier knocked out in the battle.

PRICE CONTROL: Tough Battle

When the senate passed the OPA price control extension bill bearing the controversial Bankhead amendment providing for the adjustment of cotton ceilings, the legislation had a long way to go. First it went to the house and clearing that body, to the President's desk.

Most sources looked upon this last step as the major obstacle this measure faced. For the senate passage was viewed as a defeat for the administration's unrelenting effort to eliminate the cotton ceiling adjustment and thus as OPA leaders said, "keep the lid" on rising costs.

Before it passed the senate, Chester Bowles, OPA administrator, warned that with cotton provision in it (this would give special price treatment to the textile industry and allow the increase in the cost of cotton) the bill would "shatter the entire stabilization structure."

Because the government wants its price control machinery to remain intact at least until the end of 1945, dopesters could see the President's veto coming long before he got the bill.

CHINA:

See-Saw Battle

Almost complete encirclement of the Canton-Hankow rail city of Changsha was indicated by a Chinese bulletin which told of hectic defense measures and "ferocious proportions."

To the west, near the Burma border, Chinese troops were cleaning out enemy remnants in the outer areas of Lungling, Yunnan province base. The Japs still held strong fortified positions on three hills outside the town. American bombers and fighters blasted enemy troops, river craft and installations over the Hunan front.

WAR COSTS: Hit 200 Billions

The United States has spent $200,000,000,000 on the war so far. Another $55,000,000,000 will be spent.

These figures were released by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, who added that "to march from Naples to Rome cost $4,700,000,000. I have it to you to imagine what it will cost to march from Rome to Berlin. Cost of taking the Marshall Islands was $8,000,000,000."

Let's Face Facts

Congress Must Provide Method of Bargaining Over National Income

By BARROW LYONS
WNU Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.

During the war a revolutionary idea has possessed the American people. It is that we can have an economy of abundance, if we have intelligence enough to organize it. This idea has produced a national income of about 150 billion dollars a year.

This idea has appeared in the programs of all of the important farmer organizations and in the resolutions of most labor conventions. Organizations of manufacturers have accepted responsibility for operating industry at a level to produce something like this income.

How revolutionary the idea may turn out to be can be gathered from one glance at the figures for national income over a period of years. Before the present war the highest national income occurred in 1929, when the figure climbed to 89 billion dollars.

But in 1941 national income mounted to 97 billion; and in 1942, under the stingling lash of Japanese aggression, we threw ourselves into production efforts which lifted it to 122 billion. Last year we achieved 148 billion—53 per cent greater than in 1929 and more than double the volume in World War I.

The fact that we can produce goods and services in quantities never dreamed has been fixed in our minds so that it never can be forgotten. With the natural resources at hand to produce in abundance, and the will to work, why can we not produce always at the fullest? That is a question everyone is asking.

In fact, there is general belief that perhaps we can do so. This soon will appear in the platforms of both major political parties. In all probability, Republicans and Democrats will promise an economy of abundance, if their candidates are elected.

But there are many sober men who point to the tremendous borrowing that has supported our war activity, and who declare that we cannot continue to operate on so high a level unless we continue to borrow just as heavily as we are now borrowing, or continue to tax as heavily, or do both.

One can predict without hesitation that if borrowing or taxing continues at present rates after the war, that there will be an outcry such as we seldom have heard.

One can as surely predict that if we do not continue to borrow and tax on a huge scale, production and national income will decline. And unless there are mighty powerful checks on price increases, influences now at work will bring about inflation that will devastate the purchasing power of the nation.

We had a hint of what labor's reaction is likely to be, when the navy department threatened to cut back production in the Brewster airplane plants.

It is clear that if millions of men are without jobs and lose their purchasing power, that the demand for farm products will fall away. In 1932 net income to persons on farms from farming operations dropped to 2.3 billion dollars, and farm income was only 5 per cent of national income. Last year net farm income was almost seven times as great as in 1932—more than 14 billion dollars—and almost 10 per cent of a national income three times as great as in 1932. Neither could labor and industry that farm income and the income of industrial workers are inseparably bound together. Also, that unless there is a strong demand for farm products, their prices, left to the mercy of the sensitive open market, will slump.

To meet this threat, farmers demand that prices of farm products be maintained at parity, thus protecting the purchasing power of the farm dollar—although not insuring farm income, which depends on the volume of goods sold as well as on price.

Parity has become the primary goal of farm leaders—an idea for which they will fight to the last ditch. It is an idea worth fighting for, but it requires extension to include the wages of labor and the profits of industry, if it is to effectively protect national purchasing power.

If the parity idea is thus extended, the question will be asked: What constitutes fair shares of national income for the farmer, for labor and for capital? To decide upon a division of national income implies organized bargaining between these groups. That must be done informally, because there would be machinery to put informal decisions into operation, and no umpire.

Yet, if we are to have a smoothly operating economy these groups must fight wage destructive economic warfare among themselves.

FOLK & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

If you want to kill an idea: just get a committee to work on it.

The old hat is off to G. C. Walker. He read an editorial in the South's greatest (?) newspaper recently about German soldiers being able to go into our Cates north South and dine out the same places that negro soldiers. Some negro soldiers supposedly had complained about this. Not being the type of the things which frankly smacked of "race-propaganda," Grover Walker started online out thins. After talking to a local officer, the Prison Camp, a man who has been in American Cates then Mr. Walker wrote the Birmingham News and asked them where they got their information, where the town was that they were supposed to have been in, and who gave them that information. As yet, he hasn't received a reply. We are anxious to see it when it arrives.

A husband is never as good as his wife thought he was before marriage; and never as bad as she thinks he is after marriage.

IMPERIUM NEPTUNI REGIS—Thanks what you get when you cross the Equator. We don't know any of the symptoms but Melvin (Shorty) Wilson sent it to his wife. No fooling, it's a large certificate engraved in many colors and is issued, we understand, to those crossing the Equator for the first time. Here is a good sample of what it contains: "To all Sailors (Wherever You May Be) and to all mermaids, whales, sea serpents, porpoises, sharks, dolphins, eels, skates, suckers, crabs, lobsters and all other living things of the sea. GREETINGS: Know ye that on this 19th day of etc, etc. And then further along: "AND BE IT KNOWN: By all ye Sailors, Marines, Land Lubbers and others who may be honored by his presents that MELVIN D. WILSON, having been found worthy to be numbered as one of our trusty Shellbacks has been duly initiated into the Solemn Mysteries Of The Ancient Order Of The Deep." The certificate is signed by Davey Jones and Nepturus Rex.

Little Marjorie wanted to send her teacher a greeting card at graduation time, so mother said she could pick one out that day and send it. Upon returning home that afternoon the mother inquired if she found a nice card for her teacher. She replied, "We found the cutest card; it had a picture of a little stork and a little baby in it, and it said, 'Congratulations'"

"WE CAN TAKE IT"
An elderly gentleman stood watching a group of happy, carefree youngsters skating gracefully around a park way. A younger chap came up carrying a brand-new pair of skates, laboriously put them on and made his first attempt at this type of travel on wheels.

Time and time again he tried, each time hitting the hard roadway with a body-shaking thud. Noticing the lad on the verge of tears, the elderly gentleman walked over, helped him regain his feet and said sympathetically, "Sonny, this isn't safe for you. You'd better quit before you get hurt." Bravely holding back his tears, the kid replied, "Sir, I didn't buy these skates to quit with—I bought them to learn how to skate."

Somehow, to us, that reply reflects the attitude of the youth of America at war. The Sport of Mars is a rough tough game, a game the enemy warriors said the youth of a decadent democracy could not master; they were to soft; they couldn't take it.

And the transition from peace to war was hard to take. The implements and rules of the game were strange and complicated. The kids were learning something new. They took the bumps, the ups and downs, but they stuck it out.

Now thousands have proved their skill on far-flung fields of battle and thousands more stand ready. The game is rough and the entrance fee is high, but the youth of America didn't invest his freedom to quit with—he's out to win. It's a rough bargain, rough while the game lasts, but he knows the dividends will be worth while.

Dedicated to the men in the Service from Chilton County.

STOP a minute and think how your farm of tomorrow will look. Will it have new buildings to add to the old? New paint for the house and barn? Modern equipment and new fences? Will it be up-to-date? Comfortable? Prosperous?

Save your money now for tomorrow's needs. Thousands of owners and tenants will have farms and ranches to be proud of when the war is over because of the money they are saving—in War Bonds. Your farm is taking the same wear and tear their farms are. Buildings and fences and equipment are depreciating. New stock is needed. When the day comes that replacements are available—where will the money come from to pay the bill, unless you, too, are saving for them now in War Bonds?

War Bonds are the safest way to save your money, because they are backed by Uncle Sam. They're the easiest way, because you can get them at bank, post office or Production Credit Association. Or your rural mail carrier can get them for you—or you can write for them yourself.

SOMETHING SPECIAL TO SAVE FOR. Those boys of ours in the Services—backing the attack for them now in War Bonds is the least we can do. But, while they are away fighting, it's up to us to be laying plans for a better peace for them to return to. Then the money you've lent to the Government will come back, for you to use on the farm. Then goodbye to worn-out equipment and run-down buildings! You and your boy together can make the farm the prosperous place you want it to be. So keep a list of your future needs. And to pay for them, keep on buying Bonds!

YOU NEVER GET LESS THAN YOU LEND! And you can get 15 more than you invest. When held 10 years, Series E War Bonds yield 2.9% interest compounded semi-annually. You get back $4 for every $3.

Of course, no one should cash a Bond unless he has to; but if an emergency comes along, Uncle Sam will redeem them in cash—at full purchase price—any time after you've held them 60 days. BUY WAR BONDS!

Miss Willodeen Stewart and Sgt. Fred Brooks Wed at Impressive Ceremony

An interesting event of Sunday afternoon, June 18th, taking place at the Methodist Church, was the lovely candlelight ceremony which united Miss Willodeen Stewart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Stewart, of Clanton, and Sgt. Fred B. Brooks, of Montgomery.

The impressive double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. O. C. Lloyd, pastor of the Methodist Church.

Palms and baskets of white gladioli interspersed with white seven-branched candelabra holding white tapers formed a background for the wedding party. A central arrangement of two baskets of gladioli mixed with feverfew and white daisies was most effective. The pews were marked with fluffy bows of white satin ribbon.

A program of nuptial music was presented by Mrs. P. M. Pitts, organist, and Mrs. S. C. Porch, soloist. Preceding the ceremony Mrs. Pitts played the ceremony Mrs. Pitts played the "O Promise Me" and "To a Wild Rose." Mrs. Porch's selections were: "I Love You Truly" and "Because."

The bride entered on the arm of her father, Mr. L. J. Stewart, by whom she was given in marriage. The maid of honor was her only sister, Miss Martha Jean Stewart. Flower girls were little Misses Kay Rainwater, of Montgomery, niece of the groom, and Vicky Ray Searcy.

Mr. Goree Brooks, of Montgomery, was his brother's best man.

The bride was lovely in a dress of light blue tissue crepe. The bodice was fashioned with a medium round neckline and a deep, ruffled yoke, and short Chinese sleeves adorned with a bow. The skirt was pleated and of street length. Her hat was a heart-shaped off-the-face model of white straw. She carried a white Bible on which was white gardenias showered with staphenotis tied with streamers of white satin ribbon.

The maid of honor wore an identical model of the bride's dress in pink. Her hat was of white strawtrimmed in a pleated ruffle. She carried an arm bouquet of white and pink carnations tied with pink satin ribbon.

Mrs. L. J. Stewart, mother of the bride, was gowned in an attractive dress of aqua tissue crepe fashioned with white net ruffling outlining the neck and sleeves. She wore a corsage of white carnations.

Mrs. J. J. Brooks, the groom's mother, wore a becoming model of aqua printed crepe. Her corsage was of pink carnations.

A reception for the families and out of town guests at the home of the bride's parents followed the ceremony. Receiving with Mr. and Mrs. Stewart were the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Brooks, and Sgt. and Mrs. Brooks.

After spending some time with their guests, Sgt. and Mrs. Brooks left for a short wedding trip to Montgomery and Atlanta. For traveling, the bride donned a two-piece dress of panama cloth, trimmed in white ruffling. She wore navy accessories. Her corsage was the gardenias from her bridal bouquet.

Out of town guests included: Mr. and Mrs. Paul L. Stewart and daughter, Bonnie Jean; Mr. Gene Stewart; Miss Austelle Barnett; Mrs. J. L. Whitson; and Miss Peggy Sykes all of Birmingham; Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Brooks; Mrs. Mary Brooks; Mrs. Estelle Nelson; Mrs. C. B. Lewis; Mrs. W. L. Wilson; Mrs. E. L. Rainwater and daughter, Kay; Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Brooks and daughters, Barbara and Sandra; Mrs. L. J. Clarke, Jr.; Margaret Thomas; Miss Kathrine

Has Not Profited
BY THE WAR

Financially the telephone company has not profited by the war. The rate of return on the amount of money invested in telephone plant in Alabama is now the lowest since the depression years, and is still declining.

While the prices of practically everything, including the costs of furnishing telephone service, have gone up, telephone rates have not increased—on the contrary long distance telephone rates have been reduced, resulting in large savings to telephone users in Alabama during the past three years.

The schedule of pay of telephone workers is the highest it has ever been. At the same time taxes have increased tremendously. Since our entry into the war in December, 1941, the telephone company has paid out more than $6,500,000 for federal, state, county and municipal taxes in Alabama.

Though the telephone company is doing the largest volume of business in its history it is making less than 4 1/2% on its investment in Alabama.

Cold Meat Warms Up for Main Dish
(See Recipes Below)

Meat Varieties

One of the most difficult tasks that faces the housewife is that of getting variety into the meat dish.

Meat, in itself, is delicious, but if served in the same way, with the same vegetables or condiments, occasionally, it smacks of sameness. There are many who will always bake ham without varying the glaze to add interesting flavor to the meat. There are others who don't realize that a bit of natural, home-grown herbs will pep up the good, old-fashioned pot roast. Some always serve luncheon meats cold on a slab of bread or with potato salad, and so on. For once, let's try things new and interesting:

Liverwurst Loaf.

(Serves 6)

$\frac{1}{2}$ pound bologna
2 tablespoons chili sauce
4 tablespoons mayonnaise
1 tablespoon lemon juice
 $\frac{1}{2}$ pound liver sausage
3 tablespoons finely chopped pickle
4 tablespoons chopped celery
2 teaspoons onion juice
1 loaf unsliced white bread
3 tablespoons creamed butter
Put bologna through food chopper; add chili sauce, 2 tablespoons of mayonnaise and lemon juice. Mix to a smooth paste. Mash liver sausage, add chopped pickle, celery, onion, Worcestershire sauce, remaining mayonnaise and mix to a smooth paste. Cut crust from bread, slice three inch lengthwise slices. Place one slice on baking sheet and spread with bologna paste. Top with remaining slice of bread. Spread entire loaf with creamed butter. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven 30 minutes. Place on platter and garnish with stuffed olives and tomato wedges. Serve with:

Creamy Mustard Sauce.
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup sugar
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
2 egg yolks
1 cup scalded milk
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup prepared mustard
2 tablespoons vinegar
1 small sprig chopped thyme
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon allspice
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon celery salt
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon paprika
Dash of tabasco
6 slices ripe olives

Mix sugar, salt and egg yolks together, beating well. Add scalded milk in top of double boiler. Mix together mustard, vinegar, thyme, allspice, celery salt, paprika and tabasco. Add slowly to milk and egg mixture. Cook over hot water, stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Just before serving garnish top of sauce with olives.

Extra Attractions: Potato chips make nice snacks when there's a rosette of cream cheese on each one of them. Simply soften cheese and force through a pastry tube.

Try a green salad with tender green scallions from the garden, and toss together with a sour cream dressing. It's delicious!

Dredge bacon pieces in corn meal; fry until crisp. Then add onion and flour for thickening and milk for the gravy. Umm... Roll cooked pitted prunes in orange-sugar or lemon-sugar to use as roll filling.

Make bacon biscuits (adding $\frac{1}{2}$ cup chopped bacon to standard biscuit recipe). Top baked biscuits with creamed asparagus or carrots for an inviting luncheon dish.

Top chocolate ice cream with chopped toasted almonds for a good tasting dessert.

Chopped green peppers and pitted ripe olives make a flavorful texture contrast to fish salad.

Kidneys and liver are both delectable if prepared with the proper seasonings:

*Roast Kidney Loaf.

1 pound beef, veal, pork or lamb kidney
1 cup milk
8 slices bread
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup bacon drippings or butter
2 eggs
1 green pepper minced
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon pepper
3 tablespoons grated onion
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon powdered sage
Wash kidney in cold water. Drain well and grind, including the internal fat. Pour milk over bread and soak. Combine all ingredients and mix thoroughly. Pack firmly in a loaf pan. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ hours.

Liver Delux.
(Serves 6)
6 tablespoons bacon drippings
1 pound fresh green beans
6 cups shredded cabbage
1 teaspoon salt
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon pepper
1 pound cubed liver
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup water
Brown onion in 4 tablespoons drippings. Add cabbage and seasonings. Cover and cook over low heat for 15 minutes. Remove from pan. Roll liver in seasoned flour and brown in remaining drippings. Add water and simmer 5 minutes. Add soy sauce and cabbage.

Bacon and Beans.
(Serves 4)
 $\frac{1}{2}$ pound bacon
1 pound fresh green beans
2 tablespoons bacon drippings
1 teaspoon salt
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup chopped green onions
2 tablespoons chopped pimiento
Wash green beans and cut lengthwise. Cook in a small amount of water. Add bacon drippings and salt. Ten minutes before green beans are cooked, add green onions and pimiento. Serve with strips of crisp bacon.

The outdoor flavor of the barbecue is captured with this barbecue ham. The sauce is seasoned just right, tangy but not too hot.

Barbecued Ham.
(Serves 6)
 $\frac{1}{2}$ slice ham (2 pounds, 1 inch thick)
 $\frac{1}{4}$ large onion
 $\frac{1}{4}$ clove garlic
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup catsup
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup Worcestershire sauce
1 small can tomato soup
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup vinegar
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon butter
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon sugar
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon pepper
Simmer ham $\frac{1}{2}$ hour before baking. Chop onions and garlic very fine. Add remaining ingredients and pour over ham; bake uncovered for 30 to 40 minutes in a moderate oven.

Allied Supremacy in Air Result of African Lesson

Borrowed Page From Germany's Book Taught Us to Coordinate Efforts of Air, Land and Sea Forces.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

Early in the war with Japan, when the little men of Nippon were swarming down the Malay Peninsula at an unbelievable rate through impossible terrain and rolling up one inconceivable victory after another, I had a talk with a wise old military campaigner, and as a result the conversation, sat down and wrote that "infiltration" is a word you are going to hear used a lot before this war is over.

Then followed the days when the Japs pushed the allies back from Singapore to New Guinea and the men of Nippon were acclaimed as the aces of jungle fighting, the art of filtering through territory in which heretofore human beings were not supposed to be able to fight.

Today, the allies have produced the best jungle fighters in the world. We are daily beating the Japs at their own game.

And today, I was reminded of something else after another session with another anonymous oldster, of another time and place.

He told me some things about the allied air force and I recalled the days when Hitler began to bully Europe and I realized that it wasn't so much appeasement, corruption, deceit or Nazi diplomacy then that made the Fuehrer master of central Europe, first at Munich and later in France, and the threatening shadow which the dreaded Luftwaffe cast across the world.

Today, just as the allies have out-jungled the Japs, they have out-Luftwaffed the Luftwaffe. In the latter case, we must admit the Germans taught us in Africa how they did it.

Tributious Warfare

We will be able to understand the invasion of Europe much better if we understand a little more about the two roles which the allied air force has played in modern warfare ever since we took a page from Germany's book and learned what it means to coordinate the efforts of pilot and bombardier with the foot soldier and the sailor, especially in what is now generally called "tributious" warfare.

First, it might be well to state clearly the difference between the tactical and strategic bombing. Strategic bombing is directed toward the destruction of enemy strength at a distance. Tactical bombing is destruction or interruption of enemy operations in or near the combat area.

Because the valuable quality of air power is flexibility, the two roles sometimes overlap, but in general, the strategic effort is a long range effort in terms of both time and space—it requires the use of long-range bombers and long-range fighters.

Tactical bombing is the quick action at instant notice and involves lighter bombers and usually does not require long range for its craft. There is an exception, which I'll mention later.

Strategic bombing is aimed, as we have seen, at factories and installations which contribute to the enemy's war effort; railway lines, junctures, military bases, rolling stock and all means of transportation and communication.

The targets in tactical bombing are more varied and will be mentioned later.

The Final Phase

We are interested at present in the final phase of the European war, so it might be well to describe the preliminary efforts before, and the continued effort after, the assault on an enemy shore.

The Sicilian campaign is a good example.

The first job the air force had was to remove an obstacle enroute. That obstacle was the island of Pantelleria and you remember what happened to it. It was flattened into surrender in two days.

Then the real "tributious" effort began. It followed a pattern which is pretty much the one accepted for invasions since.

The first step is the neutralization of the enemy air force and this is a job nobody but an air force can do. The means the destruction of air dromes and other distant vital areas; later, providing fighter coverage for the beaches and for shipping.

The Germans had a thousand planes based on or near Sicily. Thirty-one of the airdromes had been attacked in the preliminary phase for a month. Rail communications were bombed in order to isolate Sicily as nearly as possible, to be some of the senseless bombings of the little Polish villages. Radar and telephone exchanges were often set up in these villages. They were located by radio detection.

In Sicily itself, the enemy bases had been so thoroughly destroyed that the Germans couldn't get enough of their planes in the air to interfere with the landings. Also, the second and third functions of the tactical air force were well carried out; namely, the isolation of the enemy forces from their supplies and also interruption of movement of reinforcements.

The fourth function of the tactical bombers, which is to break down the signal communications, I referred to before—destruction of telephone and radio installations.

Ground Troop Support

The fifth is the close support of the ground troops. This was achieved little with more success than was fully realized at the time. Some commanders of the landing troops complained that there were no fighter planes over them.

Some of these same commanders when they advanced and saw the wrecked armored cars, tanks and other equipment strewn along the roads, realized that the enemy had been held back by the attacks from the air.

In Sicily, meanwhile, troops were dropped behind the lines, and this contributed its share to the success of the invasion. We know how well the tactical troops have acted in the Pacific theater and in Burma. This job is listed as sixth in air force tactical operations and includes carrying of paratroopers, running a shuttle air transport and towing gliders which land personnel and equipment (the glider pilot fights with the land forces since he can't glide uphill).

We now come to the last two functions of an air force—less dramatic, but highly important—reconnaissance and the building of air bases.

In the Sicilian campaign, a million photographs a month were made so that the commander of each landing unit had pictures of every place he had to go to with his objectives plainly marked.

We know of the record time in which bases have been destroyed, captured and reactivated in the Pacific theater of war. In New Guinea, a base was taken, built, manned and put into complete operation a hundred miles from the nearest allied base, and well behind the enemy line.

Thus we see the scope of air force operations, how closely they are knit into the operations of the land and sea forces; and how the allies have achieved air supremacy in Europe. But, because air forces are so elastic, they can be massed suddenly and, therefore, actual command of the air is much harder to maintain. At a given moment, the Germans who certainly do not have air supremacy any longer might be able, by heavy concentration and great sacrifice, to achieve temporary command of the air in a given area. The allies did have command of the air in Italy. Otherwise, the beachhead at Anzio could never have been maintained. As it was, supplies and reinforcements could be landed in broad daylight. On the German side, no concentration of men or supplies could be attempted except at night.

The shadow of the Luftwaffe has grown thin, the weapon Hitler created to enslave the world has turned in his hand.

ENTERING THE PROMISED LAND

LESSON TEXT—Joshua 1:1-9; 23:1-5.
GOLDEN TEXT—Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.—Joshua 1:9.

The forward look is typical of God's people. They are always to go on. They are to be like Israel, to whom came the word, "Moses is dead," but "now therefore arise and go"—under a new leader.

Our lessons for this quarter center around the experiences of Israel from Joshua to David, a period rich in historical data, much of it with most helpful spiritual application. It affords a real opportunity for effective teaching.

Moses was now dead, but that ought not to trouble us.

I. God's Provision of a New Leader (1:1, 2)

God buries His workmen at the end of their day of labor, but God's work goes on. The people had become attached to Moses and had learned to trust his leadership (even though they often murmured). With his death we might have assumed that there would be a lull, but that was not God's plan.

The Lord works through men. He gives them abilities and uses them for His glory—often in a way which astonishes them and others. But let them not become proud, for God has someone to take their place when they are gone. They are not indispensable.

Sometimes people talk as though all the great leaders of the church had died, or were dying. Yet God has some obedient men who are ready to step into the gap.

Joshua was ready, when God was ready, and he stepped into leadership.

II. God's Promise of Victory (1:3-5)

The promise given to Moses was still good. God's promises are always good. They are the only really stable thing in a trembling universe. The question is, Are we ready to accept Him at His word?

If our love were but more simple. We should take Him at His word. And our lives would be all sunshine in the sweetness of our Lord.—Faber.

They were to step out by faith. The land was promised to them only as the sole of their foot stood tread upon it. Israel never took out the full promise of verse 4. They lacked faith. Do we?

God honors those who believe Him, and who move forward by faith to plant the foot of spiritual conquest in new territory. Some are doing it now. Are we?

The enemies of God's people were many and mighty, but they were not able to stand in the way of God's people when they were moving forward for Him. Here again, Israel failed. They did not drive them out, because they did not take God at His word. The application of that truth to us is obvious.

III. God's Plea for Obedience and Courage (1:6-9)

"Be strong and of good courage." There is a side to the believer's character which calls for submission, for turning everything over to God, for being sweet and spiritual. All that is good and very desirable, but it can never be substituted for that other side which shows virile courage and fearless abandon to the cause of our God.

Joshua was made to realize—as we must too—that serving God (and especially in a place of leadership) calls for a measure of high courage unsurpassed in any other pursuit of man. It takes all there is of a man to be a real follower of Christ—be sure of that!

This courage, however, is not to be confused with a foolhardy bravery which is reckless and unintelligent. No indeed, for it is based on the observance of God's law (v. 7).

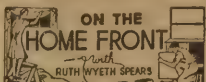

Note (v. 8) the importance of meditating upon God's Word. This (which is really a lost art in our day) means absorbing the principles of the Word that our very lives are conditioned by them, and we are made ready to meet every problem in the light of its teaching.

IV. God's Purpose for the Future (23:1-5)

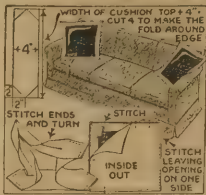

Passing all the great and stirring experiences of Joshua, we have now a glimpse of his closing days. He was counseling the people regarding the future.

It is the mark of a great man that he looks beyond the end of his own short existence and plans for the future. Many there are who are not concerned about what happens once they are gone. They have no vision, no concern about the continuity of life, in fact they come and go almost like the beasts of the field.

What about the future? Joshua reminded them that every blessing they had received, every victory they had won, everything, had come from the hand of God. There and there alone was their hope for the future. And it was enough!

A HANDSOME pair of cushions to brighten up your living room may be made from things on hand or from remnants of silk. Frequently the largest pieces of the skirt of an old silk dress may be used for a pair of matching cushions. The backing may be made of satin. A soft fold of a contrasting silk around the edge makes a smart finish. The sketch shows how such a fold is cut and applied.

Eighteen inches square is a good size for the cushions and, if you have an assortment of cushions of different sizes, it is easy to transfer the filling into ticks of the size you want. Stitch and turn, leaving a four-inch opening in one side. Rip a smaller opening in the old ticking; sew the large opening over the smaller one and then work the filling through. Rip apart and sew the new ticking with close stitches.

LOUIS D. COOK VISITS HOME AFTER 42 MONTHS IN PACIFIC

One of Chilton County's own returned last week after three years and 6 months in the South Pacific. Louis D. Cook, who volunteered nearly four years ago and fought at Pearl Harbor, Guadalcanal, New Georgia, Bougainville and New Hebrides, is spending a 21 day furlough with his family at Stanton.

Many are the tales of horror that this big fighting man can tell of war with the Japs. But few are the tales that you will get him to talk about. Through it all Corp. Cook came out with no more than a broken wrist watch and a broken foot. The foot injury came from dropping a box of ammunition on it. The wrist watch incident was his closest call to death.

On one of the islands the Japs had broken through the Infantry lines and were in hand-to-hand fighting with the Artillery. Cook and a Jap were closing in on one another with guns and bayonet raised for the kill. With a fierce lunge he knocked the Jap's gun aside and it struck his watch, breaking it. So fierce was his strike at the Jap that he lost hold of his gun, thus leaving him with no weapon but his bare hands to fight with. Quickly he grabbed the Jap around the neck with his right arm and held him in a vise-like grip until he strangled to death.

Upon completion of his furlough Corp. Cook will report to Camp Butler, N. C. where he hopes to be sent to a Camp in the States as an instructor of recruits. One thing he made plain: Corp Cook has had enough of the South Pacific and war.

Jack Pierce, 27, of Jemison, Ala., was graduated June 16, from recruit training as honor man of his company at the U. S. Naval Training Center at Great Lakes, Ill., and is now on "boot leave."

Pierce was elected candidate by fellow blue jackets and selected honor man by his Company Commander on the basis of Military aptitude and progress. He has been recommended to attend Army Guard school for further training. Prior to joining the Navy he was employed as a farmer. He will spend his leave with his wife and family in Jemison, Ala.

Pacific Front Flares Into Action as Good News From European Sectors Continues

Released by Western Newspaper Union

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

France—This telephoto pictures French family salvaging belongings from ruins of home laid waste by exchange of artillery fire in Normandy.

EUROPE:

Big Prize

Their beachhead firmly established and their forces mounting heavy attacks inland, the Allies grasped at their first great prize of the French campaign, as U. S. troops stormed the big port of Cherbourg.

Cut off from the main body of the troops by the lightning advances of U. S. forces which dashed across the skinny Cotentin peninsula to cut it in two, a desperate German garrison remained under fire of U. S. bombardment in a sacrificial delaying action, and meanwhile steadily demolished the modern harbor facilities which the Allies could put to good use in landing supplies and reinforcements.

While the U. S. stalwarts ringed Cherbourg, British and Canadian units in the Caen area to the east hammered at Marshal Erwin Rommel's armored divisions, which continued their counterattacks in bloody fighting designed to check any Allied breakthrough from the expanding beachhead perimeter.

Italy

Driving over muddy terrain, Allied troops continued to chase the Germans back to their main defense line in northern Italy, with fighting chiefly marked by brief, stubborn stands by Nazi rearguards.

In falling back to the north after the Allied armies had smashed their lines below Rome, the Nazis were withdrawing toward the waist of the Italian peninsula, where landings could not be made to their rear.

Anchored in the center at the base of the Apennine mountains, the new German defense line was set up to guard the fertile farm-land and industrial regions of northern Italy, prizes of the wrecked country.

Finland

With the formidable Russian army steam-rolling over the wide Karelian isthmus in southern Finland and training its sights on the little country's capital of Helsinki, there was talk of the possibility of a peace with Moscow.

The once strong Karelian defenses which had held the Reds back for days during the war of 1939, cracked and crumbled under the weight of the Russian attack, supported by heavy artillery and aerial bombardment.

As the Reds pounded up the Karelian isthmus in the face of negligible opposition, the bulk of the German troops in Finland stood guard over the vital nickel mines in the north.

CHINA:

Japs Press Drive

Spurred by the bombing of its big steel center of Yawata, Japan continued to press its major offensive in China, designed to secure the eastern coastal sector of the country against future Allied operations there.

At the same time, the Japs struck back at Chinese troops in northern Burma, fighting to open a back door to their country through which reinforcements and supplies could be transported from India.

No less than three Jap columns were operating in eastern China with two acting as protecting screens for the main body which plunged southward toward the big seaport at Canton. Capture of Canton would extend Jap control over the whole eastern coastal sector, in which the enemy already has established many heavy industries in exploiting the natural and human resources of China.

MORE TANKS

The army has ordered a reduction in the quantity of .50-caliber machine guns for airplanes that are being made on contract. One company's schedule has been cut down by 40 per cent, and six other manufacturers face smaller cutbacks.

On the other hand, construction of tanks is going to be increased considerably. Losses of these vehicles on the Normandy front have exceeded expectations. The production schedule of tanks of all classes was curtailed several months ago.

INDUSTRY:
War First

Although the War Production board is moving slowly toward the development of plans for the reconversion of industry from war to a peacetime basis, future manufacture of civilian goods will remain dependent upon military requirements, WPB Czar Donald Nelson indicated.

Appearing before a senate committee to explain the WPB's handling of surplus aluminum available for civilian production, Nelson declared that 200,000 workers would have to be shifted into war industry before any such production could be permitted.

Revealing that the 200,000 workers mainly are needed in foundries, forges, synthetic rubber plants, west coast shipyards and tank factories, Nelson said that the War Manpower commission's new plan for the control of the employment of all male help starting July 1 may solve the labor problem.

Reconversion

While indicating that civilian production would have to wait on the output of war goods, Nelson also revealed that the WPB's plans for an orderly reconversion included permission for manufacturers to buy machinery, tools and dies for consumer items starting July 1.

Under WPB plans, manufacturers also will be allowed to apply for materials for the production of a working model of any product designed for postwar marketing so as to enable them to solve mechanical problems now and be in readiness for immediate large-scale output.

Long opposed by older, established companies still tied up in war work, newer concerns will be allowed to manufacture civilian goods whenever they may be free to do so, Nelson said.

Familiar Scene

To doughboys of World War I, this World War II scene in typical French village occupied by Allied soldiers must bring back memories of some of the short-lived giddy lull of the lines before resumption of the push to the front.

NAVAL OIL:

Under Control

Stirred by the navy's agreement with Standard Oil company of California for the operation of its rich Elk Hills, Calif., field a year ago, congress established a new procedure by passing legislation under which it will directly control exploitation of naval reserves.

Approved by President Roosevelt despite his objection that it would endow congress with executive powers, the legislation stipulates that congress shall specify the amount of oil which can be removed from Elk Hills, and the navy secretary may not condemn lands or enter into any contracts or leases without prior consultation with congressional naval committees.

Division of authority as presently set in the legislation would lead to inefficient and uneconomical administration, the President said.

CHEAP CLOTHING:

Spur Production

Dollar and cent ceilings on low-priced clothing were announced by the Office of Price Administration as part of a special production program to stimulate manufacturing of these items.

Cotton house dresses will sell for $1.49 or less, women's cotton slips for 65 cents, men's shirts for $1.39 and shorts for 39 cents. Extra size dresses will retail at $1.69 and over-size slips at 75 cents.

The WPB has allocated 17 million yards of cotton fabrics for the program which is limited to July, August and September. The schedule calls for 2,142,852 shirts, 5,000,000 pairs of shorts, 1,598,000 house dresses, and about 1,021,272 cotton slips.

To guard against shoddiness, the type and minimum amount of material to be used in each garment have been specified, and standards of workmanship and construction have been established.

AID RUSS

Two million tons of war materials have been shipped to Russia on a lend-lease basis during the first four months of the year, Leo Crowley, foreign economic administrator, announced. This included 40,000 trucks, 6,800 jeeps, and 8,600 other motor vehicles. In March and April alone, more than 1,200 planes, 400 tanks and tank destroyers were delivered.

Since October, 1941, a total of 10,400,000 tons of supplies have been sent to the soviet union.

Let's Face Facts

Intelligent Defense
Required to Maintain Parity Price Standard

By BARROW LYONS

—WNU Staff Correspondent—

WASHINGTON, D. C.—

Anyone who thinks that we can have perpetual prosperity without cooperative planning for it, more than we have in the past, is dreaming. I come back to the proposal I made last week: we must adopt a concept of parity income, which includes all segments of our economic life, and find a way to balance the distribution of national income so that all groups can share in it as we wish to prosper ourselves. This is not the Golden Rule, but a hard-headed, practical concept of our modern economy.

Let us test this against the concept of parity prices which has become a symbol of justice to the farmer. Parity prices are attained when a given amount of farm produce—a bushel of corn—will bring to the farmer enough money to buy the same thing that a bushel of corn would enable him to buy in the five-year period 1909-1914. Parity price does not guarantee a good crop or a good demand for the crop. It merely guarantees the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar.

When the war ends and millions of war workers lose their jobs making planes, tanks, guns and ships—and nearly a servienton begin to seek new jobs—mass purchasing power will depend upon how much employment there is. In all probability not only will industrial workers have less to spend when war savings are exhausted, but many who live in small towns and suburbs will begin to raise chickens, fruit and vegetables for themselves.

At the very best, it will be difficult to maintain as large a market for agricultural products as we now have, unless important new uses for them are developed, and world trade is expanded greatly. It will also be difficult to maintain parity prices, for there are no commodities so sensitive to a declining purchasing power.

Even in the immediate future, it looks as though farming would be somewhat less profitable, for prices of everything the farmer buys are rising. And if price controls are weakened, most of the things the farmer buys will cost a lot more.

There is a feeling abroad that with permanent prosperity just around the corner, all production quotas on farm products should be left off after the war — man's ability to produce should not be inhibited by artificial restraints. But if all quotas were abolished and the government were to make commodity loans to protect parity prices on everything the farmer wished to raise, he would very quickly raise a good deal more than he could sell in this country.

Two-Price System?

The farm organizations say a two-price system will solve that problem. Keep prices at home up to parity, find new uses for farm products, and sell what is left abroad at whatever we can get for it. But here the doctors differ. Some would have the government take the loss, when produce is exported at a loss. The Grange suggests that the farmer take the loss on products sold abroad at less than cost. That would be the check against raising too much. Such a scheme might be worth trying in one of two exportable commodities.

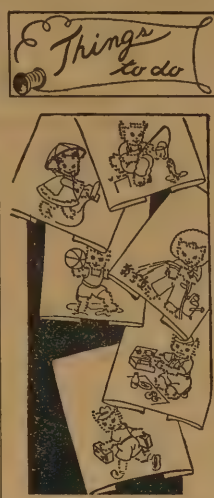

However, even this device might not bring about sufficient control of production to maintain parity, for many farmers have a tendency to plant more acres than they can handle, as soon as price declines, and thereby cut their own throats by creating an unmarketable surplus. The many small and poorly financed farmer-victims are hard to control, also create a market problem for the better financed farmers as soon as prices begin to drop.

In relation to commodities like wheat, which in the 1930s developed a world-wide surplus, international production control may be necessary, although extremely difficult to bring about.

Of course, the best way to preserve a profitable market for farm products is to preserve the purchasing power of the great masses of people who are not farmers. Farmers should never forget that they are a declining proportion of the population. Only 30 years ago farmers constituted more than one-third of the population. Today they are scarcely more than one-fifth.

As efficiency of agriculture increases, the proportion of farmers to the total population will tend to decline. Elimination of several million sub-marginal farms may accelerate this.

When we can agree upon a fair distribution of national income, and set up economic controls that will bring about an approximately just distribution, then for the first time we shall begin fully to enjoy the advantages which modern science and engineering make possible for all people. Until then we shall have wars and political upheavals.

W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THIS PLOT: Lieut. Col. Frank Krutz, pilot of a Flying Fortress, told us that last day when the Japs struck in the Philippines. Eight of his men were killed while seeking for shelter, and 20, 25, with many more, were killed. The boys in Java hear what happened to the Maribhead and the Houston and morale sag. The Dutch were in their own hands, and the order comes through to evacuate. The little Dutch navy fights a losing fight in the dark Java collapses. Gen. Warfield never gets his money.

CHAPTER XIX

"When I said I hadn't got it, he said if it ever did come through, I wasn't to open it until he got back, or something like that. He'd meant every word of it, and yet now I'm out of bed with the news already I couldn't understand. But it didn't seem to matter. Because what did any letter matter, now that we could talk, all we wanted to, around the world?"

"It was long after midnight when we finished," said Frank. "But I was some satisfaction to know it would cost the Japanese maybe five hundred dollars, and I only hoped I'd be out of Java so they couldn't collect from me."

"Then I got back to work on the Dutch military, who of course were up all that night. They knew what was coming tomorrow even if the civilians were only beginning to suspect. It was two o'clock in the morning when I got Major Fisher out of bed with the news already already the landing barges of one flank of this invasion force had been sighted right off the beach."

"After a final desperate call to the Dutch General van Oeyen, he agreed our boys might leave, turning their P-40's over to the Dutch fighter pilots, provided that before they went they strafed the Jap landing barges. Without verbal orders from the Dutch commander, they would not have done it."

"So I rustled two cars and a truck to transport them, and by four o'clock we were headed for Gnor. We got there a few minutes before dawn, to find our boys were up and out on that final mission. They didn't know it was their last."

"Again we telephoned Van Oeyen in Surabaya to tell him the orders had been obeyed, and he told us reluctantly to bid them Godspeed and good luck; they had their last fight, and those who returned from this mission were now free to go to Australia. If there was a way."

"I hoped there still would be. The Colonel had told me the day before that if I could get them across Java to Jockstarck-by noon they would find three F-4's which he had ordered back from Australia to pick them up. However, he couldn't guarantee that these F-4's would dare wait on that final mission."

"As we stood on the Gnor Field of course I got tense. Would those kids come back alive and in time to get across Java by noon? If we were late, would the bomber pilots get jittery and maybe call it off? But that I'd blame them, for today no plane would be safe on any field in Java."

"The Dutch pilots are grave, but they make us welcome."

"Then comes the roar of P-40's and here is the first glimpse of the Rising Sun as though feeling from it. Jack Dale is its leader. We grab them. What happened?"

"It looks bad, they tell us. There were so many barges. And when they started spraying them, they were thrown up in the air in great masses. There was a cross fire, too—from Jap shore batteries, already landed. At last they had set their ugly, crooked teeth into the fair white coast of Java."

"Then Jack said, in a low voice, 'When I hear will we get out of here, Frank?'"

"I said I had news for him, but just then the next fight comes roaring in—it's three Hurricanes flown by Dutch pilots, all of them this final day, except of course they had planeless pilots who were to take up our abandoned P-40's."

"Now here's the third fight, buzzing in low—P-40's this time, and the American boys start to buzz the drome, come roaring in right over the roof of the operations office—for a fighter pilot it's like knocking at the door. They're still on the old 17th Pursuit Group—or were they?"

"I looked at the P-40's. They are so full of holes they should be condemned—there is hardly one the Dutch would dare take up again. We were leaving them little enough."

"Now my boys are gulping coffee. They grab an apple each and sandwiches to take along, and cram things in their bags, and I suppose it's time for goodbyes. Captain Anamaet, leader of our fighter pilots, tall, thin, dark-haired, with a finely chiseled face, nervous like many fighters, is standing silent at one side. His Dutch boys are with him."

"What can we say? Our American boys have fought with them like brothers for weeks. We're not making a dash for safety."

"Anamaet is the courageous one. He walks forward, puts up his hand, and says simply, without a quaver, 'Thank you for all you have done. We have tried, but we are finished.' Gravelly, and with no bitterness."

"I ask him why he and all his boys don't come out with us. We'll find room for him in the planes. Then we can continue the war from Australia. He shakes his head."

"Now our boys are loaded in the truck, and presently we're out on the main highway, headed across Java, but just then we hear a familiar drone—Jap dive bombers. Smelling their way into Java, they've finally found this field. It's only luck they hadn't found it before."

"Our boys crouch against the tail gate of the truck to watch them peel off one by one, assume that 40-degree angle toward the ground, let the little egg, pull out of their dives and then—r-r-r-ump! the bomb takes hold—and punctuates the lesson we'd been trying for days to drive home to the Dutch infantry generals—that the field was untenable. It was only the weather which kept the Japs out of it yesterday."

It was two o'clock in the morning when I got Major Fisher out of bed.

"But now we have worries of our own. There are seventy-six of us in this little caravan—fifteen of them pilots. We have only one road map, so the drivers' instructions are to drive carefully and stay together."

"As we make a close squeeze to make it by noon. Then, in spite of the road map, we get lost—not badly, but two or three times we must make it by noon. The boys, tired from many weeks of fighting, try to doze standing up in that jolting truck. I don't sleep, but I have nightmares. At every crossroad I wonder if lightning-fast light Jap tanks mayn't come sliding in on us. Even if we had time to turn and run before they open fire with their turret guns, they'd have cut off our escape to Jockstarck."

"My wrist-watch hour hand seems to race. These tired boys, bounding in at that truck, trust me. The Air Corps got them in here; now the Air Corps is getting what is left of them out. They don't doubt that a big bomber will be waiting with its door open on the Jockstarck runway to take them to Australia. Suppose we get there after dark, and the boys have waited past the rendezvous hours, and then gone on back to Australia empty—and we look at a vacant field knowing the Japs are closing in behind us?"

"My watch hand races toward noon, and we're still hours from Jockstarck, but I have an idea. We're not far from what shows on my map as a fair-sized town which should have telephones from which we could call the Colonel and tell him we're on our way—that those bombers must wait."

"The town is a sleepy little place built round what a quick glance might mistake for a Middle Western courthouse square. War hasn't touched it, and you'd think could never come. In the hotel they stare at our uniforms—they're the American ones they've seen. The boys order, while I hunt a telephone to call the Colonel at Jockstarck."

"But minutes tick by and they can't locate him. Nor anyone else who can deliver a message that we are coming, and those bombers must wait."

"Do I waste more time calling? Or do we wait here, hoping we'll get there before they are frightened from the field? That seems more sensible, so we forge on. I haven't the heart to tell them I couldn't reach the Colonel."

"They're all tired in the cars, there's no wrestling or kidding, which is amazing for fighter pilots

Finally I know from the map we must be approaching Jockstarck. But on what side of the town is the field? We can't waste precious minutes uselessly fighting its narrow streets."

"Then, to one side, I see leaping flames and a column of smoke. That's all the marker you need to find an airdrome at this stage of a war. Tell the driver to steer for the smoke and he'll find the field."

"And at first it seems all to have been for nothing. There are the hangars, split wide open—six or seven Forts burning merrily. Also the war tower in the distance. I admit it as one of the best bomb runs I've ever seen. The Japs seem to have made a perfect job of cutting off our retreat—but not there remains a single Fortress!"

"It seems Lieutenant Vandewater landed in the nick of time to get her out of the ground, and flew out to sea until the raid was over. Luckily they sent only bombers, and no Zeros which could shoot him down. Here I am, perched on the edge of the field."

"But at the utmost he can carry only a third of us. I dispatch about fifty in the trucks to Madiun Field, hoping it isn't blown up, and send two Forts to take the rest of us out from Australia can get them out."

"And now we have a bonfire of everything we couldn't take with us, but which we don't want the Japs to have—all our photographs, every official paper, the entire records of the 17th Pursuit Group for the Java and Philippine wars. It all goes up in those flames on Jockstarck and the pictures of the remaining boys standing around that fire can remember what the others did. We even chuck in a few bomb sights that were kicking around—for luck, and for

"But just as the flames were leaping highest, the air-raid siren started to scream. We dived for a drainage ditch, and I think I got my worst scare of the war. Because up above were two Zeros approaching, and down here on the field was our solitary Fortress—our last chance to escape—sitting in front of God and everybody (including those Japs) mother-naked and defenseless. How long I held my breath, staring up into the sky, I couldn't say now. But for some reason they hadn't dived on us yet, and then when one rolled up to let the other take a picture I realized it was only a recon flight, to take the damage they'd done a few hours before."

"I began loading the boys into that plane. But I did one final thing. I couldn't forget to tell them that on that Gnor Field watching us pull out, and if I'd wanted to, the others wouldn't have let me. So with the Dutch liaison officer there at Jockstarck, we made arrangements for tomorrow night we could get any planes through from Australia, they would circle our old bomber field at Malang. The liaison officer was to notify the pilots that his Dutch fighter pilots could get there, and Malang wasn't by then in Jap hands, they would light a bonfire on its field as a signal that it was safe for our Forts to come in and pick them up to take them out to Australia, where we'd have another chance to fight the war together."

"We kept the date. The next night Captains Bill Bohnaker and Eddie Green slipped through to Malang, for thirty-five minutes they circled our old field. But there was no bonfire. Maybe Anamaet's boys had died during the day, giving them the field for Java. Maybe they'd got to the field just ahead of the Japs and were now prisoners, unable to light their bonfire but listening in the darkness as Bill and Eddie circled and circled and circled and circled, and never knew. But I'm glad we couldn't have foreseen that darkened field at Malang as we all climbed into our own Fortresses, turned off the Jockstarck lights, flying into a rising moon."

"Nothing much was going to happen on that flight to Australia," continued Frank, "although we couldn't plan the takeoff, of course, for with that big load in the rear we'd never have got her tail up. We manned our battle stations, and only after we were halfway across the ocean did the guns leave their turrets. I rode up in the pilot's compartment, and there were at least seven of us there, three sitting on the floor."

"At two o'clock in the morning we sight the coast of Java, a ghostly hue. It's flat desert, but finally we find the little town of Broome. We circle it and finally a fair path breaks out below—they're losing sight of the flames out of a moving auto to show the way, so we circle and come in."

"I couldn't sleep. The mosquitoes were making me groggy, and also I was thinking of the plane circling Malang. I got up and looked out the hangar door. The first pale dawn was breaking over Broome, which I could now see cotton, two houses, and this hangar shack—perched out there on the edge of nothing, where the red sand desert of Australia meets the blue salt desert of the sea."

THE glamorous ladies of Hollywood, perhaps learning from the example of old-time stars like Corinne Griffith and Ruth Roland, look upon real estate as a sound investment. Paulette Goddard revealed on the set of "I Love a Soldier" that she owns four houses, which she rents—she bought them for her mother to rent and manage. Lovely Georgia Carroll, between singing with Kay Kyser's band and appearing in it in such films as Columbia's "Battleship Blue," has refurnished and sold ten houses during the past year. But before she married Kyser she lived in a rented apartment with Marguerite Chapman—she preferred to let the landlord worry about keeping her home in order!

Gracie Fields, who's been part of Hollywood for several years, is still puzzled by the Hollywoodites. The way they kiss other people to do for them things that are fun to do yourself, like driving your own car, or arranging parties. "It's a place where girls like myself from the workin' classes get into the movies and suddenly decide they came out of the Mayflower," says she. The famous English comedienne, now replacing Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy on the air, firmly established herself in movies in "Holy Matrimony."

Remember the famous singing bag which Gary Cooper and Ingrid Bergman shared in "For Whom the Bell Tolls"? Well, Fred MacMurray tucks himself into it for several scenes in "Prizefighter." Practically "Yankee" with a small Cairn terrier named Piggy.

Apparently success in radio means more than success on the Broadway stage, at least to Kenny Baker. He gave up his leading role in a smash "One Touch of Venus," to take over the Groucho Marx program on CBS for the summer, and after the summer series is over he plans to remain with the show, both as a singer and as co-comedian with Marx.

Georgia Burke was all set to leave the cast of "When a Girl Marries" and go to Hollywood for the filming of the stage production, "Decision," in which she also appears. Preparations were made to write her out of the radio script, bid her farewell and speed her on her way—when it was announced that she play would be delayed in New York, after all. It's for United Artists release.

Pity poor Ann Thomas, who plays "Casy" in NBC's "Abie's Irish Rose." She's cutting her sixth week tooth. "Most other people settle for four," she complains. "But I always have to be different." With all her stage and radio engagements, maybe she needs two extra ones!

Replicas of "Duffy's Tavern" are popping up all over the various fighting fronts. The first was a palatial thatched hut on a South Seas island. Now they're everywhere, and Ed "Archie" Gardner is sending autographed pictures to adorn their walls.

Remember when Ralph Edwards asked a "Truth or Consequences" audience to send him a pen to be practically smothered under by 300,000 of them? Recently Edwards received a letter and a snapshot from the Mullane sons, Dennis Jr. and Joseph, both marines, who were united on a small island in the South Pacific. They said they were "famous" even there because of those pennies.

ODDS AND ENDS—"Double or Nothing" gets a streamlined format, with everything new but the quizmaster, John Reed King. . . . The "Superman" cast's lavishly pre-broadcast plans is making a lot of sense—they got 32 out of "psychics" recently. . . . "Fibber McGee and Molly," originally scheduled to take a vacation after June 20th broadcast, postponed it; their replacement is "Theater of War." . . . And Sinatra returns August 16th. . . . Get your wind shield to spring in. Black and White of "Me" by writing to Michael West of the CBS "Bright Horizons." . . . C. Aubrey Smith was knighted recently.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

THE POWER IN SIMPLE LIVING

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 1:1-16, 19, 20. GOLDEN TEXT—But Daniel put to proof in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's dainties, nor with the wine which he drank.—Daniel 1:8.

"Dare to be a Daniel. Dare to stand alone. Dare to have a purpose firm. Dare to make it known."

Remember how we used to sing it in our Sunday Schools? Possibly some of you still do. The thought of the song assuredly needs to be emphasized anew.

"The times are out of joint." Millions of men and women are meeting new problems and temptations. The standards of life they learned in the home and church or Sunday school are not too easy to maintain.

Many are hearing that old excuse for laxity, "Man, you're in the army now," or "I can't forget you at home with Mother; you're in the navy." Civilians have similar tempting excuses for careless living, drinking, etc.

Our lesson is a timely one. It presents Daniel as having—

I. A Courageous Purpose (v. 8)

Daniel and his three Hebrew companions, among those who carried captive to Babylon. As promising young men, they were selected to receive an education in the wisdom of the land, at the king's expense, and to be trained in his service.

The king provided for them the delicacies of his household, thinking thus to keep them strong and in good health. Daniel recognized that these things were unclean according to the laws of his people. He also knew that to eat such food and to drink the intoxicants provided for them would be to injure his health and cut down his ability to learn.

It was no easy thing to ask to be excused from what the king had commanded, not to do what everybody else was doing; but Daniel had a courageous purpose "in his heart."

But Daniel had the wisdom to be tactful about his convictions. He went to the king's steward with—

II. A Considered Plan (v. 9-13)

He had something thoughtful to say. Daniel did not put forward a plan which would not endanger the life or standing of the prince who was over them. He proposed a test, and agreed, if it failed, to be subject to the king's orders. He knew it would not fail.

How often those who have it in their heart to stand true to God against evils, such as beverage alcohol, or to plan in mind, and are only loud and tactless in their condemnation. They make no contribution to the cause. Let us be intelligent and properly prepared.

Daniel's plan put a planned diet and water over against rich foods and wine. It was a case of simple living against "high" living, and the result was a foregone conclusion. Those high in positions of authority in the field of diet tell us again and again that we need simple, well-balanced meals. And science is definite and clear in its condemnation of alcoholic beverages.

Daniel's test period resulted in—

III. A Convincing Proof (v. 14-16)

Ten days proved the point. Daniel and his friends were fairer and fatter than the others. They were vindicated in their courageous stand for what they believed to be right. Simple living demonstrated its value.

Think what a fine testimony the experience of Daniel must have been in that great group of young princes in that great group of kings' tables. So we also may give good witness for our Lord by our loyalty to right standards. Often it is true that those who outwardly scoff at them are inwardly moved to respect those who consistently stand for what they believe.

We need to cultivate in our young people the high courage which will enable them to stand against the constant temptation to partake of alcoholic beverages and to face with intelligent courage the clever propaganda of the liquor sellers.

Not that our friends should not lose by their decision—they gained. They reached—

IV. A Commendable Position (v. 19, 20)

At the end of the training period the king gave these young men examinations, and he found in technical knowledge, "I.Q." and in personal characteristics, Daniel and his comrades were superior to all the rest. That is in accord with the findings of modern science in the matter of the use of liquor.

Is it not almost unbelievable then that the advertising of the liquor interests, suggesting that liquor is a desirable part of a personal, social or business reputation, is permitted? The facts are all on the other side.

Strange too is the tolerant attitude of our nation and especially of many of our churches toward what is known to be destructive and detrimental. It is an appalling commentary on the extent to which our standards have been lowered or forgotten.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Up to the beginning of last year, R. F. Goodrich produced more butadiene-type general purpose synthetic rubber than all other plants in America, including those owned by the government. The first U. S. commercial butadiene-type synthetic plant was set up by R. F. Goodrich in 1929.

Black dories, frequently called "iron hogs," are said to be the most popular exchange medium for rubber among the Indians of the San Blas region of Panama. No mention has been made of premiums for brown dories.

Why Take Harsh Laxatives?

Simple Fresh Fruit Drink Makes Purgatives Unnecessary for Most People

Here's a way to overcome constipation without harsh laxatives.

Most people find this all they need to stimulate normal bowel action day after day!

Lemon and water is good for you. Lemons are among the richest sources of vitamin C, which combats fatigue, helps resist colds and infections. They supply valuable amounts of vitamins B₁ and P. They pep up appetite. They alkalize, aid digestion. Lemons and water has a fresh tang too—clears the mouth, wakes you up, starts you going.

Try this grand wake-up drink 10 mornings. See if it doesn't help you. Use California Sunkist Lemons.

SOOTHING MEDICATED POWDER. Also helps to prevent diaper rash. Soothes, cools, and protects tender skin.

DON'T LET CONSTIPATION SLOW YOU UP

When bowels are sluggish and you feel irritable, headachy, do as millions do—take a little FEEN-A-MINT. It's a soothing, chewing gum laxative. Simply chew FEEN-A-MINT before you go to bed, take it in the morning, and in the afternoon. Directions—Keep without being disturbed. Next morning chew, through relief, before you feel even again. Try FEEN-A-MINT. Tastes good, is handy and economical. A generous family supply to every home. Cuts out all constipation.

We apologize—in the article for Fra's Beauty Shop last week stating that Augusta Berry was employed there, we left an "a" off Augusta's name, making it "August." Augusta being one of our favorite people, we wouldn't have done it for the world. Tell you what we'll do Augusta, You accept our apology, and we'll let you set our hair.

Hot, hot and more hot. That's the weather around here lately. Main street on everyday except Saturday looks like the deserted village. Of course Saturday in Clanton hasn't changed much. You can still go down on the corner and count them and they will be there.

Well the fabulous Fourth has arrived again. It's next Tuesday. Some of our merchants were trying to get all the stores to close Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, (not always), and take one long holiday but we think a few of the fellows balked and decided that three days were just a bit too many. Anyhow, those merchants, so minded should go ahead and close for the 3 days if that is the way they feel about it, and let the ones who prefer working do so. As for us, we don't see how we will ever get the Glorious Fourth.

J. Mell Martin Selected For Important Post

Mr. O. E. Myers, Director Fifth United States Civil Service Region has appointed Mr. J. Mell Martin to service as Directing Key Civilian of the Commission in Clanton, Alabama. In announcing Mr. Martin's appointment, Mr. Myers stated that the employment of Federal agencies involve not only thousands of civilian workers whose services will be vital to the War effort but also involve every type of worker: Administrative, professional, and technical; stenographic and clerical; skilled and unskilled.

To accelerate the program, the Regional Office in Atlanta, Georgia plans to utilize the services of patriotic men and women throughout the Region who volunteer to aid the Commission in informing the public of the Government's needs for all types of civilian workers. The Regional Office believes that such volunteers by informing the public of the Government's needs and by directing interested persons to the authorized Representatives of the Commission will make a real contribution to the War program.

The Fifth U. S. Civil Service Region includes Alabama, Florida, Georgia, and Tennessee.

Mr. Martin is well-known throughout Chilton County and Central Alabama where he has been prominently identified with Red Cross and many other community activities. The commission feels gratified that it has as its Key Civilian one who has taken so active a part in civic affairs.

Production Surgical Dressings Direct Aid Prisoners Of War

WASHINGTON—A wounded flyer lying injured in a prison camp in Germany or the far East, is not so far from home as he may feel due to the work of thousands of American women in Red Cross Chapters in the United States. Through the surgical dressings they prepare, they are ministering as directly to him as they would if he were at home.

The Red Cross fleet which carries food and necessities to American prisoners in Europe also regularly transports surgical dressings for distribution through the International Committee of the Red Cross to injured prisoners of war in camps and hospitals. Isolated and alone as these prisoners may feel, they are still cared for no matter how far removed they may be, by the patient work of women at home.

Thus far the American Red Cross has shipped 129,501 surgical dressings to the far East and 546,173 to Europe for American prisoners of war and civilian internees.

Women volunteers many thousands of miles away from the active fronts or hospitals to which the wounded are brought in the theatres of war, their work with the Red Cross in this country links them closely with the fighting men who are wounded or injured all over the world. The surgical dressings they prepare reach these men in the emergency dressing stations and bays hospitals in Italy, in the North African desert, in the jungles of the South Pacific, in the prisoner of war and civilian internment camps of Germany, and in the Far East wherever transportation can be arranged.

The Army has requested the American Red Cross to provide one million surgical dressings a month—a giant undertaking for which volunteers in chapters that have been assigned quotas are responsible. The number may well increase with the coming invasion.

Chilton County Chapter shipped 4 cartons last week. This is a total of 36,000 dressings.

Mrs. Ress Driver has returned from Hills Hospital in Montgomery, after having spent a few days there. We are happy to hear that she is better and hope that she will continue to improve.

Mrs. Bob White spent the day in Agniston Friday visiting relatives and friends. Mr and Mrs White have their little grandson visiting them from Belmont, N. C.

So You're Going to Repair The Barn?

THAT'S JUST WHAT WAR BONDS ARE FOR!

EVERYBODY'S PLANNING. Recent farm surveys show that a majority of the people who own their own farms are ready, the minute war ends, to build and repair barns and buildings and make many other improvements. Tenants, too, are on the lookout for farms of their own to build on in the post-war period. This is going to take many millions of dollars. Wise farmers have been saving the money for these purposes. Many of them have saved it in War Bonds—and many more are on their way.

HOW TO GET READY. You probably have many places on the farm to put money when materials and machinery and equipment are again available—if you have the money! So why not start right now? Step up your savings by buying War Bonds—the best and safest way to invest for future needs.

WHEN THE BOYS COME HOME. Your youngest in service is doing a man's job now—and he expects to do a man's job when he gets home again. But he won't be happy with run-down buildings and inefficient equipment. So that's another good reason for stepping up your purchase of War Bonds. You're backing him up in his fight to preserve our country, and at the same time preparing for the kind of home he wants to come back to.

YOU NEVER GET LESS THAN YOU LEND! And you can get ½ more than you invest. When held 10 years, Series E War Bonds yield 2.9% interest compounded semi-annually. You get back $4 for every $3.

Of course, no one should cash a Bond unless he has to; but if an emergency comes along, Uncle Sam will redeem them in cash—at full purchase price—any time after you've held them 60 days. BUY WAR BONDS!

FACTS ABOUT WAR BONDS (Series E)

You LEND Uncle Sam:	Upon Maturity you get back:
$18.75	$25.00
37.50	50.00
75.00	100.00
375.00	500.00
750.00	1000.00

You can buy War Bonds from your bank, postmaster, or call mail carrier in Production Credit Association

For America's future, for your future, for your children's future—keep on buying WAR BONDS

Vegetable Preparation and Processing (See Directions Below)

Home-grown vegetables are beginning to push their way out of the soil in your own Victory gardens. Perhaps, at first, you will be so delighted that you will want them all for the table, but soon will come the realization that you can "put up" most of your points for next winter if you can then now.

Because pressure cookers are unrated this year, most homemakers will use them for processing vegetables. That is all to the good, for the use of the pressure cooker cuts down processing time, and insures more success in canning if properly used.

Non-Acid Vegetables. Before getting into the fundamentals of canning, we must understand the difference between acid and non-acid vegetables. Tomatoes are in the acid group, but the others, green beans, corn, peas, etc., are all non-acid, and require processing under pressure so that they will keep.

Fresh Vegetables. Selection of the vegetable for canning is one of the important steps. You will be much more careful of what vegetables you put up, if you remember these two points:

1. You get out of your can only what you put into it, i. e., if you can an old, withered ear of corn, then that's what you'll have when you open the jar.
2. Canning, at best, does not improve your food; it only preserves it.

Save Used Fat!

Short Route to Jar. Another old maxim that comes in handy during canning time is the one which goes, "two hours from garden to can." That means that you pick the vegetables from your garden and start canning immediately.

If you buy vegetables, get to the market early, and select those that come in fresh in the morning. Take them home and get them started on their way to the jar as fast as possible.

Incidentally, if you are using your own Victory garden as a supply base for canning vegetables, be sure to pick them in the morning while the morning dew is still on them. Picking them later in the day, after the sun has dried out some of their natural moisture, will not give nearly as good results.

Preparation Required. 1. It's a good idea to wash jars first in hot soapy suds and check them for nicks and cracks. All canning equipment may be prepared a day ahead to have everything in readiness when canning actually begins.

2. Prepare vegetable as directed in chart above. In many cases pre-cooking is recommended to shrink the vegetable and set the color.

Lynn Says:

Are you perplexed as to how many jars you should have for canning? How many will the vegetable make when "put up"? Here are some guides:

Asparagus—12 pounds yields 8 pints, "stalks," or 2 pints "cut."

Beets—1 bushel makes 40 jars, jars cut in thin slices.

Corn—100 ears of Golden Bantam yields about 14 pints.

Greens—1 bushel spinach yields 13 pint jars.

Dandelion greens—1 t... yields 15 pint jars.

String beans—1 bushel yields 17 to 20 quarts.

Tomatoes—1 bushel yields 16 to 20 quarts.

U. S. First to Experiment With Use of Air Troops

Demonstration Arranged by General 'Billy' Mitchell at Kelly Field in 1928; Officers 'Not Impressed.'

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

When the story of the present war is written, the outstanding logistical novelty—the feature which differs most from the methods employed in the movement of fighting units in previous wars—will be the use of airborne troops.

Already the airborne units have been revealed as vital factors in the invasion landings, where they have been used on a scale which dwarfs anything heretofore from the first widely publicized Russian experiments in 1939 to the German air invasion of Crete or the remarkable achievements of smaller units in Burma.

Since it is taken for granted that the United States is going to carry the major burden in the later phase of the invasion, it is a matter of satisfaction to know that the idea of transporting troops by plane was first developed by the United States army.

No one will be surprised that it was that stormy petrel of aviation, Gen. "Billy" Mitchell, whose wings beat so fruitfully against the hidebound brassards of his day, who is credited with arranging the first demonstration of troop transportation by air.

The report of his first fruitless demonstration is buried so deep in the war department files that I can only quote from lay sources concerning it. But it seems that in 1928 ten soldiers parachuted from a Martin bomber onto Kelly field in Texas. With them went machine gun equipment. All landed safely and in three minutes after they hit the ground the machine gun was assembled.

Officers who observed the "stunt" (which is what it was then considered) were not impressed. That is, the American officers. Some Russians were present. They made notes, and some two years later their paratroopers were descending to earth to the "ahs" and "ahs" of American movie audiences.

Germany observed but went to work in silence, with the results which we were made painfully familiar from the days of the invasion of Poland on. But "Billy" Mitchell's idea slumbered in the files and he did not live to see its renaissance here four years ago.

Nazi Refinements

These facts have been forgotten by most people who probably think that the Russian experiments were the first. The Germans picked up and improved the Russians' technique, working out their paratroop plans as a part of the developments of their then peerless Luftwaffe, whose threatening shadow moulded European diplomacy before the outbreak of the war.

The German paratroopers demonstrated their real value in the blitz against the low countries.

It was not until April of 1940 that the United States troop carrier command, which carries troops in transports and gliders, was organized. Now it is larger than the whole of our air force of three years ago.

The airborne force, created a few weeks earlier, is now numbered in entire divisions, as we know from German reports, and includes tens of thousands of fighting men and technical personnel.

The British paratroopers were used effectively as far back as 1942 and they made the first contact with German troops in North Africa in November of the same year.

The U. S. airborne forces are made up of both paratroop and glider forces. They are separate from the troop carrier command which transports them, just as the foot soldier is separate from the seaman who carries him from shore to shore.

The paratroopers (a part of the airborne forces) alone serve frequently as aerial commandos, seizing enemy airports of suitable terrain where the troop transports or glider planes cannot yet land.

The Paratroopers

When operations require large numbers of men and more complicated equipment, such as those performed back of the shore defenses and even much farther inland in France, paratroopers are supplemented by the troops landed from transports and gliders. This frequently means that the paratrooper must capture or prepare air strips for this purpose.

Allied airborne troops were used effectively in the landing in Sicily, where General Montgomery said they shortened the campaign by at least a week. They also proved of great value in New Guinea.

The full extent of their performance in the invasion of Europe has yet to be revealed, but we have General Eisenhower's own word as to their value and his praise has been unstinted.

The chief function of the soldier of the air until recently has been the destruction of enemy communications and installations such as ammunition and supply dumps, dynamiting bridges and wrecking railway junctions behind the lines. Now they are prepared to engage the enemy in large-scale operations which reached major proportions for the first time in France. Preceding the Normandy landings, one of their jobs was to prevent destruction of certain points like bridges and other installations which the troops advancing from the beachhead wanted to make use of. In this case, they had to take the bridges from the enemy defenders and then hold them against counter attacks of the local reserves, armed with tanks and field artillery, until their own advancing ground troops or air reinforcements arrived.

Such action is possible because jeeps, one-ton trailers, howitzers, heavy and light calibre machine guns, mortars, mines, and other equipment including food, medical supplies, water, and of course ammunition, can be transported by the troop carrier command. The troops have food and ammunition sufficient for about three days sustenance without replenishment.

The pilots of the troop carriers are trained under most difficult conditions and must have an extra share of courage and intelligence. They fly slowly and about their only escape from the speedy fighters is to skim the hilltops, dodge the haystacks, keep as low as possible in valleys, or between obstacles like trees and buildings which serve as protection.

Glider Pilot's Job
Although the glider pilot has no engine to worry about, he must know meteorology, navigation, aerial reconnaissance, photography, maintenance and radio communication. He must learn to land quickly and near trees or other obstacles where the troops can take cover; one means of making a quick landing is purposely to snag a wing on a tree trunk or the bottom of the plane on rocks. The men inside are protected by a steel framework.

And then when the pilot lands, all he has to do is fight his way back to his own lines with the rest of his one-time passengers. Like them, he has to know all the commando knows.

Some of the tales which have already gone into the growing saga of the airborne forces are marvelous. One is told of an adventure which took place early in the invasion of France.

A glider, its towline cut, was suddenly left in the dark of the moon. Some light is necessary for a landing, of course. In the period when the moon was clouded, there was nothing for the pilot to do but to keep on descending. He did and landed unexpectedly but on very smooth terrain. The troops quickly debouched and sought cover as they are trained to do. But there was no cover. They found they were on the wide, flat roof of a building. They found an entrance through the roof and cautiously crept down the stairs. To their surprise, they discovered they were in a building full of German soldiers and which housed the German headquarters for that area. But the Americans were armed, and needless to say the Germans were somewhat surprised. They surrendered without much trouble.

However, it is not always as easy as that and since it is an axiom of military history that for every new arm of offense, an arm of defense is developed, we may expect fresh obstacles to be created which these youngest sons of Mars will have to meet as they grow older.

Get TRIPLE BRACED TRACTION BARS AT No Extra Cost and YOU WILL GET EXTRA TRACTION, BETTER CLEANING and LONGER LIFE, TOO!

EVERY FARMER KNOWS an unbraced corner fence post leans with the pull of the wire, weakening the entire fence.

Unbraced tread bars on tractor tires, likewise bend and weaken under heavy loads. They slip, lose traction, lose time and wear rapidly.

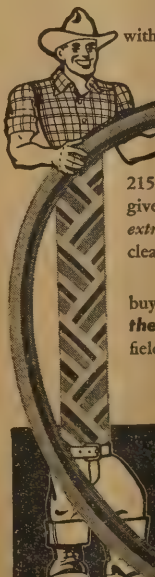

Traction bars on Firestone Ground Grip tires are triple-braced and have up to 215 inches of extra bar length per tractor. That gives them extra strength, extra pulling power and extra long life. And triple-braced traction bars clean better, too.

If you want tires that pull better longer buy Ground Grips—the tires made by Firestone, the pioneer and pacemaker in the farm tire field.

County Health Officer Advises About Rabies

At this time of year, through association in the minds of people, we think of the so-called mad-dogs. But the facts are, that rabies occurs in almost any month in the year. Very unfortunately for people after the rabid dog, fox, cow or even cat has developed rabies they are real public menaces, and if humans are bitten by the rabid animal without the so-called prophylactic treatment which should begin immediately, when the fact that the rabid animal has broken their skin has been established there is very little hope for saving one's life. The truth of the matter is that the greatest danger in this county is from dogs that have no home and no one to care for them. For the small fee of 75c a dog can be saved from his disease. If the dog has no one to pay this fee the rabies inspector is doing the community a favor to prevent his being a public health liability but any dog which has a master I am certain that master has 75c worth of love for his dog.

Now just a word concerning what to do if you or any of your loved ones suspect that you have been bitten by a rabid animal. Do not lose your head and kill the dog or other animal. Have the dog penned up in a house or pen or any place where he can be observed daily. If the dog is rabid he will become ill and die within ten days, as a rule. Communicate with the Health Department and we will advise that you sever the dog's head and put it in a container and pack the container in ice. Usually a one-gallon molasses can will hold a dog head and a fifty pound lard can will hold the molasses can. Your Health Department will be glad to get the head to the State Laboratory and get an immediate report whether or not the dog has rabies! Free of charge we will furnish your family physician the 14 treatments taken daily to prevent rabies from developing, if the laboratory report shows positive. Of course the wound made by the dog should be treated as any other break in the skin. In the papers you will see where the rabies inspector will be from time to time and I urge that you meet him promptly in order that he can save your dog and in turn protect your family from this dreaded disease.—E. M. Moore, M. D., Health Officer.

JEMISON NEWS

Mr. and Mrs. Archie White and little daughter of Montgomery spent last week in Jemison visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. G. White. Archie left for service June 22.

Mrs. Tom McConnell of Jemison recently returned from New Orleans where she attended the graduation exercises of her daughter, Mrs. Mayme McConnell Higgins.

Mrs. Higgins was the first speaker on the program quoting the 35th Chapter of Isaiah She had the privilege of broadcasting from the Radio Stations in that city, and was awarded a certificate showing that she gave the school news periodically for the year on one station.

She formerly attended Jemison High School but finished at Joseph Kohn High School, New Orleans with a class of 56 girls. Her husband is employed by the L & N Railroad in New Orleans.

POPLAR SPRINGS

Rev. Jodie Thomas will preach at Poplar Springs Church Sunday night July 2nd after BYPU. Everyone is invited to attend.

JEMISON TOPS QUOTA

COUNTY LAGGING

Jemison was first in the County to top its Fifth War Loan quota. With a quota of $9,000 the citizens of that community have already gone over the $11,000 mark.

The County as a whole is badly behind on their E-Bond quota. With only a week to go a little more than 30 percent of the $265,000 has been bought.

BARBECUE AT VERMONT

Plenty cold drinks, ice cream and dinner plates served at 50c each. Clanton baseball team will play Vermont beginning at 9 o'clock. From 11 to 12 string band music will be played.

In the afternoon Maplesville and Plantersville will also play at Vermont. West Cethron and Vermont play a game following.

Everyone is invited to come down that day. We are sure you will enjoy yourselves.

COMMUNITY CANNING PLANT BEING BUILT AT CHILTON COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL

The County Board of Education is building a community canning plant in connection with the vocational agriculture and home economics departments at the Chilton County High School. The plant is being built thru co-operative arrangements between the Board of Education and the Federal Government. The Local Board is providing the building and the Federal Government is providing all equipment necessary for a modern, complete canning center.

The plant will be used to teach courses in canning and food preservation. It will also be available to citizens of the county wishing to can food of any kind. Any person in the county can carry foods of any kind to the plant and use the modern equipment and machinery for canning them.

The plant is expected to be in operation by early fall. Special equipment for canning all types of food will be available. Full information regarding the operation of the plant will be published later.

CLANTON COLORED CHURCH AND SOCIAL NEWS

The week of June 13, 1944 the Women's State Convention met at the First Baptist Church in Fairfield.

Those attending from Clanton were Messrs L. M. Draper, D. B. Jones, Emma Benjamin, Mattie Lee Dorfe, Ellena White and Martha Moore. A group of children to represent the Sunbeam Band and Junior Mission were Kathryn Bryan, Walter Jean Burt, Helen and Joe Bryan and Betty Jean Bryan. All reported a pleasant trip and a grand meeting. Mr. W. A. Dickerson, Superintendent of the Union Baptist Church Sunday School left June 20th to attend the National Baptist Sunday School and B. T. U. Congress which were held in Birmingham. He reported a very successful meeting.

Saturday night a group surprised Mrs. Ellen White with a birthday party at her home. When they returned home after the stores closed we scared them as well as surprised them when they opened the door and turned on the light the group sang happy birthday. Delicious punch and ice cream and cookies were served. She received many useful gifts.

The Craft Members of Lodge No. 500 of Clanton, made a trip to new Salem Church at Jones, Ala. where they celebrated St. Johns Day with the brothers there. The Bus also cars were filled with men and women, all reported a pleasant trip. Mr. W. A. Dickerson is Worshipful Master.

Union Baptist Sunday School was fine on Sunday with a very nice attendance. The pastor preached a very wonderful sermon at 11 o'clock and on Sunday night a visiting preacher, Rev. J. C. Henderson of Welch, Va. preached a wonderful sermon which was enjoyed by all. We also had other out of town visitors.

We are asking all colored people to buy Bonds. Help us reach our quota. We will be on the Partisan corner every Saturday.

July Is Time Start Fall Garden Program

W. A. Ruffin, extension entomologist, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, offers Alabama farmers the following garden reminders for July:

The fall crop of tomatoes should be set in the garden this month. The Rutgers variety is best for the fall planting. Planting 4 to 6 seed in hills where the plants are to grow is a good way to start the fall crop of tomatoes.

Now is the time to prepare the soil for the fall garden. Break the ground with a turning plow and run a harrow over it two or three times before planting.

Don't forget the strawberry bed. Clean out all weeds and grass and fertilize with a complete fertilizer. Strawberry beds that are two or more years old should be cultivated with a plow. Plants should be thinned and left in rows about 18 inches apart.

THIRTEEN DAY CAMP MEETING JULY 4-16

Rev. and Mrs. Ira Burke will be hosts for the Annual Camp Meeting to be held on the grounds of the Shield of Faith Institute (Located at the former Thomson Hotel) which will begin next Tuesday evening, July 4th, at 8 o'clock.

Rev. and Mrs. Doyle Hart of Dallas, Texas, widely known musical Evangelists will direct the music throughout the Camp meeting; and will conduct special children's Services each evening at 7 o'clock.

Dr. Jack Frost, renowned lecturer and Bible Teacher will head the Bible Classes each morning throughout the Camp meeting. O. timely Bible truths, assisted by other able teachers. All ministers and Christian workers will be interested in this short thirteen day course. Diplomas will be awarded.

Each afternoon at 2:30 will be a spiritual highlight of the Camp meeting, with visiting ministers from various states bringing messages.

The 8 o'clock evangelistic message will be delivered by Rev. Dick Chaney, Kansas City, Mo., one time famous boxer, now an outstanding campmeeting speaker. This evening service will be a combined effort of all attending preachers and christian workers to make this Camp meeting one long to be remembered in the lives of the people of Clanton and vicinity.

Our own beloved Brother Guy Shields, founder of the Shield of Faith Institute, president of the Fundamental Christian Association will also be speaking and serve as Program Director.

Everyone is especially invited to attend any or all of these services. Plan your work now, so attending will be possible.

CLANTON SECOND BAPTIST

We had good services this past Lord's Day but we still need you that are residents of our community to come out and help us in our work.

Our Sunday School is improving daily so is our worship attendance. We wish to make a plea to our sister churches that are not having fulltime service. Come over and help us. We need a choir leader very bad, so the Sunday's that you don't have services come over and help us. We wish to thank each and every member of our community who helped in the shower to the Hayes family. It was a tremendous success. We wish also to thank the First Baptist Church and their janitor for use of their Baptistry.—L. F. Miller, pastor.

ARCHIE'S CHAPEL

Mr. Dave Clark will preach at Archie's Chapel this week-end. Saturday night at 8. Sunday 11 a. m. Sunday School at 10 o'clock.

The revival will begin Sunday night and last for two weeks meeting only at night.

A vacation Bible School will be held during the day for the children and young people. The first week it will be held in the home of Mrs. Wade Glass.

HIGHLAND

Last Sunday and Sunday night was our regular preaching days. Bro. Carroll delivered two wonderful messages with good attendance at both services.

Our revival will begin the week following the Fourth Sunday in July. Let us pray for a good revival. There will be a cemetery cleaning here Wednesday, July 19. All who are interested please bring tools on that day.

We are glad to have H. W. Culp visiting home again after being overseas about 14 months. May we pray for our boys that they all may soon be back with us again.

Remember Sunday School each Sunday at 10 o'clock a. m.

STANTON BAPTIST CHURCH

We will begin a B. T. U. Training Course at the Stanton Baptist Church next Monday night at 8:30 o'clock. Miss Sara Lechridge will teach the adults, Miss Nina Tyler will teach the Intermediates and Mrs. O. F. Davenport will have charge of the Juniors.

We will try to operate trucks to accommodate those who have no conveyance. We ask the cooperation of all.

Our revival will begin on the Third Sunday in July with Rev. J. O. Daily of Thorby doing the preaching. Bro. Daily is a good preacher and you will enjoy him. To have a good revival we must have the leadership of the Holy Spirit. Without Him we can do nothing. Let's plan to have Him with us also.—R. W. Stuckey, pastor.

Isabella News

Bro. Stuckey, cur pastor at Mulberry, gave us two very inspiring sermons Sunday and both services were well attended.

We wish to announce that the all-day service at Mulberry Sunday July 9, will not be a Homecoming but a day of world wide Missions. We are writing all churches to come and enjoy the day with us. Sunday School will start at 10 o'clock and Mission Service at 11.

We are expecting a large crowd to be with us at Mulberry July 9, all day. The Committee to arrange for the day are as follows: Trucking committee W. T. Tucker, Vinson Veazey, W. T. White, Max Hayes and Tommie Fox. Entertainment: Mr. and Mrs. Ernest (Pop) Leroy and Mrs. L. S. Craft. Building tables: J. H. Wells, Tommie Nix and Congor Cummings. Cleaning grounds: O. F. Davenport, W. C. Grooms and J. L. Jones.

We hope to have things ready that all will enjoy this great Missionary day and get great blessings from hearing these missionaries from China.

We all are very proud of our new well at Mulberry Church.

Lets don't forget the ground and cemetery cleaning at Mulberry July 6th. Everyone come also the WMS monthly meeting will meet that day too.

Farmers Urged To Attend County Wide Meeting

All Chilton County tractor operators are invited to attend a terracing meeting at the Courthouse in Clanton at 9:30 Wednesday, June 28. This is the first phase of the 1944 terracing program.

According to the 1944 A. A. A. Conservation Program, all Chilton County farmers have an unlimited allowance for standard terrace construction. All tractor operators having equipment necessary to construct standard terraces will be offered contract through which they can construct farmers terraces and be paid for same by the AAA.

Farmers desiring terraces constructed under the Purchase Order Plan will be required to make an application to the AAA and sign a contract agreeing to furnish stakes and other minor aids in getting the terraces constructed and agree to maintain the terrace in accordance with good maintenance practices.

This program offers many farmers that have access to only light hilly drawn equipment an opportunity to get their fields properly terraced without cost to them. Proper terracing is the first step in a sound soil building program and this Purchase Order Plan may not be available as early other year.

More information on this program will be sent to all farmers as the plan develops.

If additional information is desired contact your County Agent or AAA.

MT. NEBO NEWS

The Youth Fellowship Organization are making a special drive urging people to attend Church. Be sure and attend Sunday School and Youth Fellowship next Sunday and Sunday night. The topic for discussion will be "Realizing America's Christian Heritage."

VOLUME XXII CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1944. NUMBER 27

Church School Of Missions At Baptist

As has been customary for many years and as has been announced at the recent association meetings, the Baptist Church of Clanton and the Clanton Baptist Association plan to conduct a School of Missions (previously called the Mission Institute) at the Clanton Baptist Church July 11-12.

Such an undertaking has required much time and effort both in making adequate plans and securing capable teachers and outstanding missionary speakers. This announcement appeals to you as key men and women in your churches to see to it that these meetings are properly advertised in your communities, so that all ages may benefit by the wealth of Christian leadership provided for the good of all during this School of Missions.

Urge your people to avail themselves of this rich experience, and let nothing conflict with these dates, July 11-12. Set these two days aside as "Holy unto the Lord." Plan to leave your cars and trucks both days, so that no one need be left behind. Plan carefully in advance how you may save up your gasoline, so that the arch-enemy of God may not try to convince anyone that there is no time or gasoline these days for God and His program. This war should be taught as that it is poor economy to sacrifice spiritual values for material. If ever there was a time when Christian people needed to draw together, to be ended with His power, and to catch a vision of service, it is now.

The stream-lined two-day program has been planned to run from 9:30 a. m. until 3:30 p. m. each day. We are convinced that the necessary teachers and missionary speakers could not have been secured had it not been for the prayers of Christian people and the goodness of God. We are happy to tell you that Dr. J. Toy Williams of Chilton County and China and Rev. C. A. Brantley, missionary of the Home Mission Board in New Orleans, are expected to bring us our inspirational missionary messages.

Mr. Mable Williams Woodward has agreed to conduct a series of devotional messages at the beginning of each session, both morning and afternoon.

Mission Study classes for each age group will be conducted by outstanding leaders in our State. We are truly grateful for their unselfish and consecrated leadership.

Mission Study text books will be on sale for all age groups. This will be a wonderful opportunity to secure fine Christian literature for our home libraries.

The basement of the church will be set aside for use during the lunch hour. Iced tea will be provided for everyone by the W. M. S. of the Clanton Church. It has been suggested that we each bring our own individual lunches, as a patriotic measure, so that there will be the least possible amount of food wasted. The traveling expenses of our guest speakers and teaching staff will be taken care of by a free-will offering.

Continue to work and pray in your churches and communities to the end that everyone, both young and old, may be informed, and everyone enlisted in this great program of missionary education. God is counting on you. May we all, in the deathless words of William Carey "Expect great things of God, attempt great things for God."

HEALTH COMMENT

By Dr. E. M. Moore COUNTY HEALTH OFFICER

HOW TO GET A BIRTH CERTIFICATE

It has become a vast task to some people to prove that they were born even though they present themselves to the "higher ups". It has cost some people as much as $50 to secure such a certificate; but at the Health Department the cost would not be more than 50c. If these persons had known how simple it is to get a certificate they might save some time and expense.

If you were born in Alabama since 1908 you may have a birth certificate on file at the Bureau of Vital Statistics in the State Department Health. If you were born prior to that time then you will have to file a delayed birth certificate.

Forms for a delayed birth certificate are available at all times at your County Health Department. Information required on the "yellow form" as it has come to be known, is your name, place of birth and date of birth the mother and father's name and their places of birth. This form has to be signed by the applicant before a Notary Public. If either parent or a close relative is available, if not then some other responsible person must make an affidavit stating that they are acquainted with the facts of the birth of the applicant.

After this is done at least two pieces of supporting evidence must be produced. There is a wide range here. The piece of evidence must include the applicant's name, place of birth and date of birth. It is not necessary to show the parent's name.

Some of the kinds of documents which may be used are as follows:

1. A baptismal certificate provided it states the facts of the birth.
 2. A certified copy of your application for marriage license. Do not confuse the application with the marriage certificate.
 3. A birth certificate of your child. Two of these are sufficient provided they state the facts correctly.
 4. A school record made by the custodian of records. More than one of these if available is sufficient.
 5. Army discharge papers of World War I if they contain date of birth or age and place of birth.
 6. A statement from the doctor or mid-wife who attended the birth.
 7. An employment record if it has the necessary facts.
 8. An application for insurance. There is usually a photostatic copy of the application attached to the policy that has the necessary information. This document is acceptable even though the policy is not in force. More than one of these is acceptable.
 9. A Bible record may be used. If this is desired take your family Bible to a Notary Public and have an affidavit made stating the publisher and date of publication together with the place and date of birth of the applicant.
- All documents used as supporting evidence must agree on the facts of the birth. Records giving your age in place of your birth date must show the date the record was made.
- If after you have exhausted all of these avenues of approach to a birth certificate, you have not succeeded

WHERE DO YOU STAND?

The boy who evades the draft is forever known to the world as a slacker.

Why? Because he has failed to answer the call of his country. The soldier who leaves the Army without a discharge is forever branded a deserter. He will be branded with an ugly mark for the remainder of his life.

All of us have answered the call of our country and have accepted a definite responsibility in the sale of War Bonds. All of us know that this is the crucial hour on the battle front. We know too that our best efforts are desperately needed. Our boys need our faith, our confidence, and our full support.

Is it unreasonable that as much is expected of us as is expected of the men and women in uniform? Can you think of any good sound reason for our not doing our home-front job with the same determination as our fighting forces do their job?

We are not being asked to leave the peace and quiet of our homes and loved ones. We are not being asked to shoulder a gun and face the enemy at foreign battle fields—to die if need be for the sake of our country. We are not being asked to sleep in fox holes, crawl through mire, water mud, filth and over the dead and mangled bodies of our buddies. No—we are being asked to do a job which is simple and carries with it no danger. Yet—there are a few of us who are making a miserable failure simply because we are not trying! The peace and quiet of our homes, offices, shops and fields—yes, our daily routine is affording us too much pleasure!

Our fighting forces NEED assurance of our faith, confidence, and support of them and the cause for which they are so courageously fighting. The report of our sales in the Fifth War Loan SHOULD give them this assurance.

THEY'RE BLAZING A PATH OF GLORY! THEY'RE ON THE MARCH TO VICTORY! Let us not be slackers. Let us not be deserters. LET'S JOIN OUR FIGHTING FORCES!

WHERE THEY ARE AND HOW THEY ARE

Pfc. John M. Duke, assigned to the 786th Military Police Battalion, Governors Island, N. Y., has been awarded the Good Conduct Medal, it has been announced by Headquarters, Eastern Defense Command, Governors Island.

Private Duke was inducted into the Army in February, 1942, at Ft. McClellan, Ala., and served at Camp Maxie, Texas, and Elizabeth, N. J. before going to his present post at Governors Island, N. Y.

His parents are Mr and Mrs Ben Duke, of Clanton Route 4.

George Douglas Smith, 21, son of Mr James W. Smith of RFD 5, won his navy "Wings of Gold" and was commissioned an Ensign in the Naval Reserve last week following completion of the prescribed flight training course at the Naval Air Training Center, Pensacola, Fla., the "Annapolis of the Air."

Having been designated a Naval Aviator, Ensign Smith will go on active duty at one of the Navy's air operational training centers before being assigned to a combat zone. Prior to entering the Naval service, he attended API for two years where he was a member of the varsity basketball and baseball teams.

Among those graduating from an intensive course of Basic Engineering training at recent Service Schools exercises at Great Lakes, Ill., was Ernest M. McCary, 18, son of Mr and Mrs E. E. McCary, of Rt. 1, Maplesville, Ala.

This Bluejacket was selected for his specialized training on the basis of his recruit training aptitudes test scores. Graduated from the twenty specialized courses taught at the Service School are sent to sea, to shore then go to the Probate Office at the Court House and explain your situation. For a cost of less than $400 the Probate Judge will help you get a delayed birth certificate through his office.

JUNIOR RECEIVES HONORS AT UNIVERSITY GRADUATION

Miss Bernice Lowe was one of the underclassmen awarded honors at graduation on June 3, for maintaining a 2.6 or above average for the entire year at the University of Alabama. Miss Lowe completed her junior year with a straight "A" record for the 3 quarters. During her junior year she was elected to the membership of Triangle, a senior women's honorary organization, and to Alpha Kappa Delta, the national honorary socialized fraternity. Miss Lowe is a sociology and English major.

IMPORTANT MEETING OF W. M. U. INSTITUTE

Let me urge you to attend the W. M. U. Institute at the Clanton Baptist Church the 11th and 12th inst.

In my opinion we could not do a better thing than to attend these services and receive the spiritual uplift that we so much need at this time. It will broaden our vision and deepen our interest in our Lord's work.

Let me suggest that Churches with revivals in progress dispense with their morning service and come to these two days services. I think it will be profitable.—G. G. Williams.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Left-over paint will keep in good condition for a long time if covered with melted paraffin.

Wooden spoons do not get hot readily and are good for stirring hot foods on the kitchen stove.

Cutting crusts from bread for sandwiches with a pair of scissors rather than a knife takes less time.

Time will be saved when the housewife is ironing if she will stick safety pins on spots that need mending later.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

GOP Approves Foreign Program But Shuns World Super-State; Allies Strike Anew in France

Released by Western Newspaper Union
(EDITOR'S NOTE: While opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

France—Lighter moment in Doughboys' drive on Cherbourg was a serving of glass of wine from French peasantry.

EUROPE: British Strike

Moving behind Gen. Bernard L. Montgomery's thunderous bargains laid down by heavy artillery massed a few yards against the front pressed forward in an enveloping attack against the Nazi defense pivot of Caen on the east side of the French beachhead, while at Cherbourg to the northwest, U. S. forces worked feverishly to clear the big port for Allied use.

Unable to storm Caen in frontal assaults, Montgomery threw out a long pincer to the west of the town, in an attempt to work around it to the rear. As the nerve-center of their resistance on this sector of the battlefield, the Germans used Caen as a base for parrying British thrusts to the interior.

Having captured Cherbourg after bitter hand-to-hand fighting against fanatical German resistance, Allied forces sought to restore the city's shattered harbor facilities to enable the convenient unloading of supplies instead of the perilous and laborious procedure of landing them on the beaches.

Russia

With four armies in the field pressing the drive, the Reds rooted out the German foothold in White Russia and ironed out the big Nazi bulge pointed at Moscow in the north.

In Finland, the Reds continued to advance in the lake country on the southeast, and cleared additional sections of the Murmansk and Leningrad railroad, over which supplies from the Allies could be shipped from the Barents sea.

Using U. S. equipment, the Reds threw the full weight of their power against German strongholds on the White Russian front, forcing the Nazis to evacuate their fortresses or risk encirclement from the rear.

Italy

The Allied advance up the Italian peninsula continued, with the Germans offering spotty rear-guard resistance as the main body of their forces fell back to prepared defense lines, guarding the rich industrial and agricultural plains in the north.

In putting up stubborn rear-guard action wherever the terrain was suitable for delaying tactics, the Nazis reportedly aimed to kill as much time as possible so as to prevent the Allies from launching a major attack against the new defense line this summer.

In driving up the western coast of Italy, the Allies came into possession of a number of ports, which can be used for supplying their advancing armies from the sea, thus saving much laborious transshipment over the mountainous terrain.

RECONSTRUCTION: Plan to Aid Reds

With estimates that Russia will be in need of 3 or 4 billion dollars of equipment for the reconstruction of factories, power houses, transportation services and the like to repair damage, U. S. officials reported they are drawing up plans for U. S. supply of materials on credit.

Under the plan of extension of U. S. credit, the chief problem concerns the Russian form of repayment, with suggestions that repayment be made in strategic materials.

On tour of Russia reportedly to find out what the Reds will be in the postwar market for, Eric Johnston, president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, recently declared that Soviet purchases from this country will run into the billions of dollars.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

MAKE HAY: Members of the 24th infantry regiment of the Massachusetts national guard were engaged in bayonet drill in a hayfield near Hingham. Suddenly an officer boomed over the loud speaker: "The lady who leased this drill field to the state wishes to leave immediately so she can begin having before the rain starts." The soldiers evacuated swiftly.

GOP: 1944 Platform

Cooperative action with other self-determining nations to preserve world peace, protective tariffs and a guarantee of labor's bargaining rights highlight the platform on which the Republican party will go to the people in 1944, under the leadership of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York.

Adopted by the 1,857 sweltering delegates to the GOP's 23rd national convention held in Chicago during a steaming heat wave, the platform's foreign policy plank frankly disavowed any connection with a world super-state.

In advocating protective tariffs, the platform sought to prevent the dumping of cheap foreign goods or even lend-lease material on the U. S. market after the war, and favored reciprocal trade agreements when mutually beneficial and subject to congressional ratification. The principle of an "American market price" to the farmer was recognized, and a crop adjustment program during periods of abnormal surpluses advocated.

Other planks in the platform include government cooperation in financing soil conservation programs; limitation of the presidential tenure to two four year terms; and assurance of free enterprise by government's withdrawal from business; reductions in individual and corporation taxes after the war consistent with costs of government, and government repayment of debt obligations.

FARM MACHINERY: Output Lags

Despite an improvement over preceding months, output of farm machinery continued to lag in May, with production 10.7 per cent behind schedule.

Although War Production Czar Donald Nelson declared that the $68,595,000 farm machinery program for the year ending last month would be "substantially achieved," production of harvesting equipment was 30.5 per cent behind at the end of May and output of combines lagged 30 per cent.

Production of haying machines was 23.3 per cent behind schedule, barnyard equipment 20.9 per cent behind, and farm poultry devices 9.2 per cent behind.

On the other side of the ledger, production of irrigation equipment was 12 per cent ahead of schedule and wheel type tractors 5.3 per cent over.

PACIFIC: Bomb Strongholds

While U. S. troops continued to overrun Saipan island in the Marianas in Japan's inner ring of defenses, American airmen ranged the Pacific to bombard other enemy strongholds.

With the main Jap fleet having withdrawn to the Philippines to lick the wounds incurred in its short brush with U. S. forces, American ships rode boldly at anchor in Magicienne bay at Saipan, while the ground troops slowly compressed some 20,000 defending Nipponese on the northern sector of the island and placed the capital of Garapan under heavy fire.

While U. S. naval and army fliers cooperated in blasting the Marshall and Caroline islands in the southwest Pacific, other U. S. airmen bombed the Japs' northern outposts of Paramushiro and Shimushu in the Kuriles.

WHISKY: The 30-day "holiday" during which distillers will be allowed by the WPB to make whisky instead of industrial alcohol will not result in so much liquor as anticipated, a spokesman for the industry said. Shortage of bottles, cartons and barrels will limit the output to about 15,000,000 gallons, which is called about a month's supply at present demand.

AGRICULTURE: Less Pigs

With the department of agriculture predicting a pig crop of 87,925,000 in 1944, production was expected to dip 22 per cent below 1943 and 16 per cent under 1942.

With spring production down to 55,925,000 pigs as compared with 73,911,000 last year, the fall crop was expected to dip to 32,000,000 as against 47,931,000 in 1942.

Although anticipating a drop in spring production, the government only expected a 16 per cent decrease instead of the actual figure of 24 per cent. In sizing up the fall crop, the government looked for the smallest production in four years, and the second lowest since 1938.

Feed Wheat

With sales of feed wheat by the Commodity Credit corporation continuing the upward trend begun several months ago, CCC stocks fell to 83,721,000 bushels of wheat. Total sales since July, 1943, approximate 315,392,000 lbs. figures and those of Still outstanding on the 1943 farm-stored loan programs, the CCC has 15,326,000 bushels of wheat, 6,369,000 bushels of corn, 317,000 bushels of flaxseed, and 11,000 bushels of grain sorghums.

Total CCC purchases since July 1, 1943, now stand at 129,583,000 bushels from Canada, 86,487,000 bushels from Canada, 86,487,000 bushels from the States, and 768,000 from Argentina.

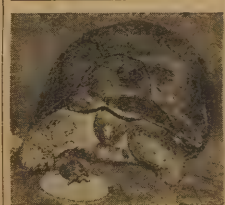

CIO: Living Costs

In an attack aimed at the War Labor board's "Little Steel" wage policy limiting raises to 15 per cent of the January, 1941, level, the CIO declared that living costs have risen 45 per cent since then and not just 23 per cent as estimated by the U. S. bureau of labor statistics.

The CIO attributed the difference between its figures and those of the BLS to the latter's failure to consider quality deterioration of goods; disappearance of low-priced items; decline in special and week-end sales; greater increases in restaurant prices than in the cost of food consumed at home; greater increases in prices of all foods than in the 61 sample foods selected by the BLS; forced shifts to higher cost stores; greater increase in rents for furnished quarters, and enforced purchase or rental of higher priced homes.

According to the CIO, the cost of food has risen 71 per cent; clothing, 76 per cent; home furnishings, 63 per cent; rent, 15 per cent; fuel, 14 per cent, and miscellaneous items, 22 per cent.

Giant Turtle

Born December 7, 1941, this small turtle in the Bronx zoo in New York has long way to go to match size of its grand parent from Galapagos island situated in the Pacific ocean below Panama.

FHA Increases Reserves

With the close of the government fiscal year on June 30, the Federal Housing administration finished its 10th year of operations. The agency was intended to finance mortgages on small homes. As it ends the decade, it has $81,000,000 in reserves after paying all expenses out of earnings.

Income for 1943 was $26,574,000. Expenses of $11,102,000 were paid from this sum. An original grant of $10,000,000 made by congress in 1934 to meet possible losses is still intact, officials stated. Another $10,000,000 appropriated in 1941 to cover possible losses on war housing programs is almost untouched. As a result of the favorable operating record, insurance funds were increased by $15,472,000 in 1943, the money representing the difference between income and operating expenses.

The FHA has insured mortgage loans to 1,055,000 small homes during its existence. Only 4,047 foreclosures were necessary of this great number. All but 26 of these foreclosed properties have been sold. Losses on these sales have been more than compensated for by prepayment premiums on mortgages paid in full before maturity, it was reported.

About 6,000,000 other home-owners have received some assistance through combined FHA and private loans.

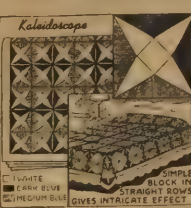

SMALL PLANTS:

With government officials still tussling with the twin problems of manufacturing civilian goods and utilizing the resources of small business, the War Production board approved a plan designed to achieve both ends.

Pressed by Chairman Maury Maverick of the Smaller War Plants corporation, the plan would permit operators with less than 100 employees to turn out civilian goods on the same basis as that of bigger industries.

ON THE HOME FRONT

With RUTH WYETH SPEARS

ON THE center table in most Victorian parlors there was a kaleidoscope. Guests gazed into this after they tired of looking at the family album. Bits of colored glass were reflected in an endless number of intricate patterns in this ingenious device. Very much the same effect was obtained by the method of putting together the simple six-inch quilt block shown here and that is why the pattern was called the kaleidoscope.

This quilt has just the right flavor for today's decorating trends. It will make a stunning spread for your bed either in the colors suggested here or in any other combination that suits your room. The blocks are so easy to piece and are such a convenient size to carry around that they make ideal summer pick-up work.

NOTE—Mrs. Spears has prepared a large sheet with actual size quilt piece patterns for three of her favorite quilts. The Kaleidoscope, the Ann Rutledge and the White Wind are included. This is pattern No. 200 and the price is 15 cents. Address:

SORETONE

Foster D. Sord, Inc., well-known consulting chemists, have just completed a test with a group of men and women suffering from Athlete's Foot. These people were told to use Soretone. At the end of only a ten-day test period, their feet were examined in two ways: 1. Scrapings were taken from the feet and examined by the bacteriologist. 2. Each subject was examined by a physician. We quote from the report:

"After the use of Soretone according to the directions on the label for a period of only ten days, 80.6% of the cases showed clinical improvement of an infection which is most stubborn to control." Improvements were shown in the symptoms of Athlete's Foot—the itching, burning, redness, etc. The report says:

"In our opinion Soretone is of very definite benefit in the treatment of this disease, which is commonly known as 'Athlete's Foot'."

So if Athlete's Foot troubles you, don't temporize with any nasty, devilish, substandard infection. Get Soretone! McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Connecticut.

The Defense of American Freedom is our First Consideration

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

It was Sunday morning and two stewards had slipped away on a fishing trip. Just at eleven o'clock one of them looked at his watch and his conscience spoke to him, and he remarked, "Sam. I do not think that we are treating brother Wilson just right. It is now eleven o'clock and he is going into his pulpit and here we are on the creek a fishing." Sam was not feeling just right about what he was doing, but he replied, "Yes Tom it does look rather bad on us to forsake our pastor on Sunday, but I could not have gone to church today anyway, as my wife is sick." Sam could go fishing on Sunday and leave a sick wife, but he could not go to church and leave her.

We were taking up an offering for Missions and one nice looking lady said, "I can't see interested in missions." I did not wonder at her attitude for she had put nothing into the missionary cause. A man said to me, "Pastor, I am very much interested in that bank on the corner. I have a son who works in it and then I have a thousand dollars on deposit there." The reason why people are there have nothing invested there. Try putting your money into the missionary program of your church and in no time you will be bubbling over with missionary zeal. Then if you have a son or a daughter in the mission field your heart will be there. The more you give the more interest you will have.

There is going to be a supper at the friend's home and late in the afternoon I see Mary or Bethany enter a gift shop. She asked for a box of cement. On looking it over she said, "That will not do. I want something better." She was given a second box that was not good enough. The third was shown her, but still that was not good enough. Then the merchant said, "I have only one more box, but its price is so high that I dare not show it to you." O that's the very box I want," said Mary. "There is nothing too good for my Lord." When we love so that we will give the best to our Christ, then He will have nice things to say about us as He did about Mary.

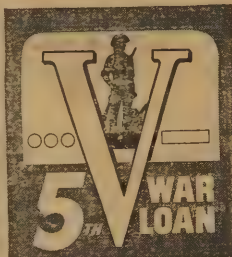

Once a fallen sinner came to me saying, "Once I fell from my Christian experience, and I have been miserable ever since. For ten years I have wanted to come back, but I have never dared to do so." Suppose that you had a daughter who had hurt your heart because of some sin that she had committed, and she should come and beg your pardon, do you think that you would hold her off at arms length for ten years? If you are any kind of father you would have your arms open to receive her at once. In like manner God is holding out his arms to receive every sinner that comes in repentance to Him. It is God who will restore the fallen to His loving embrace, and why stay away and continue to sin, when confession on your part will bring to you the joys of salvation.

Sportsmen do not stop at home and wait for the bird to come to his door to be shot, and neither do fishermen bank their nets in their boats and wait for the fish to jump in. Those who hunt and fish go to the place where birds and fish are to be had and they after them. More and more the church and the ministry are assuming that the souls of men will gather in the pews, and on special effort is being put forth to save the lost. Christ commanded that we go out into the highways and hedges and bring them in. One reason why we have fruitless preachers and churches, is because there is too much tarrying at the temple, waiting for sinners to come and be saved. Men of God, take with you the firing arms of the gospel and the net of salvation and go out after God's game.

Many years ago the king of Abyssinia took an innocent British subject and put him behind the prison bars of Magdala. Britain demanded his release, but king Theodor refused. In less than ten days British soldiers were on their way, and they charged the heights and rescued their countryman. The release of that one man cost the British government twenty five million dollars. As Christians we belong to a better kingdom than the British Empire. God knows our value and He is always seeking our release.

Notes On Kudzu
Management

The rapid growth of established kudzu and its spread under favorable conditions have created a false impression of its hardihood. This has led to its abuse through over-grazing, over-cutting, or cutting at the wrong time. Such abuses, principally over-grazing, have severely damaged stand for a number of our farmers, and in a few cases, totally destroyed the kudzu.

On the other hand properly managed fields have furnished high yields of feed and continued to improve.

Experience indicates that grazing needs to be closely controlled. Grazing should not begin until the plant has developed a complete leaf system—usually mid-May. With this year's late start June 1 would have been early enough. The amount of grazing should then be controlled. If continuous grazing is desired or necessary there should be no very noticeable reduction in the leaf system—that is the amount eaten should be limited to the rate of growth. Heavier grazing over short periods of time should be followed by periods of uninterrupted growth long enough to permit full restoration of the plant's leaf and root system—the more closely grazed the longer the period required for recovery. A period for recovery should occur just before frost to be certain that the root system enters the dormant period in healthy state and so is ready to support vigorous growth the following spring.

Experience also indicates that not more than two cuttings per year may be made without risk of serious damage, and these cuttings should be timed within some limits to fit the growth characteristics of kudzu to get best results. The first cutting of the year should come between June 15 and July 15. How early you may cut will be governed by spring weather conditions, exposure, age of the kudzu and fertility. July 15 is suggested as the latest date for first cutting for the reasons: 1. By that time lower leaves have passed maturity, and further delay will reduce quality of the hay. 2. There is not more than enough time for growth for a second cutting and supplemental grazing in September. The second cutting should be made near time for first frost—the nearer the better so that there is little or no time for new growth to draw plant food from the root system. Light frost which may "nip" vegetation in places will not damage kudzu growing on higher slopes, so do not cut too early. (Should an unexpected heavy frost catch the field it has been grazed, and with little loss in value if the leaves are cleaned up in six weeks.)

Do not cut in August. You will run the risk of worms eating the new leaves growing sufficiently to seriously reduce production for remaining part of year. Do not cut in September. This is not sufficient time for the kudzu to completely restore itself before frost under normal rainfall.

Kudzu is a hardy perennial plant and will do a good job of producing feed and improving your soil, if handled properly. Apply phosphorus 2 to 3 hundred pounds of superphosphate, or 5 or 6 hundred pounds of basic slag, per acre each year, double the amount every other year. Apply potash along with the phosphorus: 50 pounds of muriate per acre annually or 100 pounds in alternate years. Make these applications before frost begins in the spring. And observe the following "don'ts."

Do not graze too early in the spring or too soon after first cutting in summer.

WAR BONDS WILL BUY THEM!

HOW MANY OF THESE WILL YOU NEED? Maybe you can't get new equipment now. The firms that supplied it are doing just what you are—working hard for the war effort. But you're looking forward—and planning ahead—to the day when new catalogs full of up-to-date, improved machinery and materials will make grand reading again.

YOUR PLACE IN THE POSTWAR PICTURE. Owners on farms all over the country are keeping careful check on the places where money will have to be laid out after the war. Bams and buildings that need repairs and paint. Fences to be rebuilt. Improvements for the house. New stock. New tractors. Against these future needs they are putting money away in War Bonds—the safest, easiest way to save. How about you? Are you doing your postwar planning?

YOUR BOY'S PLACE. Don't forget that to those boys of ours in the Services, home's the thing they're fighting for. They yearn to get back to it—and it's up to us to see that it's an even better place than before. War Bonds will hasten the day of Victory; and at maturity the money will come back... for the farm. Make the future a good one... with War Bonds!

YOU NEVER GET LESS THAN YOU LEND! And you can get $\frac{1}{2}$ more than you invest. When held 10 years, Series E War Bonds yield 2.5% interest compounded semi-annually. You get back \$4 for every \$3.

Of course, no one should cash a Bond unless he has to; but if an emergency comes along, Uncle Sam will redeem them in cash—at full purchase price—any time after you've held them 60 days. BUY WAR BONDS!

PRODUCE 8 MORE MILK

The 8 Point Program

THIS IS IMPORTANT TO BOTH OF US, MISTER!

It takes both roughage and concentrated feed for full-capacity milk production—but concentrates are expensive and hard to get this year, ESPECIALLY THOSE HIGH IN PROTEIN... Good legume hay and silage, and good pasturage, would supply much of the needed protein—an abundance of these feeds would also save much of the grain and other concentrates required... So take a tip from me, Mister—For more milk and more profit, grow more legume hay, pasturage and grain.

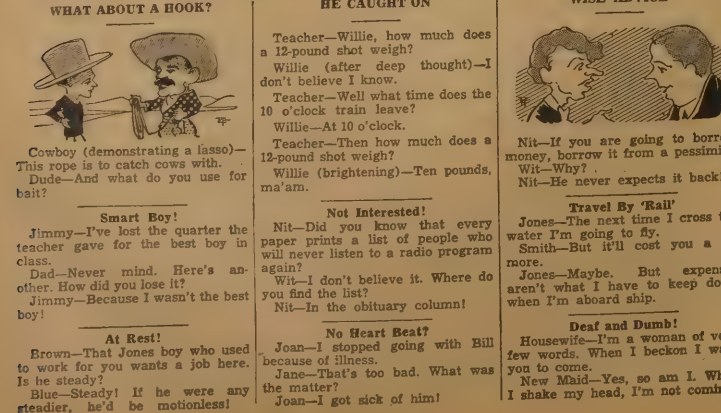

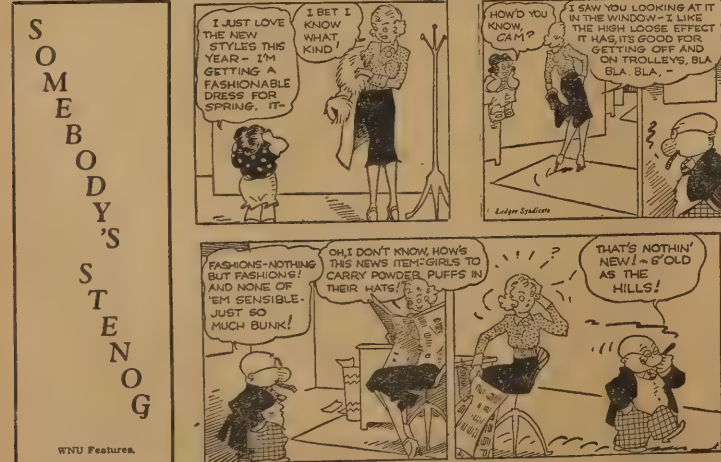

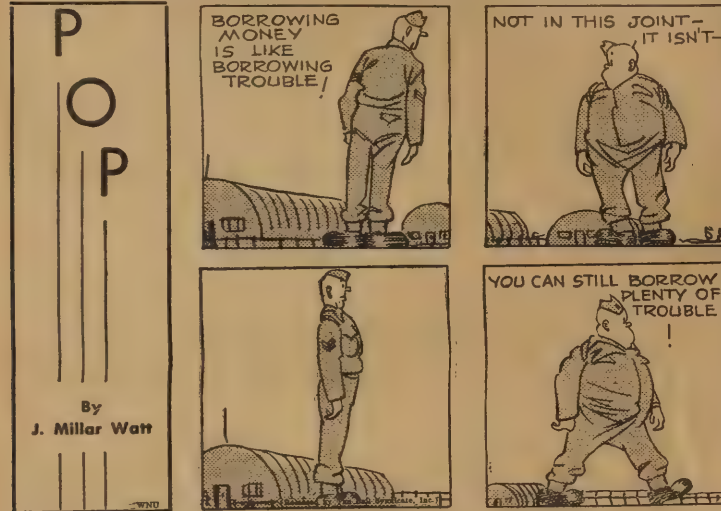

1. Grow more legume hay, pasturage, and grain.
2. Fertilize to increase quantity and quality of feed.
3. Feed to avoid summer milk slump.
4. Feed cows liberally during their dry period.
5. Keep as many cows as feed and labor permit.
6. Market more whole milk whenever possible.
7. Produce good-quality milk and avoid waste.
8. Breed for better herd replacements.

Star Dust
STAGE-SCREEN-RADIO
By VIRGINIA VALE
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

TIME was when Franchot Tone was a prominent member of Hollywood's stay-up-late set. But no more. He's now a leader of the proud parents association. On the set of Benedict Bogeaus' "Dark Waters," Papa Tone exhibits snapshots of Pascal Franchot, age nine months, to Merle Oberon, Thomas Mitchell and Fay Bainter till they cry for help. It was not news when Pascal grabbed the edge of the crib and stood up—and then wouldn't sit down again. Mrs. Tone is Jean Wallace, a beautiful blonde, under contract to Paramount. The Tones bought Robert Montgomery's house when he went into the navy; Mrs. Tone's sister lives with them, and when servants aren't to be had, Tone buckles down and washes dishes.

Jerry Colonna, of the black walrus mustache, will accompany Bob Hope on a tour of Pacific fighting fronts when he finishes work in Republic's "Atlantic City." He's a man of many faces in this one—even appears as an oversized infant with blond curls!

Handsome Bill Johnson, Metro's new white-haired boy, was taken to the coast to act as master of ceremonies for their "Screen Test," on the Mutual network. He won the assignment on the strength of his singing ability, but in Hollywood he was promptly given a major role in Wallace Beery's "Airship Squadron 4." The radio show will serve as a build-up for Bill.

Elizabeth Taylor, the 12-year-old actress who made her screen debut in "Lassie Come Home" and has the lead opposite Mickey Rooney in "National Velvet," will be starred by Metro in "Hold High the Torch." It's the story of a child and a war dog, the third of the Lassie pictures. The role was originally meant for Margaret O'Brien, but Elizabeth has proved talented enough to inherit it.

Following more than 40 tests for the part—some by well-known film stars—Jack L. Warner chose Joan Loring for the coveted role of "Bessie" in "The Corn Is Green." She's 18, was born in Hongkong, and has been in this country only five years. She's acted on numerous radio programs.

Yank soldiers in Italy are becoming patrons of opera, according to reports received by Dr. Frank Black, NBC's general music director. "It started after the first Italian campaigns were successful," he said. "Many cafes were out of bounds, Italian films had no English titles, and the USO entertainers hadn't arrived yet. The boys were desperate for entertainment—so they went to opera, and liked it."

Within 24 hours of the production of his radio theater, "Action in the North Atlantic," Cecil B. DeMille's plea for recruits for the merchant marine brought about an enlistment of 86 men from the listening audience, practically enough to man a Liberty ship.

It's the experience of a lifetime to tag along when Park Johnson is hospitalized. The men love the genial Parks, who has a son in the service. And during the show before the broadcast it's something to see a wounded man and a pretty nurse do at parties, while Johnson stands by with a handful of dollar bills, to reward the winner.

As a result of publicity agent's dream, Basil Rathbone, who's "Sherlock Holmes" in the radio mystery series, was credited with a collector's interest in sculptured hands. He's been the unhappy recipient of hands from fans all over the country.

ODDS AND ENDS—According to present plans, Dick "Henry Aldrich" Jones will make a cameo during the six-week "The Aldrich Family" from the air waves; he hasn't made one since he played the young Mark Twain. . . . Don Woods, star of NBC's "Those Who Love," signed a long-term contract with Warner Bros.; his first picture will be "Roughly Speaking." . . . Ann Sothern gave up a vacation to play the leading role in "Folies Boulevard" dramatization of "Twentieth." . . . Helen Walker's soldier husband has been writing for her lots of pieces of pictures—not of her, but Paulette Goddard, Dorothy Lamour and Veronica Lake.

TAKING POSSESSION OF CANAAN

LESSON TEXT—Joshua 14:6-14; Judges 1:20, 21.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou hast wholly followed the Lord.—Joshua 14:9.

Companions in battle usually means friends and comrades for life. Joshua, of whom we studied last week, had such a friend in Caleb. Together they had faced the crises of life.

Caleb is one of the characters about whom the Bible does not say much, but in every case the word is one revealing high and noble character. Consider such passages as Numbers 13:6, 30, 14:7-9, 24, 30; 26:65, as well as our lesson for today.

The background for our study is the story of Caleb's courageous stand with Joshua when the spies returned from their visit to Canaan, which is related in Numbers 13.

Note first of all Caleb's

I. Perfect Obedience (Josh. 14:6-8).
"I wholly followed the Lord my God." Such a testimony from a man of Caleb is no idle boast, no effort to parade faith and piety before others. In saying it he was repeating what God and Moses had both said about him. In his heart he knew it to be true.

It is God's will for each of His children that they should come to such a place of simple trust and complete obedience that in every circumstance of life they need to know only one thing—God's will, and then in faith to go and do it. It is a life beautiful in its transparent simplicity and powerful in the strength of God Himself.

II. Promised Inheritance (v. 9).
"Surely the land whereon thy feet have trodden shall be thine inheritance." Such was the promise of God through Moses. Forty-five long years had elapsed, but down through this period of wilderness wanderings and the conflict in subduing Canaan the promise had lived in Caleb's heart. He knew it would be fulfilled, and he waited serenely for God's time.

Such also are the promises of God which keep the heart singing in our hours of trial and sorrow, which light up the dark ways, which strengthen the heart of His children. Learn God's promises, cherish them in your heart, expect God to fulfill them.

III. Preserved Strength (vv. 10, 11).

"The Lord hath kept me alive . . . and I am . . . strong." Here was a man kept of God, in full vigor in his eighty-fifth year, like a rock in a changeable sea, like a camp upon a peak in a change of cloud and storm and sun" (Meyer). No doubt there was here what our forefathers liked to call "the longevity of the antediluvians," but apart from that let us recognize that life and strength come from God, and that those who walk with Him for the renewed strength of Psalm 103:5.

An incidental but extremely important lesson we should learn is that God has no age deadline. The church has frequently sinned against Him and against His faithful servants by "shriving" them, by younger men, when they would have brought blessing if the church had encouraged and used them. The writer of these lines is a young man, but he would speak here a word of caution regarding his honored brethren who have gone on before to bear the brunt of the battle.

IV. Powerful Assurance (vv. 12-15; Judg. 1:20-21).

"If . . . the Lord will be with me, then I shall be able." Caleb asked for no easy task. He was ready to go up against the giants of Hebron. Read Deuteronomy 3:11, and you will find that there were men in those days who needed thirteen-foot boots. But Caleb was not afraid. He counted not on his own strength, but on the power of God.

It is significant that, while the other sections of Canaan were only partially conquered, Caleb brought his formidable adversaries into subduer control, so that "the land had rest from war" (v. 15). The verses in Judges 1 indicate that Caleb was as good as his word. He was a doer of duty, God-fearing, 85-year-old. His faith is here contrasted with the shameful unbelief and failure of Israel.

The spiritual application to our day is evident and appropriate. There are giants in the land. Corruption—social and individual—raises its brazen head. Drunkenness and vice leer at us with the impudent suggestion that we cannot control them. There are giants "within us"—greed, selfishness, love of ease, lust, passion, cruelty" (Blake). Are we to do nothing about them? If we are to meet them in the strength of the flesh, we might as well give up. But in the power of God, we are like Caleb. In His name we may do something about it! For His glory.

It is not safe to buy land or to lend money and accept land as security without first investigating the Title of the land. Often there are unpaid mortgages and judgments or other liens, affecting the Title, which an Abstract would set out. Therefore, when buying land or lending money thereon, it is important that an Abstract of Title be furnished. A few dollars spent for an Abstract is cheaper than going ahead and having a law suit a little later on.

3 BILLION MILES ON B. F. GOODRICH ALL SYNTHETIC SILVERTOWNS!

We have limited quantities of these tires and will help you apply for ration certificate if you are eligible

CAR OWNERS have given the answer to "How good are synthetic tires?" By conservative estimate they rolled up 3 BILLION MILES on all-synthetic B. F. Goodrich Silvertowns.

First tires containing synthetic ever sold to U. S. car owners were B. F. Goodrich Good performance reports come from B. F. Goodrich Silvertown users because B. F. Goodrich has had more experience with synthetic rubber than any other manufacturer. No other manufacturer made and sold tires containing synthetic rubber before the war. Before any other manufacturer even STARTED to sell these tires made by B. F. Goodrich had COMPLETED an 80-million-mile road test on the wheels of American cars. That extra experience can save you money, give you extra value in the new all-synthetic tires you buy today.

So—come in and see if you are eligible for these new tires. We have these new PROVEN all-synthetic Silvertowns. Drive in today.

LET US WORRY ABOUT YOUR TIRES FOR YOU

THE RUBBER CRISIS IS NOT OVER—so drive slowly, check air pressure frequently. Come in today for our complete tire service. WE'LL MAKE IT OUR BUSINESS to help you rolling FOR THE DURATION whether you qualify for new tires or not. Men trained in the approved FACTORY METHOD of recapping can add thousands of miles to the life of your present tires. Necessary repairs will be made in time to prevent failure. IF YOU'RE A 'B' OR 'C' DRIVER you need new tires, we'll fill out the application and handle it with your ration board. Drive in today for a TIRE CHECK. Our fruit jars to be filled for the orphans Home is at the church so we would like for all our women to get some and fill them as soon as they can.

Doreen Owens G. A. S. had a good meeting Saturday with 18 present including visitors.

Plans are being completed for a great Missionary Day at Mulberry Sunday, July 9th, and we are inviting all to come be with us to hear Bro. Frank Woodward and Mrs. Woodward and Bro. Toy Williams, missionary from China.

A Sunday School Training course will begin at Mulberry Sunday Night June 25th. Also V. B. S. will begin at the Church the 2nd Monday in July.

The Mulberry monthly meeting of the W. M. S. will be on Thursday July 6th instead of Tuesday July 4th.

Alabama County Agents reported that 62,000 farmers, by controlling insects, produced 50,000 bales of cotton last year more than they would have produced with no control measures. This cotton, valued at $6,225,000 paid the total cost of the control program many times over. These facts are to remind farmers that now is the time to wage an extensive war on cotton insects.

VICTORY FIREWORKS—Alabama, this Fourth of July Week, was buying a special kind of fireworks to celebrate the nation's birthday—it was war bonds. From far and wide over the state came reports of communities that went over the top in the Fifth War Loan Drive as they backed the Invasion.

State Drives Hard To Go Over The Top

County Organizations Report Heavy Sale Of "Victory Fireworks"

Alabama drove with all its might its Fourth of July Week to go over the top in the Fifth War Loan Drive. County organizations everywhere reported heavy sales of E bonds and enthusiastic purchases of other "nominations."

Many groups reported that they were over the top in both E bond and overall quotas, but other organizations were driving to stage special last minute drives to move their counties into the victory column.

State War Finance Committee leaders Ed Leigh McMillan and Frank Samford called upon workers and buyers everywhere to put the state over the top before the week ended. "Our forces are moving ahead in France," they emphasized "and we are pushing the Japanese back into their inner ring of defenses in the Far East but the fine fighting job that our boys are doing on the battle front cannot continue unless we match their effort with all-out effort of our own here at home.

"It is inconceivable that any man, woman or child here in Alabama would not put every dollar they can rake and scrape into war bonds with so many of these boys giving their lives for victory.

"No Fourth of July, since that first brave Fourth of July, has been so significant to Americans as this Fourth of July.

"Let us invest this year in Victory Fireworks. Let us put money into bonds that will pay shells, bombs, planes, gunships that will push the enemy back and back and back.

"Unless we do our part here Invasion will fail, the enemy win in the end, and our men have died for a lost cause.

"It is hard for many of us to translate the news dispatched 'over there' into our everyday of living. Those who have sons, fathers, brothers and know the cost of victory.

"Alabama will win a victory the Fifth War Loan, but we win it now.

"Let every county, every community, 'Buy More Than Before' buy more than is asked of them. Let us back the Invasion. Let buy fireworks that will know enemy off the map this American Independence Week, 1944."

Gov. Commends Nivens For Work On Program

Montgomery, Ala. — In a letter to all Alabama sheriffs, Gov. Sparks has congratulated them upon their cooperation in the "work or fight" program, and at the same time called for further intensive efforts in the drive against loafing and absenteeism on the home front. As additional evidence that the State means business in this campaign, Gov. Sparks revealed that he has asked Attorney-General McQueen to visit every sheriff in Alabama and personally discuss the problem, and also to contact solicitors and enlist their help.

Following text of the Governor's letter to the sheriffs:
"May I congratulate you upon your splendid efforts in our work or fight program in Alabama, and thank you for the cooperation you have given this office. The suggestion in this movement awakened our people to a realization of their obligation and duty. It accomplished much.

"There is still need of intensive efforts on all our parts to prevent (a) absenteeism, and (b) loafing. Our people must realize that it is just as essential to work back home as it is to fight away from home. Every able-bodied person should feel an obligation, regardless of his financial standing.

"May I suggest, therefore, that we renew our efforts and that we let it be known that all people who are not gainfully employed will be checked to ascertain why, and if they are violating any of the laws of Alabama by failing or refusing to work, they will be prosecuted.

"I have requested the Attorney General of Alabama to visit every Sheriff in person and discuss this problem with him. He is also requested to contact the Solicitors of the State and enlist their aid in promoting the purposes of our efforts, to the end that every idle person in the State shall be gainfully employed.

Sincerely yours,
CHAUNCEY SPARKS, Gov.

POPWELL HOME DAMAGED BY FIRE LAST THURSDAY
Last Thursday afternoon about 2 o'clock a fire started in the home of Mr. Horace Popwell. The reported cause of the fire was the explosion of a kerosene heater in the back of the house. Damage was estimated at about $500, it was said.

The Clanton Fire Department is to be highly congratulated on the splendid job they did in getting there and stopping the fire with such small loss.

School Trustees To Be Elected Friday, July 21st.

In compliance with the Alabama School Laws, the Chilton County Board of Education has called a School Trustees' Election for Friday, July 21, 1944. On that day it will be the duty of the citizens of each community to meet in the schoolhouse for the purpose of nominating six (6) persons as prospective trustees. From this list of six nominees, the County Board is required to appoint three trustees.

Each community has the privilege of selecting the hour for the mass meeting, but 8:00 p.m. is the suggested time. Letters have been sent to present boards of trustees asking them to call the patrons of their school in meeting. Each school patron should take this public announcement as an invitation to go to his school at 8:00 p.m. on Friday, July 21, for the trustees' election, unless notified of a different hour by his present trustee board.

The County Board wishes to have the following points considered carefully by all school patrons:

1. Only school patrons are eligible to vote for nominees, but nominees do not have to be patrons of the school.
2. Persons should be nominated only if they are interested in the school and are ready to discharge their duties as trustees.
3. Nominees must live near the school building. This is required by school law.
4. The County Board cannot appoint trustees for a school if the patrons fail to submit a list of nominees.
5. The position of school trustee is a responsible place and should be held by capable, interested people.

Household Survey Will Begin July 17th.

The Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce, during the week of July 17 will begin collecting information for "The Wartime Food Diary," a household survey conducted for the Office of Price Administration which will include a small group of families in Chilton County.

Plans for the survey, which will be conducted in 58 areas of the United States selected as typical of various parts of the country, were announced today by Mrs. L. M. S. Stapp, local representative of the Bureau of the Census.

A selected group of housewives, chosen to represent all types of families, is being asked to cooperate in the survey here, while about 2,000 families will participate in other cities, towns, and small areas in 42 States to be covered by the study. Similar surveys were conducted in these states last year for the OPA by the Census Bureau.

"The Wartime Food Diary," Mrs. Stapp explained, is a contribution which a small group of American families is being asked to make as a special wartime service. The diary is collected by the Bureau of the Census as agent for the Office of Price Administration in Washington, D. C. Its purpose is to provide up-to-date information from the American housewife herself on the amount and kind of food purchased for home use. A record of each family's food purchases combined with those of other families chosen for this work, will show how the purchases of our civilian population are affected by the problems of food supply in wartime.

"Full cooperation will make it possible for the government to have the necessary information in the shortest possible time, and by the most economical method. All information will be kept confidential and will be used for statistical purposes only," Mrs. Stapp said.

Masonic Conference

The Chilton County Masonic Conference will meet in Annual Session with Billingsley Lodge on Wednesday and Thursday, July 26-27.

All Masons are invited to come and take a part in the work. Especially do we urge all Chilton County Masons to attend.

We expect District Lecturer Frank Parks to be present and conduct the Conference.

May we see you there.—H. A. Harris, secretary.

TAX AVOIDERS CHECKED BY REVENUE DEPARTMENT

Montgomery, Ala. — The State Department of Revenue has adopted a policy of sending enough auditors simultaneously to a single community to clean up all sales tax records of every business. These auditors, working under the direct supervision of a principal examiner, have accomplished some noteworthy results. "Recently this method was applied to Hartford, in Geneva County," Revenue Commissioner Dowling said. "More than $11,000 of past due tax was found and mostly paid on the spot. Several merchants of Hartford expressed appreciation for the general examination, stating that a community audit had the effect of bringing all retailers in to line with the law and preventing unfair competition due to tax avoidance."

Revival Starts Next Sunday At First Methodist Church

The revival begins at the Methodist church the coming Sunday, July 16, with Dr. Gaston Foote of First Methodist Church of Montgomery assisting the pastor, Rev. O. C. Lloyd.

Dr. Foote is a native of Texas, educated in Southern Methodist University, Columbia University, and Denver University. He holds the degrees of A. B., M. A., B. D., and Doctor of Theology. He has made four trips through Europe, and has visited the Orient. In 1937 he was a delegate to World Conference on Faith and Order, in Edinburgh. Dr. Foote is one of Methodism's strong ministers.

Miss Lovell Wright will direct the music for the revival and work with the children and young people. Miss Wright is a native of Oklahoma. She graduated from Oklahoma College for Women with a music major. She spent the summers for eight years in evangelistic work, travelling with Dr. T. W. Preston, General Evangelist of the Methodist Church, leading the music, and working with children and young people in churches throughout Oklahoma and Texas. After graduating from college, Miss Wright became director of Youth Work at Ardmore, Okla. In 1940 she was appointed director of Wesley Foundation on the A. & M. College campus at Stillwater, Okla. There she directed the activities of 1600 Methodist students. Miss Wright, for the past two years has been on the staff of the First Methodist, Montgomery, Ala., as Director of Education, and Minister of Music. She directs five choirs and oversees the total program of religious education in that church.

Miss Wright will meet with the children at 10 o'clock in the mornings and with the young people at 7:30 p. m. All children and young people are invited. Everybody is invited to all these services.

NO LIMIT ON FERTILIZERS FARMERS MAY USE ON CROPS

Auburn, Ala. — Reflecting prospects for somewhat larger supplies of fertilizer in the year beginning July 1, 1944, particularly phosphates and potash, the War Food Administration has eliminated crop classifications and made several other changes in its fertilizer order.

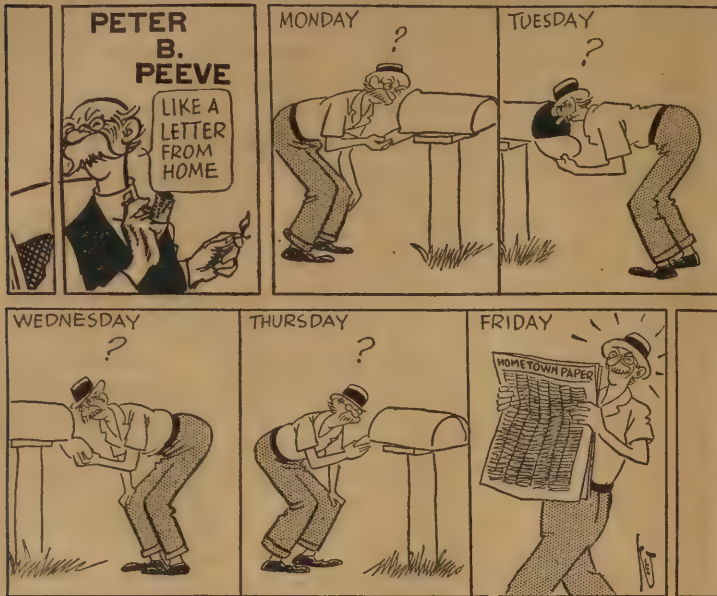

In the year beginning July 1, all general crops may be fertilized with as many pounds of fertilizer per acre as recommended by the State experiment station or at the rate customary by used in the area, whichever is larger. There will be no A and B crop classes as there have been this year.

SUCCESSES AND FAILURES OF ISRAEL

LESSON TEXT—Judges 2:6-16.
GOLDEN TEXT—Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people.—Proverbs 14:34.

The success or failure of both nations and individuals is ultimately determined by their attitude toward the law of God. He is always right and true. The constant factor in a world order that swings wildly from one extreme to another, is His law, which is perfect and eternal.

God is no respecter of persons. Even Israel, His own chosen nation, found that observing God's law meant blessing, and failure to do so brought judgment and sorrow. No man is great and powerful enough to ignore this rule—and none is exempt from its operation.

I. Remembering God Brings Blessing (vv. 6-9).

Although Israel had not fully obeyed God's command, and had been rebuked by an angel of the Lord for their failure (Judg. 2:1-5), they had come into a measure of their inheritance under Joshua.

They now possessed that inheritance and entered into enjoyment of it (v. 6). It is one thing to have an inheritance, but another thing to claim it and make use of it. Countless Christians have never taken out their inheritance in Christ. All they have is the earnest (Eph. 1:14) or "down payment."

God never meant that any child of His should live a poverty-stricken spiritual life, or should go halting on first one side and then the other. He has made provision for a full-orbed, strong and joyful life. Why not enter upon your full inheritance in Christ now!

As the people of Israel took possession of the land, they went forward in the way of blessing as long as Joshua, and the leaders who remembered God, kept them steady and true. We have here an excellent illustration of the power of a godly example. It is far stronger than we think.

II. Forgetting God Brings Backsliding (vv. 10-13).

The fact that a people has been highly privileged and has been exalted to a place of power and honor will not save it in the day when God is forgotten. Israel no longer had God-fearing men to bring it back to God, and so began its awful drifting away from God.

We Americans are rightly proud of our great land, its mighty resources, its fine past and promising future. But wait—what is the future to be? Oh, we say, the most glorious days are ahead. They may be, but only if we, like our forefathers who established this nation, recognize God. If we forget Him, we will go the way of the forgotten empires of centuries past, and in spite of all its past achievements and its present promise.

Let us always remember that America is not some vague entity apart from us, for we, you and I, are America, we determine what it shall be, and how it shall relate itself to God. Let us be sure that no one we know ever forgets God.

It is a significant thing that the leaders of our nation so often come from Christian homes, but it is sad that they are so frequently not Christians themselves. Their lives are shaped by the teaching and influence of godly parents who reared them, but what will their children do if they are not brought up in the fear and admonition of the Lord?

Forgetting God has had enough in its immediate results, but just ahead there is great and certain disaster.

III. Forsaking God Brings Judgment (vv. 14-16).

God not only will not hold a backsliding nation guiltless, but will bring judgment even if He has to over His people to a despoiling nation. He has instruments of individual and national chastisement, and He is ready to use them.

Notice that wherever they went the Lord's hand was against them. There is no place for free thought in the presence of God. Anyone who thinks he can do it, should read Psalm 139:12. It can't be done. That is a comfort to the believer, but it is not a little disquieting to the unbeliever.

God, however, always remembers mercy in the midst of judgment (Ps. 101:1). He sent judges to deliver Israel, when He was sure of their repentance (v. 10). If there was even a time when nations needed deliverers, it's now. The systematic looting of subjugated peoples, the deliberate murder of multitudes of Jews, the mass executions of many innocent people in reprisal for lives patriotic acts of resistance, are evils that cry to heaven.

"If men would call on God not merely for deliverance but in real repentance for sins committed" perhaps the day would deliver Israel would send deliverance to suffering people still" (Arnold's Commentary).

Well—why not call on Him now, in earnest repentance and faith. Will you do it?

ONE of the war's most incredible ventures, the drive of General "Vinegar" Joe Stilwell to retake the Burma road, is shown in this month's "March of Time." It's called "Back Door to Tokyo." You'll see American boys flying the "hump," the world's most dangerous air route; you'll see Merrill's Marauders on the attack and General Chennault with his forces. MO is a cartoonist, Victor Jurgens, has again turned in an outstanding photographic scoop, portraying a military feat so gigantic that it's an important historical event.

"Days of Glory" isn't a world-beating picture, but RKO feels pretty sure that it launches a new male star—Gregory Peck, who "has ears like Clark Gable, and is too tall and broad-shouldered to be comfortable in an ordinary chair."

GREGORY PECK

Proof of his drawing power is the fact that a wave of excitement ran through the studio when he appeared, and Ginger Rogers asked to have him in one of her pictures.

Metro is cooking up another of those pictures in which various episodes will be written by famous authors, with Metro's biggest stars appearing in each. Called "The Common Sin," it will have Carey Wilson as producer. The first writer signed for a single episode is I. A. R. Wylie.

After years of diligently preparing himself for that elusive motion picture break, a young Oakland junior college graduate got it; he's Greg McClure, 26, and he landed the role of John R. Sullivan in Bing Crosby's production, "The Great John L." He's worked as a salesman, longshoreman, laborer on a railroad, and farmhand; finally he went to dramatic school at night and worked during the day.

Because film babies are allowed to work before the camera for short intervals between long rests, Warner Bros. is saving production time by casting twins for a single role in "Christina in Connecticut," the Barbara Stanwyck-Dennis Morgan comedy. The twins, just eight months old, are Sandra Lee and Susan Lee Taylor.

September will be a busy month for Xavier Cugat, who's heard as "Your Dubonnet Day" maestro over MBS Wednesday nights. He'll make two one-week theater appearances, open at a smart Hollywood night spot, and begin work in Metro's "Week-End at the Waldorf."

Ever try to remember the names of those fantastic characters Garry Moore talks about on the Moore-Durante airshow? They're Twinkles Gooch, Rancid Crumknuckle, Elvira Smoo, Arbatus Cronksquodgit, Schmildwiddler Funk, and Farnsindendindles Crud!

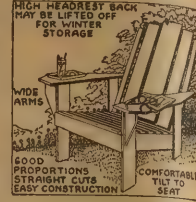

Alan Young, who's heard Wednesday nights on NBC at nine, EWTV, crashed radio at 15, in a 16-minute show for which he was paid $2.50 a week. He played dozens of characters, got a raise of 50 cents after 26 weeks, asked for more, and was fired. He formed a vaudeville act with his sister, things went well, then she married. He returned to radio, and real success came quickly after that.

In addition to his newly-won singing laurels as host of the "Broadway Matinee" airshow, baritone Ronald Graham will probably win some more when his latest film venture, "Ladies in Washington," is released.

ODDS AND ENDS—Ossie Nelson and Harriet Hilliard sing their own special arrangement of "Sunday, Monday and Always" in Paramount's "Take It Big." The new "Glamour Manor," with Cliff Arquette, may become one of those summer air shows that win a permanent place for themselves; it's a smart combination of comedy and quizzes. Victor Borja returns to the "Bazin Street" show for eight weeks in the fall. He's used to comedy renewals—had four consecutive 13-week contracts on the Bing Crosby show. "Ministry of Fear" has one of the tallest groups of male principals ever in a picture—led by Ray Milland, they average six feet two, his height.

WHY not make a week-end project of putting together a couple of comfortable chairs with the special features shown here? You don't have to have a fancy workshop. The whole job may be done out in the yard or on the porch. Just three stock widths of lumber are needed; all the cuts are straight and the pieces may be nailed or screwed together. But the really important thing about this chair is that it is comfortable to sit in and good to look at. The removable back makes it easy to move around and to store for the winter. Even though it is made with all straight cuts of the saw, it is so designed that it has no awkward angles and no jack knife posture is necessary when sitting in it.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Back in January, American troops recaptured from the Japs the first invaded rubber-producing land. They took possession of Solaia in New Guinea with its 300 acres of rubber trees. All Solaia rubber normally goes to Australia.

Informed rubber officials insist that when peace comes, our synthetic rubber plants will be just as vital to the security of the American people as they are during the war period. They say that the amount of post-war synthetic which will be made in this country after the war will depend upon the total demand for rubber and upon the crude prices established by plantation operators.

Household Hints

To help in remodeling dated garments, try grandmother's custom of having a "piece bag." In it put all saved slippers, bits of ribbon and lace, and scraps of fabric.

For cleaning a coffee-stained percolator, put in a cup of salt, fill with water, and let the mixture percolate as for coffee.

To remove face powder from a satin or velvet dress, brush lightly with a woolen cloth.

To tell at a glance which are your good handkerchiefs, iron them into triangles and plain ones into squares.

Never knot the ends of your thread when darning socks as the knot may prove uncomfortable to the wearer. Moistening the end of darning cotton will prevent thread slipping through when taking the first stitch.

Steadier Farm Incomes Throughout the World Proposed in New Plan

By BARROW LYONS
WNU Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.

While American industry is strengthening its position in world trade through promotion of international cartels, it might be a good idea for farmers to take a look at the world agricultural situation to discover how their interests are involved.

First, however, if there is any doubt about the future of world cartels, think back to the days in the early 1890s when liberals and progressives were shouting against the "trusts"—those great industrial and banking combinations that bossed congress and legislatures, and generally showed a "public be damned" attitude toward consumers.

In 1910, the industrial commission, the first congressional body to investigate monopolies, held that great combinations of industry were to stay, and that it would be inadvisable to "bust" them. Control in the public interest was the question. There may be some question as to how effective social controls have been, but the great combinations are still here.

We have reached a similar point now in relation to international cartels. We are going to break them up, no matter how much our liberals may desire it. In fact, we are going to assist in the organization of cartels, possibly before the war ends.

Farmers Must Decide

Obviously, it is time for farmers to begin to think internationally in respect to agriculture, for if they don't, the food processors will be thinking for them. Let us take a brief look at the wheat market, for that is still the chief farm product in international trade.

Lee Marshall, WPA director of disbursement, in a recent visit to Kansas based on that on July 1 we would enter the crop year with a carry-over of about 300,000,000 bushels of wheat compared with 40,000,000 bushels on July 1, 1918, during the last year of World War I. But what happened after the last war? Almost every nation during the war increased its wheat acreage, and after the war surpluses began to pile up year after year until the price of wheat was so low, no wheat farmer could operate profitably. We may dispose of this surplus to a hungry Europe, but world wheat productive capacity is today far beyond world economic power to purchase.

Now we are seeking security of farm income. If there is a world surplus of wheat after the war, as there is very likely to be after a few years of rebuilding, it will require a lot more than passing a few laws to keep wheat at parity. Depression for wheat farmers would be like an infection which recognized no national boundaries.

Insurance Fund

So the idea has been advanced, that an international insurance fund be set up to protect agricultural income throughout the world from the extremes of the economic cycle. This fund would perform three extremely important functions:

1. It would obtain from participating countries periodic reports on production, inventories, current marketings and probable demand for agricultural commodities which enter foreign trade in largest volumes. These data would make possible the determination of normal production, consumption, price levels and trends, and would form the basis for intelligent international and national planning in relation to the commodities covered;

2. The fund would stockpile agricultural commodities that are important in world trade when crops were good, and distribute these when crops were poor, thus creating more even flow of materials entering world trade. This would have a stabilizing influence to world commercial relations.

3. The fund would accumulate cash through assessments on national governments, when income was high, and distribute cash when income was low, thus helping to maintain more stable income and purchasing power for the great mass of producers of agricultural products throughout the world.

This idea has been worked out in some detail by Dr. Morris A. Copeland, chief of the economic division, bureau of planning and statistics of the War Production board.

Probably by the time Dr. Copeland's plan has reached the diplomatic level it will be something altogether different. But until something like this is done, the danger of chaotic world agricultural conditions will be a distinct threat—not just to foreign farmers—but to every American farmer as well.

If, through farm organizations, the American farmer should take an interest in international income stability, on a reasonably high level, he would be moving in the direction of self-protection.

Fruit Preparation and Processing Guide

(See Directions Below)

Canned Fruit

If you want to assure your family of its basic seven fruit requirement, then busy yourself with putting up fruit at home.

Fruits, commercially canned, have carried a high point value and this has made their serving in many families prohibitive. But lucky indeed are those homes in which there are ample stocks of home-canned fruits.

Fruit canning is infinitely more simple than vegetable canning. The reason for that is that fruits are acid and, therefore, can be sterilized more readily.

A hot water bath is ideal for processing the fruit once it is in the jar. If you cannot obtain one, use a regular wash boiler, fitted with a rack to keep the jars a half inch from the bottom. A cover that fits tightly over the canner helps keep the steam in and does not waste fuel.

Steps in Canning.

1. Select fruit in the peak of condition. Your can will yield only what you put into it.
2. Wash fruit or berries carefully, pare and pit according to directions for fruit in the fruit canning chart given in this column.
3. Fruit is pre-cooked for several minutes in certain cases to shrink it, and to give you a better looking pack with as little floating as possible.
4. Use a light or medium type of syrup in which to pre-cook the fruit or cook in its own juice.
5. Pack fruit into hot, sterilized jars and add boiling syrup or fruit juice with which to cover the fruit. Most juice or syrup is added to within one-half inch of the top of the jar.
6. Adjust the cap according to the instructions furnished by the manufacturer. He knows the type of sealing it will need.
7. Process fruit either in the water bath or the pressure cooker according to the time indicated on the canning chart. For a boiling water bath, see that the water boils during the entire processing period.
8. As soon as the jars finish processing, remove them from the canner.

Camouflage Ages Ago

It is generally believed that camouflage developed during the 1914-18 war. Armies then used all sorts of devices to make themselves invisible, and vessels were painted in "dazzle" style. In the beginning, however, many uniforms were splendidly colorful. The French infantry wore red pantaloons.

Our own uniforms, from earlier experiences in India and South Africa, were already the dull but useful khaki, which blends into the ground colors so well. First to use camouflage was the ancient Egyptian king, Harnemes III. He made his soldiers paint their shields and tunics with tiger stripes, to confound and terrify the enemy.

FOLK & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

On August 18 and 19, the Alabama Press Association will hold their summer meeting in Birmingham. One of the features of the program is to be a tour through the large Beotel-McCombs plant there. That is the place that they outfit those big B-29's, and we certainly do not intend missing that trip. We promise that when we return we will tell you all about how those big ships are finished for our Airman.

We can't help agreeing with Gessner McCortey, Chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee when he says that when we make Roosevelt our choice for president, the highest compliment a Democracy can pay a man, then he should stay out of the race for the Vice-presidency. The least he can do to show his thanks is to let us name our own V-P.

Our good friend, Mrs. Cassidy at Goodyear Service Store, is quite proud of the one-thousand dollar War Bond that her company bought to help Chilton County in the Fifth War Loan Drive. She should be proud. Her store is a credit to the county and certainly shows it's willingness to co-operate in all things.

Don't you think that men should be allowed to wear nothing this hot weather like women do? We mean these brief shorts, or short breeches—whatever they are. The idea is that there is not much to them. But no, man is somewhat ashamed of his physique and keeps it hid under about unappetizing pounds of uncomfortable clothes. A word like that will make anybody hot—Let's adopt a rule among men for the summer months to wear less clothing. We can go a long way and still be the better dressed or covered of the species.

We understand that the word is going around that ex-mayor C. Fenn Jones will be a candidate for Mayor when the time comes next year for electing a man to fill that office. Mr. Jones served Clanton as Mayor until four years ago when he was defeated by Cohen Stapp, present Mayor. Mr. Jones made a splendid Mayor. The city progressed under his leadership remarkably. Being retired from business he gave the office his full time and thought. We complimented him highly then on his administration and we believe that he is as well fitted for the place as it is possible to find a man.

A. B. Windham, did we hear someone say, "Windy?" Anyway, is opening a new concern here this week. It will be known as the Clanton Loan & Finance Company. The offices will be in the Johnson Building at 613½ 2nd Ave. No. A. B. Windham is well known here-about, having owned and operated Windham's Smokehouse for a couple of years. We wish him good luck in his new venture.

Announcement made this month by Hollis Jackson states that the Clanton Quick Freeze plant is nearing completion and will be in operation by September. Mr. Jackson, former vocational agriculture teacher, will be manager of the plant.

Pistol packing J. H. Miltstead was in town the Fourth of July. He was visiting Ollie Blalock who worked with him at TCI in Birmingham. Ollie and he worked together there as policemen. He and his host spent their time here fishing and trying to forget such things as lawbreakers. And according to Ollie they really had a big time.

FIRE has less chance on the CONCRETE FARM

FAR out from the nearest fire department... what will happen if fire breaks out in your home or barn? The best answer is to build with concrete. For concrete can't burn. It resists fire; retards it and helps keep it from spreading. Protects your family. Helps save from destruction the valuable herd and equipment on which your productive capacity depends.

Concrete farm buildings are attractive and comfortable, economical to build and to own. If you need help, get in touch with your concrete contractor or your building material dealer.

Concrete farm jobs require a minimum of critical materials.

Mr. Ira Kelly of Mobile spent the week end at home with family.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to each and every one who were so kind and helpful in every way during the illness and death of our dear father, J. P. Smith.

Especially do we thank Rev. Homer Carroll for his comforting words; Mr. Ira for his kind service rendered; also for the beautiful floral offering.

May God bless each and every one is our prayer.—The Smith Children.

Mr. J. M. Martin has been ill at his home for several days. Reports Tuesday were that he was resting no better.

JACKSON CHAPEL

Services were well attended Sunday. Rev. Ernest Jones delivered the message and was enjoyed by all.

Let's all remember Sunday school next Sunday at 10 o'clock, and try to attend.

Some were absent Sunday because of illness. We hope for them a speedy recovery, and they can be back with us soon.

ATTENTION! ALL HOME CANNERS!

Before you begin your 1944 canning. Good Housekeeping Magazine advises you use the boiling-water bath method for tomatoes and fruits, only. Can all vegetables except tomatoes by the correct use of a pressure cooker to be sure of killing botulinus germs. In the last few years, cases of botulinus food poisoning have cropped up in widely different parts of the country. Buy, borrow, share a pressure cooker—but don't can low acid vegetables any other way. If you want further information, write Good Housekeeping Magazine, 959 8th Avenue, New York, 19, N. Y.

Mrs. Mable F. Newell and daughters Edith Clair of Montgomery and Juanita have returned from a visit to Mrs. H. N. Dent, the former Doris Newell, in Columbia, S. C.

Mrs. Ralph Tate from New York is visiting her mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Foshee.

Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Williams of Jasper, and Mrs. J. O. Williams and sons Wayne and Gerald of Mobile, were the guests of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Cox, for the week-end.

Mr. Bert Curlee from Birmingham was here for the week-end with his mother.

Mrs. Raybon Crew is visiting relatives and friends in Texas.

T. W. Bryan spent the Fourth of July on a business trip in Georgia. He says he attended church twice, and could have gone to a barbecue but preferred having it brought to him. He had a full Fourth anyway.

G. W. Sansom spent last week in Tuscaloosa.

Miss Juanita Miller left the first of this week for New York where she will join the WACS.

Mrs. R. W. Lowe and daughter Evelyn went to Birmingham Monday on business.

Mrs. John Studdard is in a Birmingham Hospital for an operation.

Miss Dorothy Arnold has returned to Judson for her summer exams.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Gowan and daughter Sallie spent Tuesday in Birmingham.

Miss Peggy Jean Burgess is spending the week with friends here.

There Must be No Shortage of Telephone Equipment on War Fronts

Tons on tons of telephone cables, wire, switchboards, telephone instruments and hundreds of other types of telephone equipment have been shipped to England for use by our armies in their advances through Europe.

More shiploads are following to meet the growing demands of the war fronts, not only in Europe but the Pacific, as well.

All out production of telephone equipment for our armed forces takes virtually all available manufacturing facilities and manpower, and reserve supplies are about exhausted.

The shortage of supplies for home use has made it impossible for us to keep up with civilian orders for service. That is why we, over here, must continue to do the best we can with the limited amount of equipment we have on hand.

We keenly regret that more and more people are having to wait for telephone service, due to the increasing war demands. But there must be no waiting for the men who fight our battles.

Your continued patience and cooperation in these difficult times is greatly appreciated.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Allied Forces Throw Full Weight
Against Nazi Lines in Normandy;
OPA Begins Black Market Drive

Released by Western Newspaper Union.
EDITOR'S NOTE: Where analysis is expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.

France—With big guns rumbling in distance, U. S. troops chase sheep from bivouac area in Normandy.

EUROPE:

Normandy Drive

U. S. and British troops threw their full weight at both ends of the German lines in Normandy in their effort to develop a full-scale drive into the French interior.

On the Russian front to the east, powerful Red forces continued their steady advance on the northern front, threatening the Germans' positions in the Baltic states, East Prussia and old Poland.

In Normandy, U. S. troops attacked at the base of the Cherbourg peninsula on the west end of the front, while British forces exerted pressure on the Nazis' defense pivot of Caen on the eastern sector. With both sides increasing the scale of their attacks, more and more troops were being pressed into the battles.

One Nazi stronghold after the other fell into Russian hands as the Reds moved westward over the ancient invasion route to Germany, with the bulk of the enemy managing to detach themselves and avoid complete encirclement and annihilation.

Italy

Falling back under the heavy pressure of the U. S. Fifth and the British Eighth armies, the Nazis continued their retreat to their new defense line in northern Italy, guarding the rich industrial and agricultural plains about the Po valley.

As order was restored in the Rome area, it was announced that $30,000,000 of U. S. investments in the region had been assessed and inventoried, and some already had resumed operations with profit. Among U. S. enterprises are American Express, Otis Elevator, International Business Machines, Eastman Kodak, General Electric, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Warner Brothers, Singer Sewing Machine, National Radiator and Helena Rubenstein's.

As the Nazis fell back in the north, they not only took advantage of the rugged terrain for defense, but also converted every small village into a fortress, requiring detailed firing power to reduce.

ROBOTS:

Attacks Irksome

Although German reports that their self-propelled robot bombs have left south England and London a sea of flames have been discounted, Prime Minister Winston Churchill was scheduled to mount the platform in parliament to discuss the critical situation caused by the new weapon.

Presumably launched from ramps from the French coast, and power driven by fuel and compressed air and automatically piloted by three gyro-compasses, the robots have fallen blindly on residential and other districts, causing material damage and casualties.

Surprised at first by the flying robots, the British quickly coordinated their anti-aircraft and fighter plane defenses to combat the missiles, which zoom at 300 or more miles per hour at low altitudes and suddenly slant off on a 30-degree angle to plummet to earth, exploding with the force of a 1,000-pound bomb. Declaring that Hitler's regime would have lost a good share of its standing with its own people had the Germans failed to retaliate for Allied raids, an authoritative Nazi publication said that the robot attacks had bolstered the morale of the home front.

PACIFIC:

No Rest for Wicked

On land and sea, U. S. forces harassed Japanese forces committed to a defense of the enemy's inner ring of island fortifications guarding the high road to its "Greater East Asia" sphere.

Most jolting of all attacks to the Japs, was the U. S. advance upon Saipan island in the Marianas, approximately 1,500 miles from Tokyo, and the fall of the administration center of Garapan, with the remnants of 20,000 enemy troops pressed back into a narrow corner of the island.

As U. S. forces moved forward on Saipan, other Doughboys under command of Gen. Douglas MacArthur invaded Noemfoor island off of Dutch New Guinea, one of the stepping-stones to the Philippines to the northwest and the East Indies to the southwest. Dropped from the skies from huge transport planes, paratroopers joined amphibious forces in their tank-led drives to secure airfields on the embattled island.

On sea, U. S. naval forces prowling in far eastern waters shelled the strategic Bonin Islands, some 700 miles from Tokyo, inflicting heavy damage on four destroyers and a cargo ship.

TEXTILES:

Prices Up

Complying with provisions of the new price control act directing that costs of major textile items be revised to reflect parity on cotton, OPA Administrator Chester Bowles ordered an increase on about one-third of such goods.

Although Bowles estimated that the average increase would amount to about $150,000,000 a year, he said that it would be difficult to determine consumers' costs until OPA worked out ceilings for converters, cutters, wholesalers and retailers.

Cotton goods affected by the new order include deans, sheets and pillow cases, knit cotton heavyweight underwear, some chambrays and most combed and carded cotton yarns. In accordance with another provision of the new act, retailers would be able to carry higher priced lines than they did before the outbreak of war.

BLACK MARKETS:

Drive On

With federal men filtering into many of the big markets, OPA appears determined to stage a determined drive against the reportedly extensive black market in beef.

In conducting its first thorough drive, OPA was said to consider all packing plants under suspicion until cleared by investigation. Many packers compelled to pay over approved prices for cattle and then sell the finished product at lower ceilings, hoped the probe might relieve this situation. In going after the black market, investigators may examine books of commission men in the various yards to find packers paying over approved prices for cattle. Transacting business taking place from these packers all the way down to the retail level may then be traced to uncover any illegal operations.

SHOES:

Supply Tight

Because of the army's increased use of leather in the new combat boot and announcement of the need of 200,000 pairs of shoes for land lease, there is little prospect of an easing in shoe rationing.

Recent government releases of rubber and plastic scrap for soles and an increase in production facilities for their manufacture, however, reflects the improved condition in output of non-rationed shoes, which totaled over 25,000,000 pairs in the first four months of 1944, away above the 5,000,000 made during the same period last year.

The expanding leather supply due to increased cattle slaughter offers some possibility for more non-rationed shoes toward the end of the year, but demand is expected to far outstrip stocks. Leather imports continue below normal.

MINERS:

Buck Lewis

Once one of John L. Lewis' staunchest boosters while president of the Illinois district of the United Mine Workers, Ray Edmundson now is rallying support for his fight against alleged union domination by appointed officials.

Although Edmundson claimed that 21 out of 31 UMW districts representing 75 per cent of the union membership do not elect their principal officers, and that his supporters represented the consensus of thinking of the miners, his movement attracted only 80 delegates from 14 districts to a meeting in Cincinnati.

Purpose of the meeting was to develop a program for district self-rule for presentation to the UMW's convention in the same city September 12, when Edmundson himself will be a candidate for UMW chieftain against Lewis.

Women in the News

First superintendent of the U. S. Navy Nurse Corps and first and only woman to receive a navy cross while still alive, the late Mrs. Leah S. Higbee became the first woman in the naval service to have a fighting ship named after her. Mrs. Higbee's name will be given to a destroyer now under construction in Bath, Me.

Mrs. Higbee

Mother of 11 other children, Mrs. Philip Frontsak of Chicago, Ill., gave birth to a 14 lb. 9½ oz. baby girl. In addition to being over average weight, the baby also measured 24 inches in length, compared with the usual 20.5 inches tall, Mrs. Frontsak weighs 300 lbs.

MONEY:

World Plans

Meeting in Bretton Woods, N. H., under the presidency of U. S. Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, delegates from 44 nations discussed plans for the stabilization and lending of money in the post-war world through international banks.

Stabilization of money would be achieved through the creation of an 8-billion dollar fund from which nations could draw to uphold the value of their own currency when there was no demand for it, or to pay off interest charges, etc.

A fund of 10 billion dollars would be used for long-term loans, with the money primarily used to guarantee money let out by private bankers of the various nations.

U. S. participation in each of the organizations would approximate 2 billion dollars.

Although plans call for U. S. contributions totaling well over two billion dollars for each project, congress will have final say on whether this country will participate.

SYNTHETIC RUBBER:

Russ Get Patents

In accordance with its policy of giving the government free rights to its patents and processes for military purposes during the war, Du Pont's has made available its procedure for manufacturing neoprene synthetic rubber to Russia.

In the first large-scale agreement of its kind, the Russians will receive full technical details necessary for building and operating plants to produce neoprene, the first successful general purpose synthetic rubber ever developed. While Russia is at war with Germany, the Soviets will not be compelled to compensate Du Pont's, and payment in the postwar period will be dependent upon the volume of Russian production.

Adaptable to many civilian as well as military uses because of its resistance to wear, flame and abrasion and deterioration by sunlight, heat and oils, neoprene was developed by Du Pont chemists working on original discoveries. Father Julius Newland of Notre Dame university.

PUBLIC LANDS

Public lands that would yield oil if developed should be open to exploitation by the states and thus relieve the shortage of gasoline, according to Warwick Downing, chairmen of the public lands committee of the Interstate Oil Compact commission.

Senator Hatch, chairman of the senate public lands committee, advocated the rewriting of the act to clarify many points and to encourage exploratory operations for oil and gas on the public domain.

Deposits Pennies in

Baby Brother's Mouth

LOGANSPOUT, IND. — Two-year-old Dee Shuck looked about for a place to deposit two pennies. He spied the open mouth of his seven-months-old brother, Jay, and popped them in. The baby gulped. The pennies disappeared.

Jay was taken to a hospital and doctors retrieved the coins.

Pilot Dies After

Saving His Crew

Held Plane Up Long Enough
For Men to Bail Out.

A U. S. BOMBER BASE IN BRITAIN — The crew of a bomber told how a wounded pilot, Lieut. William R. Johnson of Minneapolis, brought their flak-riddled Fortress back recently on one engine, held it aloft long enough for his companions to bail out, and then died in a flaming crash.

Flak bursts tore great holes in the Fortress' nose and also wounded Lieut. Harold S. Whitley, Limerick, Maine, co-pilot; Lieut. William S. Sancher, Walton, N. Y., navigator; and Lieut. George H. Nye, Compton, Calif., bombardier, on an attack upon Augsburg, April 13.

Sgt. Frank J. Hazzard, Chicago, top turret gunner, said that while he was bandaging Lieutenant Sancher's leg, the navigator stood up and continued to navigate the ship although he was in constant pain and weak from the loss of blood.

"If it hadn't been for the courage of the pilot and the navigator, we never would have made it," Sergeant Hazzard said.

Numerous flak attacks knocked out two engines and then the third. The pilot ordered Sgt. Paul E. Simpson, Delaware, Ohio, to get rid of his ball turret to lighten the ship.

"I think I'm the champion turret remover of the Eighth air force," the gunner said, "this made the fifth turret I've had to jettison since I started combat flying."

Losing 14,000 feet altitude, the Fortress struggled across the channel at a rate of 70 miles per hour. Over the British coast, the last engine caught fire, forcing the bomber down to 1,500 feet.

"Let's get out of here—this is it," yelled Lieutenant Johnson, giving the order to bail out as flames spread over the shuddering plane. Those were his last words.

Shot Down in Denmark,

See Sights, Go to Sweden

LONDON — Two U. S. army air force bomber gunners who were shot down over Denmark were reported by the Daily Mail to have taken time out for a sightseeing tour in Copenhagen before escaping to Sweden via the Danish underground — and, like other tourists, they had their pictures taken.

The London Daily Mail printed the pictures of the sergeants, Mansfield Hooper and James Valby. One showed them posed in Hogsgate Square in Copenhagen and was circulated in the underground newspaper, Frie Danske, in defiance of the Gestapo, the Daily Mail said.

A second photograph showed the two American airmen looking in the gardens of the Royal library in Stockholm after their escape. Both pictures were wireless to London.

He's Away Up the Creek

On U. S. Army Directions

WITH SECOND ARMY ON MANEUVERS, SOMEWHERE IN TENNESSEE — Sgt. Dale Gilligan of Harrington, Mass., believes in the old chestnut about "a man cooking his own goose." He stopped his jeep the other day to ask a road sentry directions on a map. Before he knew it eight volunteers appeared from nowhere to aid their two cents worth.

Following their directions, Sergeant Gilligan ended up at the dead end of a dry creek bed. He turned his jeep around to find a bull blocking his path.

Electric Shocks Curb

Woman's Sneez Attacks

MEMPHIS — A series of electrical shock treatments are being given Mrs. Albert Sanders of Jonesboro, Ark., in an effort to combat a sneezing attack.

Attendants said the treatments give the patient 100 per cent relaxation of nerves, muscles and all body functions. They said after the second treatment, Mrs. Sanders was quiet for 22 hours.

The 28-year-old matron was sneezing 15 times a minute when admitted to the hospital with the rare malady.

Badly Injured Boy Goes

To Hospital All Alone

PHILADELPHIA — Benjamin Spiegel Jr., 13, of the University City section, was hospitalized and treated when he appeared alone for treatment after being accidentally shot in the leg by a companion. His friend applied a tourniquet and bandage, put him on a bus 10 miles from the hospital and sent him home again.

ATHLETE'S FOOT NEWS

"80.6% of sufferers showed CLINICAL IMPROVEMENT after only 10-day treatment with SORETONE"

Foster D. Snell, Inc., well-known consulting chemists, have just completed a test with a group of men and women suffering from Athlete's Foot. These people were told to use Soretone. At the end of only ten-day test period, their feet were examined by a physician. We quote from the report:

"After the use of Soretone according to the directions on the label for a period of only ten days, 80.6% of the cases showed clinical improvement of an infection which is most stubborn to control."

Improvements were shown in the symptoms of Athlete's Foot—the itching, burning, redness, etc. The report says:

"In our opinion Soretone is of very definite benefit in the treatment of this disease, which is commonly known as 'Athlete's Foot.'"

So if Athlete's Foot troubles you, don't temporize! Get SORETONE! McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Connecticut.

HAY SHORTAGE: With 10 per cent less hay available for each farm animal this year, farmers are faced with an acute shortage of other feeds, says the Middle West Soil Improvement committee. To meet this situation, pasture improvement including the application of nitrogen, phosphorus and potash is essential to boost production on existing acreage, it states.

SEA SERPENT: A "sea serpent" 35 feet long, "with humps on its yellow, shell-like back," was reported seen in Payette's lake, near McCall, Idaho. The strange creature has been observed periodically for the last 10 years, it is said. One previous scoffer, Walter Bowling, was among the group on shore who saw the "thing." He is now convinced that it exists.

IN MEMORY OF J. P. SMITH

On Thursday morning, July 6, 1944, at 7:45, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Holley and took away the spirit of our dear father, J. P. Smith.

He was 85 years old May 1st, born and reared in Coosa County and has been a citizen of Chilton since 1900.

He leaves to mourn his departure two sons and four daughters—Curtis and Raymond Smith; Mrs. Carrie Hayes, Mrs. A. D. Jones, all of Birmingham; Mrs. J. H. Davenport of Thorsby, and Mrs. D. L. Holley of Clanton; 31 grand children, 31 great grand children, and a host of other relatives and friends.

He was proceeded in death by his wife (Sallie) about 21 months.

His health was fair until he was injured in a fall 10 weeks ago, and was never able to be up any more. He bore his pain with a smile and always had such a pleasant disposition and winning ways that every one who knew him loved him.

Grieve not, loved ones, for we feel that our loss is Heaven's gain. He was a true Christian and always ready and willing to lend a helping hand to those in need and to speak comforting words to those who were troubled. He is resting in the Arms of Jesus, in that beautiful Land where we'll never grow old; away from this old world of sorrow, pain and care. God didn't take him away to make us sad, He only granted him the privilege of going on to Heaven where he could be with those loved ones gone before.

Father is not dead. He is only sleeping that sweet peaceful sleep. We loved him; yes, we loved him, but angels loved him more, and they have sweetly called him to yonder shining shore.

The remains were laid to rest in Mulberry Cemetery, with the comforting words spoken by the Rev. Homer Carroll from I Cor. 1:22, 26, 50, II Cor. 5:1-10. Spigener Funeral Home in charge.—The Children.

3 BILLION MILES ON B. F. GOODRICH ALL SYNTHETIC SILVERTOWNS!

We have limited quantities of these tires and will help you apply for ration certificate if you are eligible

CAR OWNERS have given the answer to "How good are synthetic tires?" By conservative estimate they rolled up 3 BILLION MILES on all-synthetic B. F. Goodrich Silvertowns.

First tires containing synthetic ever sold to U. S. car owners were B. F. Goodrich

Good performance reports come from B. F. Goodrich Silvertown users because B. F. Goodrich has had more experience with synthetic rubber than any other manufacturer. No other manufacturer made and sold tires containing synthetic rubber before the war. Before any other manufacturer even STARTED to sell them, those made by B. F. Goodrich had COMPLETED an 80-million-mile road test on the wheels of American cars. That extra experience can save you money, give you extra value in the new all-synthetic tires you buy today.

So—come in and see if you are eligible for these new tires. We have these new PROVEN all-synthetic Silvertowns. Drive in today.

LET US WORRY ABOUT YOUR TIRES FOR YOU

FARM SITUATION FACING FARMERS

Auburn, Ala. — Civilian food rationing per capita throughout may average about the same as last year.

Record egg production has depressed prices in recent months, but seasonal rise in prices from now on is expected to be greater than last year.

This season's prospective crop is expected to be fully adequate for normal food, feed and seed. Despite declining livestock numbers, reserve feed grain supplies for the country as a whole will be largely depleted by the end of summer.

Supplies for the next feeding year, beginning in October, will have to be mostly from 1944 production and ports.

Fertilizer supplies, including nitrogen, are expected to be adequate for summer and fall application on all crops.

CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

VOLUME XXII

CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1944.

NUMBER 29

COUNTY HAS SHIPPED 140 TON TOMATOES

From Monday, July 3rd, through Friday, July 14, Chilton county farmers sold 140 tons of tomatoes in Clanton to Frank Kant of Cleveland, Ohio. Over two-hundred farmers shared the approximately twenty thousand dollars paid for this fine lot of tomatoes.

Frank Kant operated out of the Chilton Berry Growers warehouse where he received cash payments on the spot. First grade tomatoes brought 8c per pound; second grade, 7c per pound, and culls 3c per pound. Cull tomatoes were only assembled here for the Birmingham market—none were packed for Northern shipments. Several tons of culls were completely lost and Mr. Kant stated that in future tomato buying he could not handle any culls. The 140 tons of tomatoes were graded and packed by local women, and school girls and Chilton county's tomatoes were sold in Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Georgia, Tennessee and Kentucky. The volume of tomatoes moved to out-of-state areas was great enough to prevent over-crowding and breaking of local markets; therefore, all Chilton county tomato growers were benefited by this cooperative marketing enterprise. The only good prices received in this year, but farmers have made a forward step in pooling their produce to be graded and packed for the consuming areas. Mr. Kant stated that Chilton county grown tomatoes were of sufficient quality to command favorable prices on Northern markets.

Members of the Chilton Packing company, who made the contacts necessary to get Mr. Kant interested in this area's tomato crop, all farmers in this project, and Mr. Frank Kant are to be congratulated for the reason of this successful market. It will mean much in developing the already large tomato industry in Chilton county.

NEW STORE GOING ON FIRST AVE.

Miss Mildred Easterling is having a new store built next to her residence on First Ave. For several years, she has operated "Mildred's" on the corner of Second Ave. and First Street, where besides serving a complete line of fancy groceries she served sandwiches and drinks to the children at Chilton County High School.

The new store will be stocked about the same as her old stand except that new modern fixtures will be installed and there will be much more room. The new place will be open for business within the next few weeks.

ANNUAL SINGING AT MARBLE VALLEY JULY 23RD.

The annual singing will be held at the Marble Valley Church in Coosa county the Fourth Sunday in July, as customary.

A large crowd is expected this year, singers and the public in general cordially invited to attend. Singing will be from the Sacred Harp and Union Harmony books. Due to singing and general circumstances it will be necessary to carry a well filled basket.

ANNUAL FOX HUNT JULY 26TH

The annual hunt of the Chilton County Fox Hunters Association will be held on Wednesday night, July 26, beginning at 6 o'clock.

In the absence of the President, Jim Parrish, Secretary and Treasurer, will be in charge. According to Mr. Parrish a barbecue dinner will be served starting at 6 o'clock sharp, and continue until all who care to attend are served. The membership fee is one dollar. The management of this year assures us that everyone will get their full dollar's worth of cats and fun.

This year's hunt will be held at Yellow Leaf Creek bridge. Go out Lay Dam Road to end of pavement, turn left and drive until you get to the table.

OP A TIRE INFORMATION
 The Tire Board wishes to inform the public there will be no more tire applications approved out side the regular meetings, which are held each Monday night. Please do not carry any applications to either of the Board members during the week to be signed. Please do not call at the Board office on Tuesday morning for your tire certificates. They will be mailed out as soon as possible after each Board meeting.

Tom Kemp Building New Warehouse

On the alley corner behind the Bus Station a new warehouse is being constructed by Mr. Tom Kemp. According to Mr. Kemp this new building will be used as a public warehouse as well as housing a complete line of feeds and fertilizers.

Mr. Kemp expects to have his new place ready by the first of September.

WAR LOAN COMMITTEE WRITES APPEALING ARTICLE TO THOSE WHO HAVE PURCHASED BONDS

This article is not for you if you are among those who refuse to buy War Bonds.

This is for those many loyal citizens who have bought bonds in the Fifth War Loan Drive and who have always contributed to the war effort. There are a great host of you and you never fail when the call is made. You have not failed now and you will not fail. It had been hoped that the many who have not bought bonds would come and help you loyal citizens, but all efforts to date have failed. They have been pleaded with, they have been shown the safety of these bonds and they have been appealed to in every known way. All efforts have failed. The attitude of these people seems to be: "I don't care whether we meet the quota or not. It means nothing to me if Chilton county is the one county in Alabama to fall down. I know we have many, many boys on the fighting fronts, but that is nothing to me, they can root hog or die insofar as I am concerned. I am perfectly willing to enjoy victory when it comes. I am willing to let my chest swell out and participate in the great victory. I am going to be among the number to shout from the house, 'we won the war.' I am willing to secure all the war profits I can, but I am not going to loan the government any of my money. I am not going to help the many loyal citizens of Chilton county place our great county in the winning column. Others can bear the burden, but not me. No, I am going to continue to enjoy my freedom and make all the money I can. I don't care about the Bond drive, the Red Cross, the USO, the welfare of the boys or anything else, just so long as I do not have to make any sacrifice!"

It is indeed unfortunate that some have the idea expressed above. We can do nothing about it. Now, because of the fact that this condition does exist, it is necessary to again call on you faithful. You have done a great deal. You have bought bonds until it hurts. You have said to the boys, "I am with you," and you have said that you do not want Chilton county to fail. The fact is that Chilton county will fail unless we give one more big push. The hope lies with you loyal citizens. It is hard to ask you to dig down again and again, but now we are face to face with failure, and it is suggested that you buy again. If you will buy twenty-five per cent of what you have bought the drive will go over. If you have bought a thousand dollar bond, then please buy $250.00 more. If you have bought a $500.00 bond, then please buy $125.00 more. If you have bought a $100.00 bond, then please buy $25.00 more, and so on. You are like the wounded soldier, you have done more than your part, but now it is necessary for you to do more. It is a case of "so few doing so much for so many."

The only reward you will have is the consciousness of having done your duty. It is a pity, a great pity that you have to carry your own load and the other fellow's also, but there is nothing that can be done about that. There will be no further effort made to get those who have not bought to do their duty. It is hopeless. They have not, they will not, they just don't care.

Please put your shoulder to the wheel one more time and let's get our job finished.

"And if our lines should form and break.
 Because of things you failed to make—
 The extra tank or ship or plane
 For which we waited all in vain,
 And the supplies that never came
 Will you then come and take the blame?"

For me, not you, will pay the cost
 Of battles you, not we, have lost."
 Chilton Co. War Finance Committee.

REVIVAL AT BILLINGSLEY

Starting Sunday, July 23rd, Dr. Carey Cox of Prattville will direct a revival at Billingsley Baptist Church. Services will be held daily at 11 a.m. and 8 p.m.

MT. PLEASANT, BEAT 4

The revival meeting will begin here the 4th Sunday, July 23rd. We are not sure we will have preaching every night. Bro. J. P. Littleton of Mineral Springs will help our pastor, Bro. Jodie Thomas, do the preaching. Every one has a special invitation to attend our meeting.—Mrs. C. O. Johnson.

WARNING.

Montgomery, Ala.—Warning that two instances have recently come to attention of the Department of Revenue indicating that men posing as State revenue examiners have checked tobacco stocks of merchants, was given today by Commissioner Dowling. "These men could not present the identification cards furnished by the State and explained that they were new in the territory," Commissioner Dowling said. "It is believed that such persons are attempting to pilfer cigarettes during a fake inspection and during the existing shortage in smoking supplies."

DEMOCRATIC LEADERS IN CHICAGO

This week finds the Democrat leaders of the country gathered together at Chicago to determine the opponents of Dewey and Bricker, Republican nominees in the general election in November.

Franklin D. Roosevelt is expected to lead by far the Presidential aspirants, but just who will be his running mate is hard to tell.

Most prominently mentioned to date is James F. Byrnes, who is Director of the Economic Stabilization.

Others mentioned to date are: Vice President, Henry Wallace, who has strong opposition throughout the country; Alfred (Happy) Chandler, of Kentucky; Claude Pepper of Florida; Joseph O'Mahoney of Wyoming and Elbert Thomas of Utah, all senators from their respective states.

These along with Governor Robert S. Kerr of Oklahoma, Senator Al Bean Barkley of Kentucky, Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, Senator Scott Lucas of Illinois, and Representative Mary T. Norton of N. J. have been mentioned in pre-convention lobby gossip. Numerous other big names in democratic circles have been mentioned.

The prospective battle over the vice presidency is scheduled to reach the balloting stage about Friday of this week.

Alabama Mills Victory Garden Contest Closes

The Alabama Mills Victory Gardens were recently judged and awards were made to the winners. Approximately 25 gardens were entered in the contest, and of the 25 gardens most of the contestants did a fine job with their gardens.

First Place Award of $25 was made to Mrs. W. J. Armstrong; Second Place Award of $10 to Mr. A. L. Smitherman, and Third Place Award of $5 to Mr. J. C. Stroud. All awards were given by Alabama Mills.

The gardens were judged according to variety of vegetables, condition of garden, number of plantings made and general garden planning. Gardens were judged as to size as it would not have been practical, nor was land available for all contestants to have had as large gardens as some contestants entered. Such crops as Irish potatoes, turnips, etc., that had already been harvested were taken into consideration and were judged accordingly.

Good Victory gardens are one step nearer to meeting the high food production goal that has been set for us to meet, and we congratulate Alabama Mills on the fine job they have done.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers

Jams to Help Save on Butter Next Winter

Berries for jams and jellies need picking over to remove the too-soft or wormy ones from the good. Use colander and large pans to make an easy job of this preliminary step.

Next winter when butter and other fats are scarce, you'll thank yourself for putting up a generous supply of jams, jellies, butters and marmalades to help spread bread and rolls.

Fruits and berries are plentiful now and good spreads can be made without using the one cup of sugar for one cup of fruit, in case your canning sugar is at a premium. In fact, in many cases you'll find that three-fourths of a cup of sugar to one cup of fruit will work perfectly well.

To assure success in making jams and jellies, watch cooking time carefully. In most cases, the juice from the fruit or berry is extracted slowly, but when juice and sugar are combined, cook quickly to finish so that none of the bright color of the fruit is sacrificed.

When the fruit or berry is low in natural pectin, use a commercial form and follow directions for sugar and juice.

Ripe Sour Cherry Jelly. (Makes 1 medium-sized glasses)
3 cups juice
4 cups sugar
1 box powdered fruit pectin

To prepare juice, stem and crush about 3 1/2 pounds fully ripe cherries. Add 1/2 cup water, bring to a boil, and simmer, covered, for 10 minutes. Place fruit in jelly bag and squeeze out juice. If there is a shortage of juice, add a little water to fruit in bag and squeeze again.

Measure sugar into a dry dish and set aside until needed. Measure juice into a 3 or 4 quart jelly bag and pour over hottest fire. Add powdered fruit pectin and mix well. Continue stirring until mixture comes to a hard boil. Pour in sugar at once, stirring constantly. Continue stirring, bring to a full rolling boil, and boil hard 1/2 minute.

Remove from fire, skim and pour quickly. Paraffin hot jelly at once. Dried Apricot and Pineapple Jam. (Makes 11 6-ounce glasses)

4 cups prepared fruit
7 cups sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare fruit, add 2 cups water to 1/2 pound apricots. Cover and let stand overnight. Drain fruit, grind or chop fine and mix with juice. Grind well or grind 1 medium-sized pineapple or use No. 2 can crushed pineapple. Measure sugar and fruit into a large kettle filling up last cup with water if necessary.

Bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Then remove kettle from fire and stir in bottled pectin. Skim. Pour quickly. Paraffin hot jam at once. Marmalade, golden tinted and sugary as the summer day, will win many favorites this winter:

- Carrot-Orange Marmalade. (Makes about 9 glasses)
6 oranges
4 lemons
4 cups water
6 cups prepared carrots
5 cups sugar

Remove peel from the oranges and 2 of the lemons and chop. Soak in water overnight and drain, saving water.

Cut oranges into small pieces; dice carrots or put through a food chopper. Mix the peel, chopped oranges and carrots and cook, covered, until tender with as little water as possible.

Add sugar and water in which the peels were soaked and cook uncovered until thick and clear. Add juice of the lemons, cook 5 minutes longer. Pour into hot, sterilized glasses or jars.

Conserve is very much like jam, but it usually has raisins or nuts or both in it:

- Peach-Cantaloupe Conserve. (Makes about 5 glasses)
1 pint prepared peaches
1 pint prepared cantaloupe
Juice and grated rind of 2 lemons
3 cups sugar
1/2 cup English walnuts

Wash and peel peaches and dice. Remove seeds from cantaloupe, pare and dice. Combine all ingredients except nutmeats. Cook slowly until mixture boils. Boil rapidly until thick and clear. Add nutmeats and pour into hot sterilized glasses. Homemakers who are hunting for new combinations for jellies will like these. Use the long boil method in preparing them.

The last step in jelly and jam making is an easy one. Pour paraffin over the hot fruit mixture as soon as it is ladled into glasses and skimmed.

Jellies Used	Sugar Needed
Current, 2 cups	4 cups
Red Raspberry, 2 cups	4 cups
Plum, 2 cups	4 cups

For those who wish to make jellies out of fruit juices, canned this summer, there is a simple procedure to follow. If there is not enough sugar to fill all your canning and jelly-making needs, then the best way of assuring yourself of jelly, is to put up the juice and make it up into jelly when you do have the sugar.

Follow directions for preparing fruit or berry juice as in jelly-making recipes. Do not add fruit or summer unless recipe directs it. After juice has been extracted, place in jelly bag and squeeze out the juice.

Fill canning jars to shoulder and seal according to manufacturers' directions. Place jars into a boiling water bath (180 degrees) with water reaching an inch or two above the jars. Keep water at simmering temperature and process pints of juice 20 minutes, quarts 30 minutes.

Remove jars and finish sealing, if necessary. Cool as rapidly as possible but avoid a draft.

To Make the Jelly. When you desire to make the jelly, use your favorite recipe or those with the commercial pectins. These jellies have the same texture as those made from fresh products.

If you wish additional instruction for canning fruit or berries, write to Miss Lynn Chambers, 210 South Desplaines Street, Chicago 6, Illinois. Please enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply.

Let's Face Facts

Republicans Promise Farmers Fair Share Of National Income

By BARROW LYONS
WNU Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.

There is a plank in the Republican agricultural platform that goes to the heart of what the farmer wants. It reads: "We propose to assure an American market price to the American farmer and the protection of such price by means of support prices, commodity loans, or a combination thereof, together with other means as may be necessary to assure an income to agriculture that is fair and equitable in comparison with labor, business and industry. We oppose subsidies as a substitute for fair markets."

Barrow Lyons means that one need reflect on this only a little to realize how far the farmer and the Republican party has moved from traditional moorings at the post of the good old law of supply and demand as the price determinant. Although the plank does not mention parity prices, viewed in the light of this plank's history, parity price and parity income are implied.

It means that the organized farmer realizes that to prosper, a farm must be found to control farm prices, and that farm income must be held in fair relation to the income of labor and business. Of course, this means that an equitable share should go also to labor and to business. Obviously, this calls for national machinery to determine what income actually is going to the various segments of society.

Congress is the only body in a position to pass final judgment on what is a fair share for each, although labor and business may raise objections because about 74 per cent of the national income comes from rural areas. Anyhow, if the implications of this plank are squarely faced, it holds promise both for the farmer and for the city worker.

This plank does not sound as though it had been written by a politician that desires to purchase farm products at low prices, such as the millers or meat packers. Governor Bourke B. Hickenlooper of Iowa, who was the chairman of the Republican agricultural subcommittee in Chicago that drafted the farm plank, assured me in a long interview in Chicago that no pressure was brought upon the committee by commercial interests to influence the farm plank.

"The committee held regional hearings in Chicago, Salt Lake City and New York," he said, "and nowhere was it approached by milling, packing or railway interests—least to the best of my knowledge, and I think I would know."

This idea of protecting the farmer's share of national income possibly is typical of the rejuvenated Republican party. Superficially it does not fit into the picture of the Republican party as the party of the great industrial interests. It implies that the share of the farmer has been too small in the past, which can only mean that the share of someone else has been too great.

Stand on Labor

At the hearing held by the agricultural subcommittee it was clear that the Grange and the Farmers Union felt that the share of many underpaid industrial workers had not been too great. The American Farm Bureau federation has not taken as generous a stand toward labor. Certainly, the plank needs definition and clarification in respect to some of its implications. Governor Hickenlooper said he believed industry was beginning to accept the idea that adequate income for the farmer and industrial worker was good for industry also.

Another extremely interesting plank is that which declares for "arrangements which will enable farmers to make necessary adjustments in production of any given basic crop, only if domestic surpluses should become abnormal and exceed manageable proportions."

Apparently there is a limit even to the political concept of an economy of abundance. It may be presumed that one of the evidences of surplus is becoming unmanageable would be the tendency for market prices to fall below support price.

In other words, production is to be controlled only when development of new uses for a commodity, government purchases of surpluses and commodity loans fail to do the job. We hope those remedies never prove to be too late to sustain farm income in "fair and equitable comparison with labor, business and industry."

"Sound irrigation projects administered as far as possible at state and regional levels," is included in the last paragraph of the farm platform. This is an extremely controversial plank, as it creates a serious conflict. In the Central Valley of California, where large corporate farms have been highly developed, the big farmers are anxious to modify the operation of the Reclamation act, which makes it necessary for farms of more than 160 acres to dispose of the balance of land above that amount, if they receive water from the new project.

Midwest Nationalist View Result of 'Honest Doubt'

Isolationism in Prairie States Is Not "Head in Sand" Viewpoint; Stems From Fear of Entanglements.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

The flag over the White House lazily embraces its staff; squirrels and starlings loaf on the wide lawn; the east gate is still locked but the pacing sentry is gone and only the friendly White House pool and secret service men guard the western portal and scrutinize the credentials of visitors, most of whom they know. There is "no admittance except on business," but these days, as the national meet in Chicago, much of the "business" here, as elsewhere, is politics.

Some things of political significance have happened since the Republicans chose their candidates in the sweltering heat of the Chicago Stadium, now warming the blood of their opponents.

By this time it is clear that the Democratic meeting, always a mere spirited affair in the Republican conclaves, has a serious undertone, even though "the Democrats love a Donnybrook," as one of them just reminded me.

There is one outstanding reason for the need of some very careful planning on the part of the administration supporters even though they feel confident that the country will not "swap horses in the middle of a stream."

One veteran politician, ardently anti-administration but too long a laborer in the vineyard to let his emotions run away with his hard sense, said to me: "This time the Republicans have a ticket that the people who don't want Roosevelt can vote for." That seems faint praise but it was not meant to be damning.

Of course, you don't have to be a cynic to admit that the vote which usually wins a presidential election is a vote against the man or the party in power. The preponderance of that vote is motivated by the good old American idea that in government, variety is the spice of the nation's life. Since Hitler started on the rampage a purely artificial situation has existed which tended to nullify that natural trend. And the one, big, imponderable in the coming election is the relative weight of the two ancient slogans "no more of the rascals out" and "don't swap horses while crossing a stream."

Because the Republican leaders realized this they tried to subordinate all other efforts to the end of making the importance of anything which administration stands for, which affects the war and international relations. That is why harmony was achieved as it was not achieved at the Philadelphia convention, why the fiercely conflicting forces were silenced behind closed doors leaving the delegates on the floor as harmonious as a Hayden string quartet.

The real job was to keep the convention from producing a foreign plank which would make it possible for the Democrats to say, "as far as world affairs go, you won't benefit by making a change, and you might affect the war, or the peace."

Strong 'Nationalist' Feeling in Middle West

How strongly "nationalist" the Middle West is is not realized. One Republican who has done as much as any to try to work out a compromise between the Wendell Willkie philosophy of foreign relations and the isolationist viewpoint said to me when the tempest in the subcommittee drawing up the foreign policy plank was having its fiercest conflict.

"You have no idea how the isolationist sentiment out here has grown in the last few weeks. These people don't want to be isolationists but if they are forced to go on record with a choice they will choose that way."

This was when Willkie, Governor Edge of New Jersey and others were demanding stronger language in the plank, seeking to commit the Republican party to a more positive postwar program of international cooperation.

That was finally avoided. Partly by building up a "world-state" straw-man and knocking it over, partly by insisting on phrases capable of wide interpretation, and turning the interpretation over to the delegates. The second compromise was —Bricker's acceptance of the vice presidential nomination—was really a part of the first, made in the hope that Bricker's middlewestern atmosphere and Dewey's eastern flavor could produce a mixture palatable to current ally.

After the convention I set out to look into this so-called midwest isolationism, for when I first heard that phrase "I didn't quite know what it meant. Later I think I found out. I spent the evening in a private home of two middle-class middlewesterners, a retired engineer and his wife, a college-bred, prairie-farm girl.

My host first showed me the progress of his Victory garden, one of many that crept up over the wide lawns of the comfortable suburban community, with its corn and beans, squash and pumpkins (ummm, I said, fried parsnips, we can't get them in Washington).

We stopped in next door where the neighbor lady (who works in a war industry) was just preparing a dish of bitter wind that blows from the Tribune tower—I know of no newspaper in the country which the profession (feet up, after "30") criticizes as sharply, including its own alumni, but there is no question that the Chicago Tribune is as much a part of the prairie state as the wind that ripples its broad green fields of corn.

An Honest Doubt Of International Set-Up

I am not citing this family, normal Republican for their economic views, but to show what Midwest isolationism is: namely, an honest doubt that any strong international organization which in any way "commits" the United States to act in the foreign field in close cooperation with either Great Britain (who they fear "leads us by the nose") or Russia whom they regard as the "heavenly Chinese" of Bret Hart, noted for "ways that are dark"—or worse.

This viewpoint is not the ostrich, "head-in-the-sand" viewpoint, it is an honest and deep and overshadowing fear. And if the intellectuals feel that way consider how those who don't get the "other side" feel, to say nothing of people like the ones who tried to storm the Bricker headquarters at the convention, led by the shrill fringe of the screaming isolationists.

These people aren't worrying half as much about not swapping horses crossing a stream as they are about getting out of the stream. And so what the Democrats are having to consider is this: to what degree will this attitude affect the large "throw them out" element and thus overcome the "don't throw them out until we've got across the river" feeling?

Democrats will tell you that they have what they need: the "liberals," the labor vote, part of the farmer vote and enough of "just votes"—the kind that kept Roosevelt in office after the protest-support which put him in had worn off. I wouldn't be surprised if that were true. But there are many border-line Republicans, and discontented, fair-weather Democrats who may feel the way my politician friend did when he said there was a ticket which the people who don't want Roosevelt could vote for.

At the present convention there is a very careful consideration of the factors. When Senator Pepper of Florida, ardent New Dealer, sounded the warning to the revolting southern Democrats, he was, perhaps, giving voice to a deeper distress. He said a split in the Democratic party would assure the election of a Republican. What he may have meant was that a lot of folks whose political feet are itching have at last decided that most of the "shootin' over" and "tates" they think it is safe to hunt a "better" ole."

Tibetans Worship Huge Images of Gods in Butter

One of the strange and fascinating customs of that still unknown and mysterious land of Tibet beyond the Himalayas is the Butter festival.

At this festival there are erected 10-foot-high images of the gods, marvelously modeled—in butter. It is made from the milk of yaks and is supplied by the worshippers. Their gifts are all mixed together and then colored.

All the statues are illuminated by thousands of butter lamps, which slowly but surely melt the butter so that, by the end of the festival, they have become just meaningless masses of fat. When everything is over, the butter is thrown away for the birds to feed on.

"80.6% of sufferers showed CLINICAL IMPROVEMENT after only 10-day treatment with SORETONE"

Foster D. Seel, Inc., well-known consulting chemist, have just completed a test with a group of men and women suffering from Athlete's Foot. These people were told to use Sorotone. At the end of only a ten-day period, their feet were examined in two ways: 1. Scrapings were taken from the feet and examined by the bacteriologist. 2. Each subject was examined by a physician. We quote from the report:

"After the use of Sorotone according to the directions on the label for a period of only ten days, 80.6% of the cases showed clinical improvement of an infection which is most stubborn to control."

Improvements were shown in the symptoms of Athlete's Foot—the itching, burning, redness, etc. The report says:

"In our opinion Sorotone is of very definite benefit in the treatment of this disease, which is commonly known as 'Athlete's Foot.'"

So if Athlete's Foot troubles you, don't postpone with this nasty, devilish, stubborn infection. Get SOROTONE! McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Connecticut.

T/5 Charlie Stonge is returning after 29 months overseas in the South Pacific. He will arrive at Camp Shelby and then from there to Verbena where he will visit his mother Mrs. Mattie Stonge.

A LETTER FROM ENGLAND TO A MOTHER

This letter was written to Mrs. Zedie Houston of Stanton, from a friend of her sons in England.

Sunny Cottage,
Laverstock,
Salisbury.

Tuesday, June 6, 1944

Dear Mrs. Houston:

I feel on a day so important to us all you would like to hear about your sons, R. Q. and John. I have had the pleasure of knowing them, while they have been in England; and once to meet your younger son, Denny.

We have spent many enjoyable evenings in Salisbury, R. Q. has now left here, I have made inquiries, and understand he went at eight o'clock this morning.

"John is still in England, I was talking to him on the telephone an hour ago. He does not like being parted from R. Q.

Now I will try to tell you a little about the night of invasion. It was nearly 11:30 and just getting dark when suddenly, I heard the drone of heavy bombers. On looking out across the hills, I saw thousands of pink lights; which, as they came over, were trooper-carriers. Then came the gliders, and again, more bombers; this continued during the whole night, we landed about six this morning.

R. Q. and John are both in good health, so please try not to worry too much. They are sons to be proud of, and I know they are thinking of you.

Robert, once said, "My mother is the most important person, in this world to me." I thought you would like to know.

I remain,

Sincerely,
MARION E. LOVELACE.

Pvt. Luther Kidrick from Fort McClellan, Ala., was home for the week end with his family.

Cpl. Guy Alfred from Florida is spending a 15-day furlough here with his wife, the former Josephine Stanley, and his mother, Mrs. Hattie Alfred.

RECEIVED AIR MEDAL

The Air Medal has recently been presented to Second Lieutenant John W. Plyler, 23, for Meritorious Achievement, while participating in several Eighth AAF bombing attacks against war-making targets in Germany and Nazi-occupied Continental Europe.

Pilot of the Flying Fortress, "Lady Satan," Lt. Plyler was employed as a field clerk by the Alabama Ordnance Works, Childersburg, Ala., before his entrance into the AAF on September 3, 1941.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Plyler, of 1405 2nd. Ave., Clanton, Ala.

SGT. CHARLES T. SHOULTS

Sergeant Charles T. Shoults, 24, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Shoults of Rt. 1, Lawley, now serving in an engineer gunner in a B-24, has recently been awarded the Air Medal.

He has been overseas since February of this year. In that time he has flown 21 combat missions. He has seen action over France, Italy, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Rumania and Yugoslavia.

In civilian life Sgt. Shoults graduated from Maplesville High School class of 1938 and prior to his entry into the service, August 4, 1941, was engaged in farming. He has a brother, Allen Shoults, in the Navy.

FERTILIZERS PAY!

POINT 2
in the 1944 8-POINT
NATIONAL
MILK PRODUCTION PROGRAM

The 8 Point Program

1. Grow more legume hay, pasture, and grain.
2. Fertilize to increase quantity and quality of feed.
3. Feed to avoid summer milk slump.
4. Feed cows liberally during their dry period.
5. Keep as many cows as feed and labor permit.
6. Market more whole milk whenever possible.
7. Produce good-quality milk and avoid waste.
8. Breed for better herd replacements.

Good forage and lots of it is needed for heavy milk production—both hay and pasture land will produce more and better forage if properly fertilized... Barnyard manure improves pasture and hay yields—use it as far as it will go. Commercial fertilizers and lime pay too, but different soils require different treatment—use them as advised by your county agent or State specialist.

We Don't Know What They'll Look Like

IT IS NOT probable that there will be many immediate changes in the design of post-war electrical appliances; we know that the better ones made by reputable manufacturers will give you what you've always wanted in electrical appliances—cleanliness, convenience, comfort.

The charge for the electricity to operate them will continue to be low.

There's one important thing to remember—wires of certain sizes can carry just so much electricity. Therefore, if you are planning to build or remodel after the war, you will be wise to plan to install wires big enough to carry the current for not only the appliances you already have, but those you expect to have.

When the end of the war is more clearly in sight and home building again becomes possible, we will reestablish our wiring advisory service for home builders.

The Never-Ending Miracle of Southern Timber

WOOD has always played a vital role in the progress of civilization... for homes, factories, furniture, paper, airplanes, ships, farm implements, industrial equipment and other things. New discoveries will provide even greater opportunity for postwar development and employment.

Our southeastern states consistently produce about 30% of the softwood and 50% of the hardwood of the United States—could supply even more if needed. In L & N territory alone, over 2,000 establishments handle timber products of every description. This output in 1942 exceeded $200,000,000 in value, of which over $42,000,000 was paid for labor. Last year the L & N moved 113,000 carloads of these wood products, and otherwise contributed importantly to the development of southern timber resources.

Thus we see the practical application of American Free Enterprise... what it has accomplished... how men of vision and courage built businesses of their own, and at the same time benefiting their neighbors and adding to the progress of the South.

The immediate purpose of The Old Reliable is to help win the war. This done, its energies will be again directed to the development of an even greater Southern industry—a goal it has pursued throughout more than 94 years of service.

U.S. Farmers See Bumper Crops; Red Army 'At Germany's Gates'; Allies Continue Normandy Gains

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Slowly but steadily, Allied armies are closing the steel ring around Hitler's wanted Fortress Europe, with the Russians making the most spectacular advances from the east.

PACIFIC:

New Solan

With Saipan under U. S. control after defeat of its big Jan. garrison after some of the bloodiest fighting of the Pacific war, the American high command turned its attention to neighboring islands in the steady drive toward the Asiatic mainland. Meanwhile, bitter fighting continued to rage in China where the Japanese strove to seize control of the entire eastern seaboard and establish a defense wall against an Allied drive through the country for an eventual assault on their homeland.

Strong U. S. naval forces joined with equally formidable air units in blasting the Japs holding the Carolines and remainder of the Marianas and Marshall Islands, while General MacArthur's doughboys cleaned up additional isles off of New Guinea blocking the high road to the Philippines and Dutch Indies.

AGRICULTURE:

Good Crops

Answering the government's demands for heavy food production despite machinery and manpower difficulties, the nation's farmers will harvest bumper crops this year, with output of only dry beans and peas, peanuts and potatoes below 1943 levels.

In reporting on crop prospects, the U. S. department of agriculture predicted a wheat harvest of 1,328,000,000 bushels, 119,000,000 above the record of 1915 and 291,000,000 over 1943. At an indicated 2,980,000,000 bushels, the corn crop would be the country's fifth largest, but about 100,000,000 below last year.

Also predicted were good crops of oats and barley and near record production for hay, fruits, vegetables and soybeans. A 20 per cent increase in commercial or truck crops for the fresh market also was anticipated. Output of apples, pears, grapes, cherries, plums, prunes and apricots was expected to increase 18 per cent over last year's short crop.

Less Cotton

Not expected to share in the bumper harvest were the nation's cotton farmers, who planted the smallest acreage since 1895 in the face of unfavorable weather and labor shortages.

With only 20,472,000 acres reported in cultivation, cotton planting was 6 per cent less than last year and 35 per cent below the 1933-42 average.

Although production was expected to net around 10,000,000 bales compared with annual consumption of 11,000,000 bales, carryover of another 10,000,000 bales stands as an insurance against any future cotton famine.

MEAT PRODUCTION:

Top Levels

Matching the all-out production of field crops, busy U. S. stock raisers set record volumes of hogs and cattle to market during the first six months of 1944.

Compared with 29,897,285 hogs slaughtered during the first half of 1943, 41,411,972 were butchered in the same period this year. Whereas 4,382,667 cattle were slaughtered during the first six months of 1943, 6,171,190 were sent to the pens this year.

Following the exceptionally heavy hog slaughter during the early months of 1944, marketing tapered off in June, but was still 7 per cent above the level for the same month in 1943. At 1,822,971, sheep slaughtered in June topped the mark of 1,593,675 set in the same month last year.

TWINS

To the amazement of medical authorities, twins have been borne by a Connecticut woman 11 days apart. An interval of four days is the longest previously recorded. A Chicago obstetrician calls the case "phenomenal," and other specialists expressed surprise and interest in various terms. The babies, a boy and a girl, were in good health, although they were one month premature. They were only slightly below average weight at birth.

RUSSIA:

New Morals

With the war having exacted a heavy toll of life, the Soviet government moved to stimulate the Russian birthrate by awarding special financial assistance and social recognition to mothers of large families, and easing the family's lot by reducing income taxes.

At the same time, the Soviets sought to further bolster family ties by putting an end to easy divorces and solemnizing wedding ceremonies. Both parties must now appear at divorce proceedings and furnish witnesses, and courts will attempt to affect reconciliations before granting separations.

At birth of a third child, the parents receive $76, and for a fourth they get $247 plus $15.20 monthly until the child reaches five years of age. Rates increase according to number, with parents of an 11th child receiving $950, plus $37 monthly.

While childless citizens will have to pay 6 per cent of their income in taxes, those with one child will only have to return 1 per cent, and those with two or three children will return 1/2 of 1 per cent.

CIVILIAN GOODS:

Buck Production

With War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes intervening, Donald Nelson's plans for a gradual reconversion of industry to civilian production through use of idle plant facilities and surplus materials and manpower were made effective over the strong opposition of the military chiefs.

As the military chiefs contended that Nelson's reconversion plan would affect war production, Senator Harry Truman (Mo.) of the senate was investigating committee, asserted that army and navy representatives wanted to create a manpower surplus.

Nelson's plan for reconversion also has been strongly backed by certain interests which demand resumption of civilian production until war work peters out and all companies are in a position to start manufacturing.

FURS:

U. S. Bag

With at least 19,500,000 fur animals caught in the U. S. and Alaska during 1943-44 trappers earned $100,000,000, or an average of more than $5 a pelt, the fish and wildlife service announced. Because some states do not keep accurate records, however, the catch actually might have been much higher.

With the federal tax on furs at 10 per cent, tax collections of $54,925,218 indicated total retail sales of about $550,000,000. Sales included imported furs, which made up half the domestic market before the war.

THE WEASEL

Latest of the army's all-vehicle devices is the M-29 or "weasel," powered by a passenger car engine and capable of operating over snow, deep mud, sand, or paved highways with its broad, rubber-aded tracks. Its pressure on the ground is about one-fourth of a fully equipped infantryman.

MUNITIONS:

More Shells

Reflecting the intensity of the fighting in Europe, the war department called for a 200 per cent increase in the production of heavy artillery ammunition to blast enemy defenses.

Because of the importance of the new program to the prosecution of the war, about $100,000,000 will be spent on machine tools, presses and furnaces alone for providing additional production facilities, and priorities in material and manpower will be obtained.

In assaulting the Nazis' Gustav line below Cassino, it was pointed out the U. S. Fifth army used 64,750,000 pounds of heavy artillery ammunition in one month, in addition to shells for smaller guns, machine guns and mortars, and bullets for rifles.

Previously the army had ordered an increase in the production of heavy artillery and tanks.

MISCELLANY

BAKES ON DESERT: An army officer died of heat exhaustion and thirst on a lonely desert trail when he got stuck in sand 45 miles south-east of Kingman, Ariz. The 37-year-old captain, who normally weighed 180 pounds, lost 60 pounds through evaporation in four hours. Doctors say he lost consciousness through dehydration in the intense 130-degree heat.

Here Is Best Story

Of Year About Twins

KNOXVILLE, TENN. — Miss Eliza Fowler of Maryville and Mrs. E. L. Keith of Clinton have twins. Miss Fowler, while walking, spied something and said aloud: "Oh, there you are!" "Twins only her reflection in a street mirror. When she discovered it wasn't her sister she hurried away blushing."

Fearless Jungle

'Tarzan' Caught

Giant Who Roamed Forests Lands in Jail.

JOHANNESBURG, SO. AFRICA. — A naked black giant who for 15 years has roamed the South African forests as the unarmed, fearless master of lions, leopards and buffaloes, has wound up in the white man's jail because he slaughtered state protected game for food.

The almost legendary tale of this lord of the jungle was told by Rangers who long had tracked him fruitlessly and finally caught him in the Kruger national park game sanctuary only after he had injured a leg in leaping from a crag. This was the story:

Five years ago the giant Negro quarreled with his people in the hills beyond Johannesburg and left the tribe. Soon even his name was forgotten, but Rangers began encountering a fitting, shadowy figure in the parklands. They found clever handmade snares and evidence that large animals had been trapped, but they never found a carcass.

Rangers who gave chase said he "ran like a deer, had a leopard's cunning and seemed as strong as three men." His trail always vanished.

At night, rangers heard the agonized roars of dying buffaloes, and often the death screams of lions near their bivouacs, but dawn never disclosed a trace of the animals. Patient search finally led them to a cavern, its floor heaped with the clean picked bones of the most savage of the wild. The giant who had the cavern was not at home.

Again, rangers found him asleep. They quietly encircled him, and one threw a burning brand on him. He leaped up with a terrifying animal-like scream and broke through the ring in the bush.

Finally, in one swift pursuit, he lost his footing on a rock, his leg twisted under him, and the long chase was over.

In court, the prisoner proudly admitted his charges. Lion meat, he mumbled, was his favorite food. The judge sent him to prison and ordered a mental examination.

Penicillin Derivative

Saves the Life of Boy

LONDON. — A derivative of penicillin, was credited with saving the life of a nine-year-old boy with a ruptured appendix who could not be operated upon because of hemophilia, a hereditary tendency to spontaneous bleeding.

A statement issued on behalf of Wellhouse hospital at Barnet gave no details but said the boy contains living penicillin (in form of mold) and other things as well. One of the experimenters with the product is Dr. Hans Enoch, 47, a German physician.

"I do not want to make any claims for the drug until we have had much more experience in its use with human beings," he said.

The Times and other London newspapers hailed news of the product, which it was said can be made cheaply in quantities.

Quest by Americans for Elephants Gets Results

ELKHART, IND. — Capt. Maynard White, a mapping squadron flight commander on the Burma front, said that elephants aren't hard to get in India—depending on whether you want the ivory kind or the ones on the hoof.

A soldier, who just landed in India, White relates, saw an ivory elephant in a store window for 100 rupees and thought they'd probably be cheaper in the interior. Later he told an Indian what he wanted and cautioned that he didn't want a big one.

The Indian departed with 200 rupees to pay for two ivory elephants to send home as souvenirs. Strictly dependable, the Indian returned with two small ones. He said that grown live elephants can be considered small.

Shearer in Army; Still

Is Shearer of Sheep

ABILENE, KAN. — George Brightbill reckoned without those omniscient army records when, upon entering service, he thought he was through for a while with his occupation as a sheep shearer.

Brightbill was sent to one of the Aleutian islands where there happened to be 200 sheep left by natives, who had fed before the Japanese invasion. They hadn't been sheared for two years. The commanding officer thought this should be rectified, looked over the map and said you can guess who drew the job of shearing those 200 sheep.

Railroads Forced to Turn Down Over-Sized Freight

Twice in recent years the railroads have been unable to accept pieces of freight for transportation because of their large size. In one case, a giant oil tank had to be towed from Hoboken up the Hudson and through the New York state barge canal and the Great Lakes to Chicago.

In the other case, the large pipes for Boulder dam, owing to their 30-foot diameter, had to be fabricated at the site in a plant erected for the purpose.

C. FENN JONES

I am deeply grateful to you for the notice given me in your paper last week for my services to the people of Clanton as their Mayor. It was to secure the things Clanton needed and for our general civic development that I labored, and not at all for my own personal gain. I point with much pride to our paved streets in the residential sections, to the City Hall Building, the concrete bridges, and especially to our splendid water system.

After we extended the water and sewer lines to the Reynolds Addition, the Willis Addition, to the Mill Village and to South and West Clanton, many new homes have been built in these sections resulting in increased revenue to the City from property tax and water sales. Our supply of water now is ample for a population of 20 thousand or more, and our storage capacity was increased from 180 thousand gallons to 700 thousand which affords adequate fire protection and has given us a lower fire insurance rate in some parts of the city.

Judging the future by the past there is no way of estimating how many years hence the people of Clanton will be getting water over this system we built in 1938. And the concrete bridge on the Lay Dam road, possibly a hundred years from now, will be affording passage over the creek to the public and especially to the citizens of Clanton.

When I took office the annual income of the City as shown by the Auditor's report was $22,155.16. When I left the office October 1st, 1940, the income was shown by the Auditor to be $36,699.41. Good business handling and daily attention to the affairs of the city contributed to the wonderful increase in revenue, and a growth in population from 1,847 to 1,000, and our tax rate was not increased.

I am sincerely proud of my administration. It is outstanding for its progress and permanent improvement. We built for the future, and not just for today.

My defeat in 1940 was disappointing because I had the interest of Clanton at heart, and I desired so very much to complete our program which included, among other things, a swimming pool for the kiddies and a sewage disposal plant for the protection of health and live stock that had access to the creek in which our sewage emptied.

I am not sure I will ask for the office again. If the desire for my services were so great and general, so much so that no opposition would appear, then I would not refuse to DONATE four more years of my life to the people in an effort to make our city a better and more comfortable place to live. But to enter a heated contest just to gain the privilege of making a personal sacrifice to serve the public and win the office by a small majority, possibly, does not quite appeal to me. However, in due time, I shall announce for the office, or I will decline to do so. Election day is two months off; in the meantime the voters can indicate their preference for Mayor even before voting day, if they care to do so.—C. FENN JONES.

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

From the way that our good friend, Levine, is campaigning for Leo on for the office of Mayor, we can see a vote for Leo is a vote for a good friend, and that's another good thing. We count among our good friends J. L. Penton of Route Three, who went out to see Mr. Penton last afternoon after the daily mail had been finished and while the roads were loaded with watermelons, melons, etc., etc., which we appreciated very much. All of which leads up to a remark by one of our nephews, Toliver Meadows, who is in Birmingham and is spending his vacation with us here. He said, "Uncle Ben, do you all just go on and on to your neighbors and get them to eat?"

Like the Democrats have been out their differences now and are ready to go to work on winning the election in November. Naming Wallace as a runner-up instead of Roosevelt sure saved a vote for the Democrats. So many Southerners just never would stomach Wallace. Seems true, but Missouri is absolutely agreed to both sides.

Clanton Horse Show officials and members are planning a real horse show on August 30th, this year. It will be a bigger and better show than any held last year, and you know that that will mean. Three times as much cash is going in prizes alone. The committees are certainly leaving nothing undone to make it a big success. We predicted last year that it would grow into an annual affair, and it is only that coming true, but a bigger annual affair.

A special note this week that is a lumber and pulpwood edition. We were to have run a special edition for this edition, but some of the advertisers didn't get in with their advertising space so we had to resort to what we had to combine two issues into one. The Government needs forest products badly, and your patriotic duty to do all in your power to keep logs rolling to the mills and then on toward the boys in the front lines.

The question has been asked, "What is the average woman want from a man?" Just a little more than the average man can give."

The following notice appeared in a newspaper: "On Wednesday morning the Ladies Aid of the Methodist Church will hold a rummage sale. It will be a good chance to get rid of anything not worth keeping, but don't throw away. Bring your own."

June report of births in the county exploded the popular idea that more boy babies born than girls during a war. In the total number of births for June that were reported to the County Health Dept., 16 were girls and 9 were boys. Two of the births were twins: One set of twin girls to Mr. and Mrs. Walter Malchek, of Lawley and a set of twin girls to a colored couple, Jessie and Lilly Willis of Thorsby.

Seems that this Mayor's race promises to develop into an interesting affair. - Since last week Leo Thompson has informed us that he definitely will be a candidate. Ex-Mayor C. Penn Jones is sure to be in there pitching, and several dark horses have been mentioned for the time it is sure to melt down to a two man race, and we expect those two to be Jones and Thompson.

We do not think our Volunteer Fire Department can be praised too highly for the work they are doing in combating fires in Clanton. Just for instance the Horace Powell fire last week. We were driving by the home of the Powells when the fire first started blowing. At that time flames were snooting high above the roof of the rear of the house. One would ordinarily suppose there was no hope at all for the dwelling as the fire had made such headway. However, within a very few minutes after the fire truck arrived the fire was under control and the damage was estimated at only about five-hundred dollars. The place could have easily been a total loss. One of Clanton's greatest assets is her Volunteer Fire Department. We place ours second to none in the State.

The wife brought this home from the Thursday afternoon bridge. Minnie Wade told it or we wouldn't have believed it at all - it is we have used a half-pound of salt, taking it with a grain at a time. Anyway, this is the way it was told to me. Elizabeth Wade was going to fly around a bit out at the airport. Her lather, Charles, was also going upstairs for a short fly. Elizabeth took off and within the given time her father followed. When Elizabeth made a turn the wind caught her nice, new kerchief and blew it out of the plane. Upon coming down she rushed to her mother and told her what had happened. In the mean time Chas. had landed. He got out of his plane and walked over and handed Elizabeth her kerchief. It had blown back into his plane and he had caught it. We sure hope there wasn't anything but punch in that punch that Grace Golden served.

A very vicious racket, which cannot be prosecuted because it does come within the letter of the law, is being worked on families of servicemen lately.

An unknown clipping bureau is sending post cards to people who have relatives in the Service telling that the bureau has a clipping about their son-or husband, or brother - which it will forward for a stipulated amount. The bureau does send a clipping, but usually it is one from the local paper which the family has already seen. Furthermore, reputable clipping bureaus do not solicit individual clippings but rather render service on a monthly contract basis. Families with boys or girls in the Service are urged to be on guard against this racket. -Atmore Advance.

Information On How Price Control Operates

(By Marvin W. Marcus, Price Clerk)
(This is the first of a series of articles to be published on the subject of ceiling prices. Another installment will follow next week.)
Are you capable of expressing an opinion regarding Price Control? Many expressions are made that unintentionally contradict such statements because the facts are not known. Do you think a person should publicly express his opinion on subjects that they do not understand? And especially when such statements are detrimental to the welfare of ourselves and our nation?
I have heard many statements such as the following:
A friend to fruit growers: "How's the peach business?"
Peach Grower: "Oh, we're completely ruined. You see, just at a time, and the only time, the poor farmer had ever had a chance to realize something out of his products, along comes the OPA and slams on a ceiling price and completely ruins us."
Now, doesn't that sound pathetic? And wouldn't that be awful on the poor farmer if it were true? Now, I think many of the poor farmers and most of the general public should be shown just how such things are done and handled by your OPA. Why do I say your OPA, because it is a part of the government and who is our government if it is not you?
The Office of Price Administration is an agency of your government set up to govern and assist every individual doing business for profit in the (Continued on page 4)

Revival Begins Soon At First Baptist Church

The First Baptist Church of Clanton is happy to announce that Dr. F. M. Powell, formerly a professor in the Southern Baptist Seminary at Louisville, Ky., and now one of the leading pastors in the State of Mississippi, will be the preacher in a series of revival services beginning Sunday, July 30, and running through Sunday, August 6. Rev. Ray F. Dykes, of Meridian, Miss., will be the leader in the ministry of song. Services will be held at 11 o'clock in the morning and at 8 o'clock at night. All friends are cordially invited to attend as many of these services as possible. Some one has said that the cause of all our troubles today may be described in two words - GOD FORGOTTEN. The stores and other business firms of Clanton have

AWARDED PURPLE HEART

"DOC" PARRISH

Mr. Jim Parrish just received a letter from his son, "Doc," saying that he is well and that he has just received the Purple Heart. "Doc" says that his boys have really done things. Four invasions and completed all campaigns in that theatre so far. "Not bragging," he says, "but just proud of the boys."

A few weeks ago we ran a little paragraph in the Soldier Column about Stewart E. Armstrong and gave his address. Last week we received a letter from him saying that since that week, he had received about 35 letters from all over the United States, Alaska to Panama. He says that a soldier is really okay if he has the hometown paper going his way.

Doughboys in the Ninth Infantry Division in France, fighting on the Cherbourg Peninsula, have been awarded the newly created Combat Infantryman Badge by Major General Mantion S. Eddy, Division Commander. Among these infantrymen is Pfc. Herman W. McCary of Jemison, Ala., Route One.

M-T-S. Horace F. Bean spent a few days in Birmingham with his mother, Mrs. R. H. Bean, of Collins Chapel and sisters, Mrs. Dave Rhodes, Mrs. E. D. Hall of Birmingham, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Little of Tennessee and Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Peterson of Jemison, Ala. M-T-S. Bean is stationed in the South Pacific and is by way of plane to Birmingham from San Francisco Calif.

Li. Guy Higgins from Florida was visiting his mother here over the week end.

I have just received a letter from my brother, T-S Arthur Cox, Jr., who has been in England for some time now. He is now in France and writes that he has had two or three close calls, but he thinks that it won't be a short time now before he will be back here to stay. To me that is GOOD news.

Be with you again next week - Helen.

Thorsby Proud Of Ladies Who Aid In War Effort

The Thorsby Red Cross surgical dressing group has folded 19,500 dressings by four and 4,800 four by eight surgical dressings since opening in May. We are proud of the ladies who have helped so faithfully. You who have not yet been out, won't you please make a special effort and sacrifice to help this worthy cause! These dressings are urgently needed in some places they must use them over and over again because we are not making enough to go around. Our boys are sacrificing all for us. Can't we give at least one afternoon a week to help our loved ones who are far away and depending and counting on us? Our room is open from 1:30 to 4:30 Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons at Thorsby Institute Dining Hall. -Mrs. Owen Carter, Chairman.

County Produces Large Peach Crop This Year

Chilton County wound up its peach shipments this week with a total of 45 carloads of peaches being shipped for more than a hundred percent increase over the 1943 crop.
As a whole the crop brought top prices and according to John Owens, sold at nearly double the price of the Southern peach states. Of course Alabama isn't exactly a peach state yet, but this year, the time is far off when it will be. Within Alabama shipped 45 carloads of peaches to Northern markets, Georgia, sister state, shipped more than 5,000 carloads.
Chilton County's peach crop this year brought the peach growers approximately $85,000 through the Peach Growers Association.

REVIVAL AT LIME SPRINGS METHODIST CHURCH

The revival meeting will begin at the Lime Springs Methodist Church Sunday, July 30th, at 11 o'clock. This will be a home-coming occasion for the church. There will be dinner on the grounds. Services will be held at night the following week. Rev. O. C. Lloyd, pastor, will get Rev. G. E. Lloyd of Ramer to assist in the meeting. Everybody is invited.

To All Those Who Love Chilton County Alabama

The time for meeting our Bond Quota expires July 29th, and we will have to raise $30,000.00 in "E" Bonds by that time before we can say we have done our share. We must do this to go over the top.
Come to Clanton Saturday, the 29. We want to celebrate our victory. We are expecting some high-class entertainment and we are going to have the drawing for the bale of cotton and other prizes. You who hold the tickets please be here, as you may be the winner, though you do not have to be here to win.
If the winners are not here when the numbers are drawn, the numbers will be advertised in the county papers for thirty days and you can come in and claim your prize any time during that period. If not claimed within 30 days another drawing will be made.
However, be here Saturday if you possibly can. -J. C. PATTILLO, Ex. Chm. War Finance Comm., for Chilton County.

Pleasant Thought for Pie-Hungry Families!
(See Recipes Below)

Pies Aplenty

Pies are good eating, even in the warmest weather. And better still, there are pies for every season and every mood.

For summer you may like juicy, luscious berry pies, their gay colorful fillings peeking out of a lattice crust. Or you may take the easy way and prepare chiffon pies, light and airy as a feather, with easy - to - make crumb crusts that require no baking. Whatever the type, you're certain to enjoy them.

Full of the goodness of golden peaches is this fruity pie:

Fresh Peach Pie.
4 cups sliced fresh peaches
1 cup sugar
4 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon cinnamon
1 tablespoon butter

Fill pastry-lined pan with fruit mixture, sprinkling the peaches with sugar and flour mixed. Sprinkle with cinnamon and dot with butter. Cover with a top crust and bake 10 minutes in a 450-degree oven and 30 minutes in a moderate (350-degree) oven. Serve warm.

Any of the berries may be used in this pie as the basic recipe is the same. Try it several times with blueberries, raspberries, blackberries or loganberries:

Fresh Berry Pie.
1 quart fresh berries
¾ to 1 cup sugar
4 tablespoons flour
2 teaspoons quick-cooking tapioca
½ teaspoon cinnamon
1 tablespoon butter

Fill pastry-lined pan with berries. Sprinkle with sugar and flour. With half of the berries in the pan, cover with tapioca, then with remaining berries, cinnamon and a dot of butter. If the berries are dry, sprinkle with 1 or 2 tablespoons water. Cover with top crust and bake in a hot oven 10 minutes and in a moderate oven 30 minutes.

Blueberry Pie: Substitute 1½ tablespoons lemon juice for cinnamon. Citrus Chiffon Pies are as cool as ocean spray. They are made so quickly, require no baking, and are made-to-order summer desserts:

"Lemon Chiffon Pie."
3 egg yolks
¾ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon grated lemon rind
¼ cup lemon juice, strained
4 tablespoons lemon-flavored gelatin
½ cup boiling water
3 egg whites
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar

Cornflake Crust
Beat egg yolks with a spoon in top of the double boiler. Stir in one-half the sugar, then salt, rind and fruit juice. Cook over boiling water 10 minutes until mixture thickens and coats the spoon. Stir hot fruit juice or boiling water into flavored gelatin. Beat with the hot custard. Cool thoroughly until mixture begins to set, then break up while making meringue. To make meringue, beat egg whites until fluffy and gradually add remainder of sugar. Carefully fold meringue into filling and pile into crumb crust. Place in refrigerator until well set, about 2 hours. Serve cold.

Bit of All Right: Baking powder biscuits are extra special when sprinkled with orange or lemon or cinnamon sugar before baking. Biscuits dressed up like this go well with main dish salads.

Don't waste leftover biscuits by making them into crumbies. They're pleasing escorts when served toasted with peanut butter or citrus marmalade. Fruit cups are best when chilled thoroughly. Try this combination: Cooked prunes, canned yellow cling peaches, orange segments, peach syrup, honey and lemon juice.

Lime Chiffon Pie: Use lime in above recipe in place of lemon. Green coloring may be added to intensify the color.

Cornflake Crust
4 cups rolled cornflakes
¼ cup butter
¼ cup sugar

Roll cornflakes fine. Melt butter in pie pan, add sugar and crumbs and mix thoroughly. Press evenly and firmly around sides and bottom of pie pan.

Like custards? Then you will enjoy grandmother's old-fashioned custard baked right into the flaky crust:

Grandmother's Custard Pie.
3 eggs (or, 6 yolks)
¼ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
2½ cups milk

Beat eggs slightly, add sugar, salt, nutmeg and milk. Pour into a chilled pastry-lined pie pan. Bake in a hot oven 15 minutes, then in a moderate oven to finish. Bake until a silver knife inserted into the custard comes out clean.

French Apple Pie

Make pastry for one-crust pie. Fit into pan and flute edges. Chill, fill with apples (for 9-inch pie, use 4 cups sliced apples, 1 cup sugar, 1 teaspoon cinnamon and 1 tablespoon butter). Then sprinkle with crumb topping:

½ cup butter
½ cup brown sugar
¼ cup flour

Bake 45 minutes to one hour until apples are done and topping is delicately browned. Serve warm.

Want Good Pastry?

An old saying goes that "A pie is as good as its crust." No truer words were ever spoken. Unless the crust is short, tender and flaky, the juiciest berries or most luscious fruit can do nothing for the pie. Here are the rules:

1. Keep all ingredients and bowls well chilled.
2. Don't work over the piecrust. The lazier you are, the better the crust.

3. Use a minimum of water for moistening.

Two-Crust Pie Pastry.

(Nine-inch)
2 cups sifted flour
1 teaspoon salt
¾ cup shortening
4 to 6 tablespoons ice water

To make pastry, sift flour once, add salt and then add again. Mix one-half of shortening into flour and cut into mixture finely. Add remainder of shortening and cut into flour until mixture has the appearance of coarse meal.

Blend lightly, using just enough water to hold mixture together. Roll on floured cloth and fit to pastry tin.

One-Crust Pies.

The method for making one-crust pies is similar to the two-crust type, but the ingredients are as follows: 1 cup flour, ¼ teaspoon salt, ¾ cup shortening and 2 to 3 tablespoons ice water.

If you wish additional instruction for canning fruit or berries, write to Miss Lynn Chambers, 210 South Desplaines Street, Chicago 6, Illinois. Please enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

About 153 million tons of agricultural products were moved from farm to market by motor vehicles in 1942, and even a greater amount is expected to be transported by highway this year. Shipments of this volume call for the use of a tremendous number of tires.

Only a small amount of rubber may reach us from the Amazon Valley, but herculean efforts are being made to get it out of the jungles, as is indicated by the report that Brazilian agencies have moved 20,000 workers into the rubber producing country.

IF You like to knit here is a quick way to turn scraps into attractive rugs. Cut or tear the rags into strips three-quarter inch wide. Turn in raw edges and use needles three-eighths inch in diameter. Knit the oval center first. Cast on four stitches and increase one at the end of each row until the depth of the work is four inches, then knit evenly for ten inches. Bind off one stitch at the end of each row until you have four stitches left. Bind these off. The diagram gives the dimensions and colors for the bands that are sewn to this center oval. Cast on seven stitches to start each band. For the outside band, start with color three. Knit seven inches, then cut the fabric strip and sew color four to it. Continue. Use a large crochet hook and fabric strips to crochet around the oval and the outside edges of the bands. Sew together by double carpet thread following directions in sketch.

THE STORY THIS FAR: Lieut. Col. Frank Kurts, of Flying Fortress, was shot down when the Japs struck in the Philippines, killing eight of his men and demolishing Old 88, with many other Forts, before it could get off the ground. After escaping to Australia, what is left of the 19th Bombardment Group lies 2470, where they defend the island until it falls. U. S. 88s evacuate to Australia to carry on the war from there. From its base in North Australia, the 19th, plus the 7th, made New Guinea and New Britain islands. Red Vardner, Swoose crew chief, tells of a class call, with the general aboard. He last saw the ground to prevent being dive-bombed.

CHAPTER XXIII

"So the Major started out then on an ordinary box-search problem, trying to find this Clouery—your boy many minutes north, and then east, and then south, and then west, and then, lengthening your time, north again, and so on. We kept this up for quite a while, but for a forced landing, our gas was running out. I'll say this, though, the Major sure wasn't running short of advice. What with his cockpit full of air generals of all nations, he had plenty of that, and every different kind you can imagine—they all knew just what to do.

"The trouble was, every time he paced from the nose of the plane back to the tail, it would throw the plane out of balance, and Frank here would have to trim ship, in addition to all the questions he was answering. I guess this pacer had never thought of that.

"By this time Frank had decided the only thing to do was to wait for the garrison, and then leaning over the side trying to pick a spot."

"With all those guys yammering at you, telling you what to do," said Red, "and this guy pacing. Only for a while he stopped, but just for a minute, while he was looking at a parachute. Why, I wouldn't quite know. Because we were down to 500 feet, and if he did jump of course it would never have time to crack. But I didn't say a word, because bucking himself was keeping him quiet. Only right away he starts this pacing again, with the poor Major trying to nose her down for a crash landing, and he tells me to tell them all to get back in the tail so it will act as a brake, only this guy starts pacing again.

"Now I was getting the jumps, for even if the Major is the best pilot in the business, a crash landing is no joke, even for old timers. So I guess this pacing guy and 'Now look,' I says to him. 'You may carry plenty of rank on your shoulders, but to this pilot you're just two hundred pounds of ballast on my back, and shifting around—you get on back there and sit down.' And I herded him back to the very tip end of the plane, and pushed him down, parachute and all, on that little seat. You've probably seen wonders all along, just where this little seat is, on a bomber. Well, it's just where it would be any place else—even on a farm—all you do is follow the clothes line, back down in the tail sets.

"Well, I pushed him down on the seat, and in about a minute there was quite a bump, but still it was a perfect three-second landing. The second the Major had her rolling smooth. The ground was soft. Twenty-five tons is a lot of bomber, and her wheels began to sink in—about six inches. But the Major can see this, so he gave gas to all four engines to keep her rolling, and taxied her up to high ground hard enough to hold her up.

"We got out. Pretty soon Australian ranchers began crawling out of holes in the ground—I don't know where else they came from—and right away Lieutenant Commander Johnson gets busy. He begins to get acquainted. They tell him where we are and some of them go off to where we can telephone, and more keep coming, and Johnson is shaking hands all around, and he comes back and tells us there are real folks—the best darn folks in the world, except maybe the folks in his own Texas. Pretty soon he knows all their first names, and they're telling him why there ought to be a high tariff on wool. But there's no question he swung that county for Johnson before we left. He was in his element. I know he sure swung the Swoose crew. He can carry that precinct any day."

"Listening to him made us all homesick," said Red. "So I suppose it was a good thing we were suddenly ordered back to the States at the end of the month. In a curious way I was ready now to come. I'd turned it down before, because after we were thrown out of Java we all had that sick feeling—trying to hold onto something that was slipping away in spite of everything you did. You couldn't walk out feeling things might suddenly cave in on you.

"But now it was different. In Australia and that island chain above we were getting firmly set, the way we should have been in the Philippines and Java, and didn't have time.

"But we'd had it now, and knew how to use it. Best of all, we were finally getting some fighting equipment, not just production figures. So even though we were soaking up plenty of heavy punches in the island chain, we were sure now we could at least hold them. But as yet I hadn't dared hope for much more.

"Only now I come to the thing which at last changed that, because I had to see it before I could believe it.

"It happened out on that long trans-Pacific trail where we've almost worn ruts in the sky between the States and Australia. It was like this. We were letting down for one of the island steppingstones which, according to Harry's navigation, should be somewhere ahead of us. It was very early in the morning. Harry's the best navigator in the business, and he had said we should be in there six hours from the time we left the last island. But of course his figures could be a little out, or maybe the wind drift the Pacific is too big a place to take chances in, as Eddie Rickenbacker's party found out. So after we'd been out five hours we got the island on the radar, and asked them to give us searchlights, just so we wouldn't miss their little pinpoint in the dawn.

"We'd flown without change of course for four hours. Now Harry took his final shots and we started down the line to that island. Harry had said six hours—it took us just five hours and fifty-seven minutes. The island was an atoll around a shallow basin where Navy PBV flying boats could light. The atoll is two feet above high tide at its high point. On one side are labor construction tents, a cantonment building for the tiny garrison, ack-ack searchlights, and even a tiny movie theater. On the other side is the landing strip. I'll swear Harry must have navigated not for the island, but for that landing strip itself. For without change of course, all we have to do is let our wheels down. Some day I want Eddie Rickenbacker to meet Harry.

"As we climbed out of the Swoose, the island garrison asked us, very excited, 'Did you see anything?' When we said we hadn't, they went off by themselves, whispering. I wanted to know what was up, so I asked their Colonel. Told him we were on an important mission, and what did he expect here at this atoll?

"'Trouble,' he said. Looking at his little setup, I couldn't help thinking of those poor guys who were overwhelmed on Wake Island. So the Colonel wasn't sure what kind of trouble was coming. He only knew orders had mysteriously come putting the Navy patrol planes on extra-long hours, doubling shifts. Somewhere, somebody was certainly on the lookout for something, and those poor devils had to sit on that atoll and guess what it might be.

"It didn't smell good. We gassed up and got out forty-five minutes later, just as it was cracking down. By now, the equatorial front had dissolved into a spotted ceiling. I suppose we'd been going an hour when, through a hole in this ceiling, out suddenly popped four or five ships down on the wrinkled sea. But I could only look at one of them.

"Now you think you're a man, with everything under control, yet I'm telling you I reacted to this one the way a fox terrier does to a rat. Because it was a whopping aircraft carrier! And after Java and the Philippines, say 'carrier' to a pilot, and he steadies everything for his bomb run, tense as a violin string, hoping his bombardier has the hairlines of his bomb sight crossed on its flight deck just over the engine room. It's like a bird dog pointing quail, with his tail tip quivering. Only, after half a second, I'm a man again and can think, can remember we haven't any bombs swinging on their shackles in our bomb bays—nothing we can drop on this beautiful target but the high-ranking passenger who is riding with us.

"Then comes reaction number two. No bombs, but what about the carrier's covering fighters? You talk about a mother tiger fighting for her young—that's nothing to the way a patrolling carrier fighter will defend its mother ship. Because every carrier-based fighter knows that once his carrier is hit and the waves begin to sweep over that long flight deck, and one end of her hoists up in the air, then he's out in the big sky by his lonesome—no pontoons, nothing to do but sink into the sea when his tank runs dry. Those Zeros will come screaming in to hit me from almost any cloud. Since I can't make a bomb run, I must get away quick!

"But now, over the interphones, comes a shout—'they've spotted another carrier.' I look and see it too. Then another! And now—my God, it can't be, but it is—four! It makes us frantic we haven't got something to plunk through those smooth flight decks into their engine rooms, and maybe blow a few square yards out of the bottom of their hulls!

"Only we now grow cold, because where are the escorting fighters? We can't speed up, because they should be up ahead, but they might show up any place—come leaping up at us out of this fleecy blanket of overcast like dolphins jumping through the foam.

"Down there are not only four carriers but a gang of other stuff—a fog of destroyers, at least fifteen cruisers, and one thundering big battleship. Only as a bomber pilot I'm fixated on those carriers, enormous brutes. Too enormous. Say, what's going on? Because Jap carriers are little devils—you can hardly pack forty planes into them, while these might hold double that, like our best ones. Now wait. Maybe we're too low and these just look big, but no—I glance at the altimeter and we're at 7,500.

"So they're ours! This big parade of surface strength is us Americans! I change course just the same—30 degrees, swinging wide of this big naval parade, because we can take no chances on their air patrol. Even an American carrier fighter, when he sees a bomber over his mother ship, should shoot first and ask questions later. We don't want to tangle with Grummans.

"We swing out wide and away, but with what a different feeling! 'Well, I guess that's about all, except on our homeward trip, we cracked the trans-Pacific record wide open. Her war-worn motors, made it from Brisbane to San Francisco in thirty-six hours ten minutes flying time, the only one of the original 35 on Clark Field to see home again.'

"When they said long distance was calling from San Francisco, of course that didn't mean anything to me," said Margo. "With two brothers in the Air Corps, one in bombardment and one in pursuit, it might be either one. Then I heard Frank's own voice saying 'Margo?' Because I hadn't heard any overseas operators, or any carrier clicking in the States. For the first time I could cry on the phone. . . . It's nice to be strong, but so much more fun to let down when you can, and I did."

OPA CEILING PRICES

United States, as well as the welfare of every individual having to do business with such.

The principle of OPA is to be, and is, just as interested in the welfare of the producer as they are the wholesaler, the retailer or the consumer.

What benefit could it be to the nation if it were not so interested?

Now, let's see how ceiling prices are made and by whom. Let's take peaches as there has recently been a ceiling price placed on them in the last few days, and has caused more discussion than anything else because we are very much interested in peach growing in this county, and are rapidly growing to the point that we will be booked on and recognized as peach growers—as we are not so recognized at the present as the following facts will prove.

Recently there was a convention of peach growers composed of over 2,000 growers held to discuss the demand for placing a ceiling price on peaches. There was a committee composed at the convention whereby facts and figures compiled by men who understood the peach business from the beginning of the seedling to the point of marketing and by such committee agreed upon that the ceiling prices so quoted by your OPA office to be a fair and reasonable price for peaches.

So, who says what should be charged for the fruit, the growers or the guy who sets up in the office of the OPA? The latter being quoted by many as the source of ceiling prices.

The writer was asked why some of the growers of Chilton county are not asked to join in on discussion of such ceiling prices. The following records show that we are not yet recognized as peach growers. Therefore, it is logical to expect that such information or contact would be made in States and communities where they are recognized as being people who know conditions.

Information from War Food Administration Office of Distribution, Washington, D. C. are as follows:

4,645 car loads of peaches shipped from California in 1943.
1,836 cars from Georgia, 44 cars from South Carolina, 16 cars from Alabama. This 16 car shipment of peaches from Alabama were shipped from Chilton county.

Could you say that Alabama is class among peach growers? But there is encouragement that we will in a few more years be recognized among the others as the indications show that there will possibly be 50 cars or more from Chilton county this season, meaning around $100,000 to Chilton county growers, not mentioning the thousands of dollars worth shipped to nearby markets by truck.

The same condition applies to growing and marketing of watermelons, tomatoes, and many other varieties of vegetables marketed from Chilton county. But the ceiling prices are shows the following figures on watermelons, from a few of the several watermelon states.

Texas shipped 1,933 car loads of melons in 1943. South Carolina shipped 3,080. Georgia shipped 5,007. Florida shipped 3,487, and Alabama shipped 217 cars.

LUMBER PRODUCTS ARE FALLING BEHIND OUR WAR NEEDS!

The War needs for forest products of all kinds are exceeding our capacity to produce them—largely because of a lack of Manpower. Production in 1943 failed to meet consumption by four billion feet. Many local sawmills managed to cut 1,000,000 feet of rough lumber in a year. It will take a year's work by 4,000 such mills to make up this deficit.

Farmers can help most if they will produce logs and place for pick-up by trucks.

SELL YOUR LOGS TO THE SAWMILLS!

We will buy lumber at rates per thousand as prescribed by OPA Regulations.

Wood ranks with Copper, Aluminum and Steel as an essential war material. It is urgently needed for war purposes and to supply essential civilian requirements. Huge quantities are needed in shipbuilding, cantonment construction, boxing and crating.

Supplying lumber for the war effort is an important job on the home front. The National requirements for lumber is 36 billion board feet in 1944. These requirements must be filled or the war program will suffer.

I will buy your logs or I will haul them to mill for you within a reasonable distance of Providence Church. See me for prices and specifications.

MR. FARMER GET OUT YOUR FARM TIMBER For WAR

Shortage of Manpower is a Major Factor in the current shortage of lumber supplies here. The farm woods owner can help by cutting his own timber or helping cut his neighbors, using any available time during lay-by periods; spells of bad weather, or after the crops are in, for work in the woods.

This year our timber output will fall far short of the essential in these respects, unless extra efforts are made to get out the logs for lumber.

Marvin Jones, War Food Administrator: "Apart from the direct needs of the war, increased production from farm woods is required for farm lumber, manufacture of boxes, crates, baskets, barrels, containers, bags and packaging items made from pulpwood."

By cutting your logs to keep our mill running, these munitions can be crated and shipped to our fighting men.

More than 15 million board feet, nearly half of the Country's estimated lumber production in 1944, will be needed for boxes and crating for military and civilian needs. We will purchase logs, cut and placed at roadside in yards, according to log grade and distance from our mill.

FDR-Truman Top '44 Slate Of Democrats

Platform Stresses International Post-War Organization for Peace.

By GEORGE A. BARCLAY

Amid historic demonstrations acclaiming his 12,000 record in the White House and the promise of his future service, President Roosevelt was renominated for a fourth term by the Democratic national convention in Chicago.

Only one ballot was necessary to give the President 1,086 votes. Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia received 49 votes, support coming chiefly from delegations who registered a protest against the fourth term and the New Deal. James A. Farley, former national committee chairman and manager of Mr. Roosevelt's first two campaigns, received one vote. His name had not been placed in nomination.

In one of the most hotly contested battles for the vice presidential nomination in the history of the party, Sen. Harry S. Truman of Missouri, whose chairmanship of the senate committee investigating the war program had won him national recognition, captured the position. The Missourian won on the second ballot when he overcame a long lead piled up by Vice President Henry A. Wallace on the first poll.

A crowd which jammed every seat and flowed over into the aisles and galleries of the Chicago Stadium cheered the President's acceptance speech which he delivered by radio from an undisclosed Pacific coast naval base, whither he had arrived from a cross-country trip. The President described this journey as "the performance of my duties under the Constitution." Senator Samuel D. Jackson of Indiana, permanent chairman of the convention, introduced the President.

Nation's Choice. In outlining the future as he saw it, and stressing the importance of planning for forthcoming eventualities, Mr. Roosevelt declared:

"The war waits for no elections."

"The people of the United States," he added, "will decide this fall whether all the things that have happened since 1941—this worldwide job—to inexperienced and immature hands, to those who opposed lend-lease and international cooperation against forces of aggression and tyranny until they could read the polls of popular sentiment, or whether they wish to leave it to those who saw the danger from abroad, who met it head-on and who now have seized the offensive and carried the war to its present stages of success."

No. 1 item in the President's analysis of "the job before us in 1944" is fast and overpowering victory over the Axis. Next is the formation of an international organization which would make future wars impossible, and third is the building of a firm economy for returning veterans of the war.

Concise Platform. President Roosevelt's desire for a concise platform was fulfilled when the convention ratified by acclamation the 1,500-word document presented by the resolutions committee. It was one of the shortest in modern times, with most of its planks single sentences.

Chief interest centered in the platform's declaration for a postwar international organization based on sovereign equality and with power to use armed forces if necessary to preserve peace.

On the race question, the platform declared:

"We believe that racial and religious minorities have the right to live, develop and vote equally with all citizens and share the rights that are guaranteed by our constitution. Congress should exert its full constitutional power to protect those rights."

The platform urged steps promoting the encouragement of risk capital and new enterprise and promised special attention to the natural resources of the west. It urged reduction or repeal of wartime taxes as soon as possible.

Relaxation of wartime controls at the earliest possible moment was promised, along with a pledge of special aid to small business and a declaration against monopolies, cartels "or any arbitrary private or public authority."

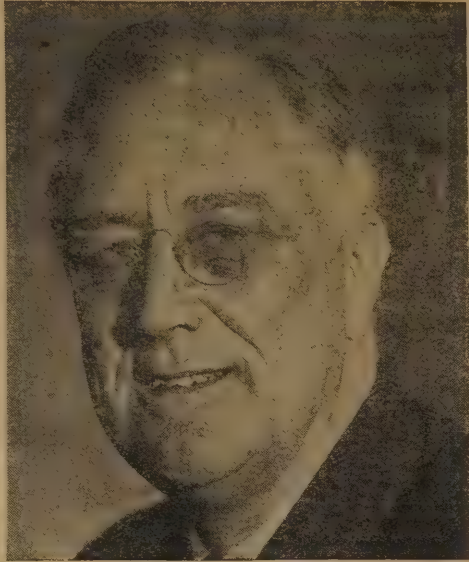

For agriculture, the platform pledged: price guarantees and crop insurance; farm parity with labor and industry; steps to foster the success of the small independent farmer; aid for the ownership of family-sized farms; broader markets; extension of rural electrification.

WEATHER FAVORS DEMOCRATS: Unseasonably cool weather prevailed all through the week of the convention, but skies were clear, except for a few fleecy white clouds. Temperatures were almost unaccountably low at night.

Continuation of the administration's policy of full benefits for service men and women with special consideration for the disabled was promised.

"We make it our first duty to assure employment and economic security to all who have served in the defense of our country," the platform added. The labor plank pledged the enactment of additional legislation as experience may require, including amendments or repeal of any law which has failed in its purpose.

Barkley's Tribute. Dramatic scenes accompanied the nominating speech by Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky. President Roosevelt's service, he said, is a "record of achievement in national and international affairs so amazing and successful that his friends proclaim it and his enemies dare not threaten it with his demerits.

Senator Barkley's address precipitated a demonstration which lasted more than half an hour. This was followed by four seconding speeches.

Truman became a bandwagon candidate after southern states which had scattered their votes between Senator Bankhead of Alabama, Senator Barkley of Kentucky and a long list of favorite sons began to switch their votes to Truman.

Reconvention interest had centered on this contest for the vice presidency and excitement mounted as the three-day meeting progressed. While the delegates had before them President Roosevelt's statement that he would vote personally for Mr. Wallace if he were a convention delegate, they also were informed that he likewise thought Senator Truman—or Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas—would add strength to the ticket that will oppose the Republicans' Thomas E. Dewey and John W. Bricker.

The official tabulation of the second ballot for the vice presidency, taken on the evening of the convention's third day, after more than four hours of oratory was: Truman, 1,078; Wallace, 68; Justice William O. Douglas, 4; and Gov. Prentice Highlights . . .

CROONING GOB: Danny O'Neill, a former sailor on the USS Lexington, who was honorably discharged and is now singing professionally, led the convention in the "Star Spangled Banner" on Thursday night.

CROWD: The largest crowd in the history of the Chicago Stadium packed the big building on the convention's second night. It was estimated at between 25,000 and 30,000.

Cooper of Tennessee, 22. Vice President Wallace had received 429 1/2 votes on the first ballot, compared to Truman's 319 1/2.

Mr. Wallace was quick to congratulate the winner and urge his support. "My own defeat is not a loss to the cause of liberalism," he said. "That is obvious in what happened here at the convention."

Following his nomination, Mr. Truman was escorted to the platform amid the cheers of the overflow crowd. In a speech lasting hardly a minute, he said he would continue his efforts "to help shorten the war and win the peace under the great leadership of President Roosevelt," and then, stating that he did so "with humility," he accepted the nomination.

Those suggested for the nomination, in addition to Truman and Wallace, were: Sen. Scott S. Lucas of Illinois; Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy; Gov. J. M. Broughton of North Carolina; Gov. Robert S. Kerr of Oklahoma; Paul V. McNutt of Indiana; War Manpower commissioner; Sen. John H. Bankhead of Alabama; Sen. Alben Barkley of Kentucky; Gov. Prentice Cooper of Tennessee; Sen. Joseph C. Mahony of Wyoming; and Sen. Elbert Thomas of Utah. Added starters were Gov. Herbert O'Connor of Maryland and Sen. Claude Pepper of Florida, who were put in the race by first-ballot votes.

Political observers were definite in their belief that Truman would strengthen the Democratic national ticket. They pointed out that in choosing the Missourian the party had a candidate whose voting record in the senate has been consistently pro-Roosevelt and friendly to labor. The fact that Truman is a veteran of World War I, with a distinguished record, is likewise regarded as a strong asset. That he is acceptable to labor was indicated by the action of Sidney Hillman, chairman of the CIO Political Action committee, one of Wallace's chief supporters, who declared that Truman was satisfactory to his group. In the South, Truman likewise should attract support. It was southern delegations which started the Truman stampede that culminated in his nomination.

Gov. Kerr's Keynote. Unusual interest had focussed on the keynote speech delivered by Gov. Robert S. Kerr of Oklahoma, for it was the first time the Westerner had faced a national party meeting.

Veteran convention attendants were agreed that the Oklahoma man's performance ranked high among such performances in their memory. Gaunt in his denunciations of the opposing party and fervent in his praise of the Roosevelt administration, Governor Kerr brought cheers from the delegates time after time.

Enunciating traditional party doctrine, he declared that the election of a Republican administration this year would bring about "the certain return of 1932" and would "invite disaster."

Robert E. Hannegan, national chairman, told the delegates and guests that "the fortunes of war have been too hard to win to be gambled away in the inexperienced hands of a new commander-in-chief."

The increasingly important role of women in national politics was emphasized at the convention. Three women in particular were in the spotlight: Dorothy Vredenburg, secretary of the national committee; Mrs. Charles W. Tillet of North Carolina, assistant chairman of the convention, and Mrs. Helen Gahagan Douglas of California.

From the same spot where Congressman Clarence Boothe Luce had spoken three weeks before to the Republican convention, Mrs. Douglass delivered one of the major addresses of the convention.

GIDEON'S FAITHFUL FEW

LESSON TEXT—Judges 7:4, 15-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—There is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few.—1 Samuel 14:6.

Man power is said to be the secret of victory. Our nation is concerned about the shortage of man power in critical military campaigns. The armed forces are calling for more and more men and women.

That will all make it a little strange to study and teach the lesson for today, for here is the story of a crucial military campaign in which the leader, Gideon, was told by God to cut down his forces. This happened again and again, until he had less than one per cent of his original force, which was none too large, humbly speaking.

What singular thing was going on? God was at work and He did not want Israel to look to the arm of flesh, but to Him.

Three questions are raised and answered in this interesting story:

I. Quantity or Quality? (7:4-7).

The Lord is looking for men to do His work, but He cannot use men who are afraid or careless. This was the lesson Gideon learned, and it applies to our day as well. When Gideon was told that he had 32,000 men (Judg. 7:8). Not willing that they should glory in their own strength and knowing that many of them were cowards at heart, the Lord told Gideon to let those who were afraid, go home. When the mob had left there were only 10,000 left.

How sad it is that so many are "fearful and afraid" (vs. 3) when it comes to going into battle for the Lord. They sing cheerily, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus, ye soldiers of the cross; let courage rise with danger," etc.; but when the bombs of Satan begin to fall, or the bugle calls for an advance into the enemy's territory, they have disappeared to places of comfort and safety. What good are such soldiers? The Lord told Gideon to send them home; perhaps the church should do the same.

Then came the second test which appears in our lesson. Those who took the comfortable and easy way to drink (vs. 8), were not alert and ready. Down went the number to 300; but these were men who were ready to obey, who were alert and courageous.

The church needs to learn that large numbers are not the answer to her problems. God is interested in numbers, be sure of that, but He is more concerned about quality than quantity. Let us get more people who are truly regenerated into the church, and not just more people.

II. Man's Power or God's Power? (vv. 15-18).

Strange as was the plan for recruiting, the plan of battle was even more unusual. Lights, broken pitchers, and trumpet blasts are hardly the accepted weapons of warfare, nor does the method sound like military strategy.

This was a time for questions, for logical arguments, for the usual organization of war, for now God was about to work. He was ready to show His power quite apart from the ability of man, and He had a right to work as He would. Wise and blessed is the church which knows that there comes a time when the thing to do is to put plans aside and let the Lord work. No one will question the value of organization and proper church "machinery," but we need to ask ourselves whether we have not become so organized that we impede the work of God.

Observe on the other hand that it is "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon"—not just the sword of the Lord. God is all-powerful. We must not hinder His glorious working. But He works through men, do not forget that! He used Gideon, and He used Gideon's little band.

God's power must accomplish God's work, but that power flows out to the world through yielded and obedient men.

III. Running or Standing? (vv. 19-21).

The enemy "ran and cried and fled." The sword of the Lord and of Gideon had put them to rout. Well may the enemies of God be terrified when He begins to work through His servants.

This was done "by faith" for we find Gideon's act of turning "to fight the armies of the aliens" listed among the exploits of faith (Heb. 11:34).

Now see what Gideon's host was doing while the enemy ran (v. 21). "They stood every man in his place." No need for frantic hurry with them, no fear, no excitement. God works that way. He makes the children of Israel at the Red Sea? The water ahead, and Pharaoh's host to the rear. What to do? "Fear ye not, stand still and see the salvation of the Lord" (Exod. 14:13).

Perhaps the words of the hymn just sung—"God rather than the power of man! Stand still and see what He will do, for His own glory!"

Mrs. Jones Found That She Spoke Out of Turn

Mrs. Jones went shopping. When she returned, she saw that men from the telegraph company had arrived with their van outside her house. There they were, to her disgust, with a pole and a hole in the ground. She proceeded to tell them all about it.

How dared they put up a pole right in front of her house. The property would lessen in value. She was going to complain.

The foreman let her have her head for about five minutes. Then: "I'm very sorry, madam," he said, politely, "but we're not putting the pole up. We are taking it away. It's been standing in front of your house for two years!"

RECRUITS WANTED for the pulpwood army

In every pulpwood producing section, a great civilian army is helping to win the war. But in place of guns and grenades, its weapons are the woodsman's axe and saw. These men are a part of the productive Home Front which General Eisenhower said is necessary to defeat the Nazis in 1944.

But more volunteers—at prevailing pay scales—are needed. There is plenty of pulpwood around here, pulpwood going uncut while military needs for pulpwood products mount. The shortage is in manpower to cut it.

How can you help?

Cutting pulpwood can be a part-time or full-time job. Perhaps you can do your part in your own woodlot. Perhaps you can cut on shares in a neighbor's woods.

If you have the time but no wood, get in touch with this mill and we will try to team you up with someone who has wood and no way to cut it.

Do You Know?

Over 1/4 of all pulpwood is used in packaging farm products. The packing and distribution of foods may be seriously upset this year by a shortage of paper and boxes made from pulpwood.

WE ARE PURCHASING AGENTS FOR THE GULF STATES PAPER COMPANY OF TUSCALOOSA, ALA., AND THE MEADE CORPORATION OF KINGSFORD, TENN. WE WILL BUY BOTH PINE AND HARDWOOD PULPWOOD IN CHILTON AND ADJOINING COUNTIES.

LUMBER, LOGGING AND PULPWOOD ON NATION'S PRODUCTION URGENCY LIST

Lumber, logging and pulpwood are so critical that it has been added to the No 1 group on the Nation's Production Urgency List.

Farmers and farm workers are urged during their off-season farming activities to help out in this critical labor shortage.

Temporary farm release forms may be obtained from Local Draft Boards, be obtained from Local Draft Boards, United States Employment Service. In order to avoid any delay these forms should be secured a few days ahead of the time a worker expects to be available for other employment and properly filled out and signed so referrals may be made promptly.

Signatures of Draft Board Officials are only required when the applicant is in a 2-C classification under 34 years of age.

Increased production in the lumber industry must be had if requirements for the war efforts are met and about the only supply of labor left to draw from is off-season farmers, and non-essential workers.

Every effort by all agencies concerned should be made to channel these workers to Lumber and Pulpwood jobs where the most good can be accomplished, results of which would bring the war to an earlier conclusion and victory assured.

As always farmers and farm workers may be depended upon to do their part in this crisis.

Any additional information may be obtained from any of the following agencies:

United States Employment Service; War Manpower Commission; United States Forestry Service; County Agents and Local Draft Boards.

TIMBER HEADS WAR LIST

Timber products have advanced to the forefront of the list of critical war materials. The South is expected to produce nearly half of the Nation's lumber requirements in 1944.

"WHY DO WE NEED MORE WOODS?"

People, not fully acquainted with the situation, frequently ask why so much is said about the shortage of lumber and paper. They do not know the multitude of uses which are made of wood products and more important, do not know how far the production of these things has fallen behind the needs of the nation.

It is not possible for anyone to determine accurately how much lumber is produced or exactly how much is used. Production flows from thousands of mills, flow in many directions into thousands of uses and therefore all statistics are tinged by guesswork. There is no guesswork, however, in the fact that even essential war needs have not been met without digging dangerously deep in the Nation's stockpile of lumber reserves. The stockpile is now so low that it can no longer be depended on as a source of supply. Therefore, the great bulk of current demand must be met by current production.

As one step in meeting the problem of production the War Production Board requested the Forest Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture to launch a special Timber Production War Project as its contribution. This project or organization has been in action for nearly a year. In cooperation with other federal and state agencies, the Project Foresters give various kinds of aid to wood owners and timber producers. The kind and extent of assistance naturally varies with the problem. For example a landowner may have a tract of timber that is mature, but the owner is not in need of money, and does not wish to see his timber stand destroyed. The Project Forester may explain the need for that type of timber on some war job and at the same time show that landowner how the mature timber can be selected and cut and yet leave a good stand of young trees for a future crop. For more detailed assistance in marketing his timber the landowners will be referred to the local Timber Marketing Specialist. In other cases a sawmill operator may have his hands more than full running his mill and suddenly find that he has become hopelessly tangled in Government red tape and as a result is unable to get some necessary priority or allotment. The Project Forester may then inspect his operation, learn his troubles, give advice as to the quickest way to get through the red tape and frequently advise the agency involved of his findings with the recommendation that the request be approved or disapproved.

The greatest single factor in the production of wood products is manpower. Today the Nation needs wood to win the war. It needs wood from the farmers, produced by farm labor in slack seasons. Labor shortages are slowing down timber production. Farm labor otherwise idle in slack seasons, can help break this bottleneck. Off season work in the farm woods is profitable and helps keep labor on the farm. Woods work counts for draft deferment if a man's local board has granted him permission to work on such jobs.

The Project Forester assigned to work in Chilton County is Seaborn J. Johnson, P. O. Box 35, Talladega, Ala., Telephone 2409. If you have problems of production take them to the Project Forester. Maybe he can help you.

TIMBER FUNDS GO TO IMPROVE OGLESBY'S FARM

J. R. (Bob) Oglesby, Clanton, farm implement dealer and Chilton County farmer, is making his farm woodland pay for improving his place and at the same time he is holding enough timber for future improvements.

Seaborn J. Johnson, of Talladega, Project Forester of the United States Forest Service, said Mr. Oglesby had already selectively cut ten acres of pine and hardwood from his 30-acre woodland and that the other 20 acres are now being cut over in preparation for clearing as a pasture.

Sawlogs cut from the ten acres were sold to a lumber company and Mr. Oglesby had used part of the proceeds from the sale to purchase fencing to enclose his entire farm situated one and one-half miles from Clanton. The rest of the proceeds will be expended for clearing the other 20 acres and otherwise improving the tract for pasture.

Mr. Oglesby expects to cut some 35,000 to 40,000 board feet of saw timber and approximately 125 units of pulpwood from the 20-acre tract. When the entire project is completed he hopes to have the 20 acres in improved pasture, with ten acres to be used for continued timber production. Sufficient timber will be left on ten acres to furnish lumber for a modern farm residence to be built later.

Mr. Johnson commented that, "Mr.

Oglesby evidently used good judgment in planning the use of his land so he would put his bottom land, suited for pasture, into that use and continue to grow timber on the upland."

All of the logs and pulpwood from the Oglesby farm will go to war uses since wood is now considered the top critical war material.

Mr. Johnson referred to the Oglesby plan of timber production as an outstanding example of how farmers with woodlands can assist in meeting war needs for lumber and pulp, and how they can apply the proceeds from timber sales toward improving their farms.

The Project Forester advised farmers with woodlands to investigate the possibility of improving their lands with the proceeds from the sale of part of their timber during the war season. He warned, however, that the best use of the land should be considered and the timber cut at a profit. He said that County Agent W. Glasscock can advise as to the use of any tract of land.

"Unusual action is needed to maintain the output of forest products at a high level as an essential aid in the prosecution of the war..."

---Franklin D. Roosevelt.

We will buy logs at $35.00 to $60.00 per thousand on yards at roadside, according to log grade and distance from our mill. National timber requirements for 1944 have been estimated to include 36 billion board feet of lumber!

Shortages of Veneer logs are critical. Without more wood to make crates, boxes, baskets, cartons, and paper containers, food for our Armed Forces cannot be promptly processed or properly packaged. Without more wood to build trucks, freight cars, freight planes, gliders, and cargo ships, food from American farms cannot be rushed to the battle front.

Trees cut from farm woodlands will help win the war as much as weapons in the hands of our fighting men. Cut your mature trees for veneer logs or sawlogs; this crowded young stands for pulpwood. For advice on proper marking and cutting or help in marketing, call the Timber Project Forester or your County Agent. Cut wisely, but cut them now!

HOW THEY ARE AND WHERE THEY ARE

WE BATES BROTHERS UNIFORM

Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Bates of the Alabama Mill Village have given five uniforms to the armed forces. Mr. Bates is room overseer at the mill.

The oldest son in point of service is Ostar J. Bates, stationed at Camp Gordon Johnson, Fla., who has served three years and six months.

Second boy in service is Cpl. Donald J. Bates, who is with the Eighth Air Force in England, and will have served three years in October. Don is driving a Jeep and says that he goes to London often.

Third Marvin J. Bates, who is with the 15th Air Force, Italy, has completed his 25th mission and goes to a camp this week. He is a tail-gunner on a B-17. He has been in service two years this month.

Fourth, Bates, S. L. C., is on the U.S.S. Albatross, and has been in the Navy since 1941. He is a gunner on a mine sweeper and has made two trips to the Marshall Islands.

Fifth, to enter the service is Braxton Bates, who is in "Boot" training camp at Camp Perry, Va. He has been in the service only two weeks.

Chilton County is proud of the boys and their live boys in service of their country.

Lt. Thompson has been on missions throughout the Caribbean Area, Central and South America, among a number of other pilots, he was conferred honorary membership by the Bolivian Air Force.

During the invasion of Europe among the engineers acting as "Hotel Men" were two men from Clanton. Sergeant Edwin Wagoner, son of Mr. E. Wagoner and Pvt. Wallace Ellison, husband of Mrs. O. Ellison.

Second Lt. Raymond Traywick, 24, son of Mr. and Mrs. Houston Traywick, Rt. 2, Maplesville, is in the final phase of training as a pilot on a B-24 Liberator Bomber, and will leave Tucson, Ariz., soon for Overseas duty.

Lt. Traywick entered the service in August, 1942. He is a graduate of Isabella High School and attended Auburn College.

A LETTER FROM ENGLAND TO A MOTHER

Fillynead Marshell, Shriminster
Newton Dorset, England,
June 1, 1944.

My Dear Mrs. Ward:

I am just an English mother sending you word of your dear son. Clyde has been coming to our house for some time and he is an ideal lad. When he told my husband of his brother, Bob, my hubby said, "Go and find him, lad." Well, Clyde got a pass, but Bob had just moved on, so he had to return disappointed. He talked it over and asked my daughter, Anna, who works at the Post Office to try and get him on the phone and if she could to tell him to come along here. After a lot of going to wrong places he got here.

We went to bed and left them talking of home and you all. At 3:30 a. m. I had another caller, a U. S. lad. (Continued on page 4)

CHILTON CO. TOMATO MARKET $20,000

Above are scenes of the activity in Clanton's tomato market through which Chilton County farmers marketed 140 tons of tomatoes for which they received approximately $20,000.

Chilton County farmers have produced approximately 1,200 acres of commercial tomatoes, many of which were sold on local markets within small truck range of Chilton County.

Mr. Kant's tomato buying operation in Chilton County saved many farmers days and nights on the road as well as many gallons of gasoline and much wear on trucks and truck tires.

Prices paid in Clanton compared favorably and in most cases exceeded prices in local markets. Plans are underway for additional facilities for this type of market in Chilton County.

Upper left—Rudolph Smith at scales while producer check weight of his tomatoes going into Clanton market. Farmers were paid cash for their tomatoes immediately after delivery.

Mr. Kant, who follows the tomato industry through practically all major tomato sections in the United States, states that Chilton County's crop, carefully graded, will demand top prices in all sections.

Previously OPA had allotted only up to 250 pounds for canning this season but now home processors who can show greater need may apply at their local War Price and Rationing Board for enough to equal their 1941 pack. The processor, of course, must use the sugar solely for producing the foods listed, all of which have blue point value on the consumer table.

Three more red stamps each worth 10 points become good for buying rationed meats, fats and dairy products July 30. They were A5, B5 and C5 in Book Four and represent the housewife's quota for a period now set at four weeks—July 30 to August 27.

OPA said July point ration value charts for meats and fats and for processed foods would remain in use at least until August 13. The 16 point value for one pound of creamery butter established on July 23, continues in effect.

To Make "Phony" Peach Inspection

Mr. U. G. Haynes and other members of the U. S. Bureau and State Departments of Agriculture are now in Chilton County preparing to make their annual "Phony" peach inspection.

As most peach growers already know, "Phony Peach" is a virus disease that has been gradually spreading through all peach sections for a number of years; and has been taking a large toll of producing trees. As yet, no control measures other than removal of diseased trees has been found. The 1943 records for Chilton County showed a substantial decrease in number of infected trees compared to previous years. Considering the fact that a large increase in number of trees was inspected, this progress is very encouraging. It is hoped that the inspection will continue to decrease.

In past years the inspectors have had a number of laborers to follow them and remove the infected trees. This year, due to the labor shortage, they will not be able to remove any trees. This must be done by the producer. It is to the producer's advantage to remove the infected trees as soon as possible after the inspection; or, those producers that have been in the business long enough to recognize the diseased trees should remove them as soon as they are detected.

The inspectors will contact you in the near future on your farm. Inspections will be made free of charge for all producers that agree to remove the infected trees immediately. For your own personal gain and the advancement of the peach industry, give these men your cooperation.—M. R. Glascock, County Agent.

WHO HAS LUCKY NUMBER FOR WINNING COTTON BALE

The lucky number for the bale of cotton given as a prize in the recent "E" Bond Drive is 7329. The person holding the ticket given in this drive bearing this number may come in any time within thirty days and claim the same. If no one comes within thirty days another number will be drawn. The $50.00 War Bond prize was won by Mr. James Wade and donated by him to the Red Cross. The $25.00 War Bond prize was won by Mr. J. A. Mahan.

LEO THOMPSON IS FAVORITE OF MANY

Leo Thompson has received an overwhelming response to last week's announcement of his running for Mayor.

Says Leo: "I deeply appreciate the response to my announcement of running for Mayor. People have called me around the telephone and called over to see me, offering their vote and influence. I shall do everything in my power, when elected, to run the City on a business basis and get for Clanton everything that is within our financial power to do. I further appreciate the confidence that my neighbors and friends have in me, and I shall at all times fulfill my obligations to retain this confidence."

Leo has always been a plunger, and there is no doubt in our minds that he will strive to do a real job in the Mayor's office.

No Coddling for Hermit, 87; Just Wants Seclusion

Made His Own Lonely Life For 48 Years, Wants to End It That Way.

GUNNISON, COLO.—Robert Nelson, 87-year-old hermit of the Black Canon, is a man unto himself. He wants no part of civilization, no coddling, none of the help usually accorded men of his age.

For 48 years he has made his own secluded life. He wants to wind it up that way.

Why Bob Nelson regarded himself in the mountain fringed cove town of the Southwestern Rockies is his secret, and probably never will be told. But he's neither unsocial nor shy.

The aged but stalwart native of Sweden came out of his refuge this winter, but only with coaxing. His mountain cabin, perched on a ledge in the towering canon, had burned. Section workers, his only contact with the outside world, appealed vainly to him to leave a frigid haven cleft in the mountain wall. Finally Sheriff H. G. Lashbrook climbed the difficult trail and induced Nelson to return to Gunnison.

Fuzzled by Gadgets.

Steam heat, running water and electric lights offered only puzzling annoyance to the old man. Though it was well below zero, he raised the window and placed his reading table near it. The sheriff taught him how to turn on the light by pulling a cord, and to get water by turning a faucet. Nelson always had taken his water from a running mountain brook and it wasn't easy to change.

When Bob Nelson left Gunnison nearly a half century ago he picked a cabin site 10 miles inside the canon where black granite walls lift 200 to 400 feet to the skies.

When winter and spring snows did not clog the canon route, passing Rio Grande trainmen would toss newspapers into Nelson's waiting hands. He seldom saw anyone else. By his own perseverance and hard work he cultivated the ledge land as a truck garden. He acquired a yearling bull calf and trained it to haul boulders on a crude sled. Others he carried out on his shoulders. He planted fruit trees. He fished.

Travels for Necessities.

Infrequently Nelson would trudge to Sapinero or Cimarron for the only necessities his own hands couldn't provide—sugar and syrup and flour.

Nelson's sense of fairness was known to those who once each year marketed his cherries. Once his crop netted $6.50. "That," he protested, "is too much, give some of it back." Again when his closest friend, C. B. Pond of Grand Junction, brought him a supply of sugar, Nelson refused to pay seven cents per pound, and ordered Pond to return it.

Meat Lures Mama Away, Zookeepers Move Cubs

PHILADELPHIA.—Keepers dangled a chunk of horsemeat in front of Fawna, the Zoo's lioness, and she followed the bait from her own den to another.

Then the keepers, for the first time, were able to get close to Fawna's cubs, born April 19. Previously they had been visible only when their mother picked them up from their wooden box or when they managed to crawl out.

The cubs were taken to the zoo's baby-pet branch where Curator Roger Conant said visitors might get a chance to pet them.

$565 Bath Dampens the Shore Leave of Sailor

PORTLAND, ME.—A sailor's shore leave was dampened by a bath which cost him $565.

Delmar Roberts of St. Louis, a mess attendant on a merchant ship, told police he had had that sum in his money belt which he never had removed except to bathe.

Apparently, in the excitement of preparing for shore leave, he forgot to replace it after a bath. When he finally remembered it an hour later, it had disappeared, he added.

Youth Brandishes Gun, Woman, 71, Says 'No'

OMAHA, NEB. — A 14-year-old youth brandished a loaded revolver under the nose of Miss Barbara Graham, 71-year-old grocery clerk in a holdup attempt.

"Young man, you ought to be ashamed of yourself," the 90-pound clerk snapped at him. "You come along with me."

She took him by the arm and hurried him out of the store. With an undignified howl the youth fled, to be recaptured later by police.

Strange Mishap Reveals Mixup in Automobiles

NEOSHO, MO. — The police department's aspirin supply hit a new low recently when officers began looking into an automobile accident.

Mrs. Phillips Foster overturned in a car which had been lent her by Jimmie McGowen, but which really belonged to F. M. Pophan. Then when police started looking for McGowen, they discovered he had left town in a car belonging to Mrs. Foster.

POWER THROUGH SELF-DISCIPLINE (TEMPERANCE LESSON)

LESSON TEXT.—Proverbs 1:1-10; Jeremiah 23:1-10; 1 Corinthians 9:24-27; 1 Thessalonians 5:22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things.—1 Corinthians 9:25.

Discipline — that word doesn't sound exactly attractive, does it? It makes us think of punishment for wrongdoing, when in reality it is a very helpful word which means teaching. Disciples learn, and thus are disciplined, so that life becomes safer, simpler, and more efficient.

When the Morro Castle caught fire, there was time for everyone to escape, but 134 out of the 500 on board perished because they fought each other. When the President Coolidge sank in the South Seas 4,500 soldiers escaped alive. What made the difference? Discipline, that's all, but it was enough.

There are many kinds of discipline, and all have their important place in preparing men to live well ordered and useful lives. The disciplined life has power to meet trials and temptations. We find in our lesson three kinds of discipline:

I. Home Discipline (Prov. 1:1-10).

The training received by the child early in life from his parents is of the utmost importance in forming character. Children should learn the true standards of life, and be held to obedience to them if they are later to walk in the right way.

It is here that most effectively learn the danger of the use of intoxicants and the importance of keeping their bodies clean and strong for the service of God and country.

Some parents (possibly misled by attractive, but false theories of education) think that the correction or punishment of a child is not to be permitted. They assume that they are being kind to a child by not limiting his development, or trying to direct it. These are the people who "curse their children with kindness," which is in fact the greatest of unkindness.

Only a fool (v. 7) will despise the instruction of his parents, and only a fool of a parent will fail to give that training which is like "an ornament of grace" (v. 9) in the life of the young man or woman.

II. Social Discipline (Jer. 35:5-10).

The social order, which concerns our relation to our fellow men, disciplines each us. It makes many and what sometimes seem burdensome demands of us in order that we, as well as those around us, may have the privilege of living ordered and useful lives.

Wise as the man or woman who draws from his fellowship with others that helpful training which gives him stability and grace.

The Rechabites had made a vow that they would not drink intoxicants, a tribe they stood by that vow even when tested by Jeremiah. (Note that we say tested, not tempted. He knew they would stand.)

Fine family traditions have great value in guiding and controlling young people. We should, like the good man Jonadab (v. 8), establish a tradition of abstinence from intoxicants which will make all of our descendants say, "No one in our family ever drinks."

The training of home and of society has one great goal and that is:

III. Self-Discipline (1 Cor. 9:24-27).

In the life of every one of us there should be that determined purpose that life shall not be lived in careless disorder, or be permitted to run out at loose ends.

We are all running a race (v. 24), and it is for us so to run that we may achieve success. We cannot run with uncertainty (v. 26), we must know where we are going.

We are fighting a fight, and at times it is a desperate, life-and-death struggle. We must not beat the air (v. 26), but strike home the telling blows which will bring victory over our enemies, the world, the flesh, and the devil.

To do this calls for training and self-discipline. It runs bringing the body and its demands into subjection. The man who runs in a race does not destroy his chances for victory by using intoxicants, or other detrimental things. Surely we who run the race for Christ must be even more determined that self shall be disciplined for God's glory.

The standard for the conduct of the Christian is higher than is commonly supposed, for he withdraws himself from "every form of evil."

The disciplined believer knows that sin is sin—that what looks comparatively innocent often wears a false face covering real wickedness, or it is the first step on a downward path. To start on that path is to invite disaster. A striking example of this is the social drink—the fashionable cocktail—the friendly glass. Abstinence is the word—"abstain from every form of evil."

Put Pears Into Your Canning Schedule (See Recipes Below)

Relish With Meals

These later summer months find the markets still dotted with fruits that make wonderful jams and preserves. Those of you who want that extra special something to add to your meals during winter will want to take advantage of the crops and put them up in various forms. Most fall fruit is sweet and requires little of precious sugar in the preserving. Making them into jams, butters or marmalades will give you the joy of having the fruit instead of just the juice.

Pears made into jam or honey have long been favorites throughout the nation, and these are recipes I know you'll like. Commercial pectin assures you of success in making the thick, jellied consistency, and miraculously gives you more jam than you dreamed possible out of a small batch of fruit.

Ripe Pear Jam.
(Makes 8 six-ounce glasses)
3½ cups prepared fruit
4½ cups sugar
1 box powdered fruit pectin

To prepare fruit, peel and core about 2½ pounds fully ripe pears. Crush thoroughly or grind.

Measure sugar into a dry dish and set aside until needed. Measure fruit into a 5 or 6 quart kettle, filling up last cup or fraction of cup with water, if necessary.

Place over hottest fire. Add powdered fruit pectin, mix well and continue stirring until mixture comes up to a hard boil. Pour in sugar at once and continue stirring until mixture comes to a hard boil. Pour in sugar immediately, stirring constantly. To reduce foaming, ¼ teaspoon butter may be added. Continue stirring, bring to a full, rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute.

Remove from fire, skin, pour quickly. Paraffin hot jam at once. The peach crop is good this year. Peaches and oranges are a delightful combination with just a suggestion of lemon:

Peach-Orange Marmalade.
2 dozen large peaches, peeled
8 oranges
Juice of 1 lemon
Sugar (½ as much as fruit)

Cut the peel from three of the oranges into pieces. Cover with water and boil until tender. Drain and grind. Cut peaches and oranges (discard peel of other three) into thin slices and add lemon juice. Measure and add ½ of the amount of sugar. Boil rapidly until thick and clear. Pour into clean, hot jars and seal.

Spiced crabapples are good accompaniments for meats. In fact, when you serve meat with a relish such as this, it will even seem to stretch a small meat course:

Lynn Chambers' Point-Saving Menus

Beverage

Spiced Crabapples.
3 pounds crabapples
3 pounds sugar
3 cups vinegar
Stick of cinnamon
Cloves

Take blossoms off the crabapples, but leave stems on them. Steam apples until tender, not soft. Boil vinegar, sugar and spices for 15 minutes. Strain and put in fruit. Boil apples about 5 minutes, not allowing skins to break. Seal in hot, clean, sterilized jars.

Pear Butter.
Wash, pare and core ripe pears. Add just enough water to prevent sticking. Cook until soft, then press through a sieve. Add 2 tablespoons lemon juice, ¼ teaspoon nutmeg and 1 cup sugar to each quart of pulp. Boil rapidly until thick. Pour into hot, sterile jars. Process 10 minutes in a hot water bath.

Pear Honey.
Pare, core, chop and measure hard-ripe pears. Add a little water if necessary to start cooking. Boil 10 minutes. To each quart of chopped pears, add 3 cups sugar, juice of 1 lemon, grated rind of ¼ lemon and ¼ teaspoon ground ginger. Boil until thick. Pour into hot, sterile jars; seal at once. Orange and nutmeg may be used instead of lemon and ginger.

Quinces and apples are a good combination in this marmalade:

Quince-Apple Marmalade.
Pare, core and chop 6 quinces and 3 tart apples. Cover quince with water and cook until tender. Add apple and cook 10 minutes. Measure. Add ¾ cup sugar for each cup of fruit and juice of 1 lemon. Boil to jellifying point. Pour into hot jars and seal at once.

Tomatoes spiced with lemon, cinnamon and ginger are a splendid accompaniment to many meals. You'll like the rich, red color of them, too:

Tomato Preserves.
2 pounds tomatoes
4 cups sugar
1½ cups water
1 lemon
1 stick cinnamon
2 pieces ginger root

Use small, firm tomatoes. Scald 1 minute. Dip into cold water. Skin, but do not core. Combine sugar, lemon, sliced thin, cinnamon and ginger and simmer together 20 minutes. Remove cinnamon and ginger. Add tomatoes and boil gently until they are bright and clear. Cover and let stand overnight. Pack cold tomatoes into hot, sterile jars. Boil syrup until as thick as honey and pour over tomatoes. Process 15 minutes in a boiling water bath at simmering.

Ranch Preserves.
Soak dried apricots or peaches overnight in water to cover. Drain. Measure fruit. For each quart, make a syrup of 3 cups sugar and 1 cup water in which fruit was soaked. Boil 5 minutes. Cool. Add fruit and cook until thick and clear. If syrup becomes too thick before fruit is done, add ¼ cup water. Pour into hot jars and seal at once.

Star Dust

STAGE SCREEN RADIO
By VIRGINIA VALE
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THEY do tell us that Alan Ladd's popularity with the bobby-sox brigade has made him Hollywood's No. 1 "locket star." Alan, currently starring in "Two Years Before the Mast," received 7,200 requests in one week from young fans asking for locket photographs, and the demand became so heavy that Paramount's fan mail department has made up 100,000 special, small-sized photos of the star, which can easily be cut into a heart-shape, to fit the lockets favored by his teenage admirers.

Marilyn Maxwell likes her birth-month, August; in August she decided, while singing with Ted Weems' orchestra, to go to Hollywood and try acting. After six months at the Pasadena Playhouse she got a screen test with Metro, whose trademark is Leo, the August sign of the zodiac. But—it was in December that she did her first guest shot with Bing Crosby, leading to her present contract.

Robert Watson, former stage star who portrays Adolf Hitler in "The Hitler Gang," knows his subject well—this is the fifth time he's played that role. But this time it's different; it's his first completely serious characterization of Hitler.

June Dupres, who portrays Cary Grant's chief romantic interest in "None but the Lonely Heart," says she never got her big screen break until Producer David Hempstead ordered her to turn from brunette to blonde for the role. She had her hair bleached, and she has received many other important offers, all calling for blonde tresses—it looks as if she'd become a permanent blonde.

One of radio's new singing sensations is handsome Larry Douglas, starred on the CBS "Here's to Romance" Thursday evenings. Though he's been chief vocalist with Carmen Cavallaro's band and they are in several stage hits, this is his first coast-to-coast radio program.

Fanny Brice—"Baby Snooks"—to millions of radio listeners—has assembled a collection of pictures of her country now overrun by Hitler. Forty-seven of them have been shown in art galleries in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Baltimore and Rochester and recently in New York City.

Chief Willow Bird, of the Apache tribe, is celebrating his 32nd year in pictures and his 1000th film role by appearing in RKO's "The Girl Rush." But don't suppose for an instant that he's playing an Indian—he'll be seen as a gold miner!

A soldier in Los Angeles lost his wallet, which contained the furlough money he'd been saving up in order to visit his family for the first time in 11 months. Newspapers printed the story. Imagine the feelings of that GI Joe when he received a check in the mail—a check for $100, which he's going to hate to spend, because he has the autograph of Frank Sinatra!

A very special laurel wreath should be given lovingly Jane Fanning; in "Here's to Romance" and "Stage Door Canteen" broadcasts she asked to be permitted to sit on stage during the show, because "making an entrance on crutches looks too dramatic." She's the girl who was seriously injured in the Lisbon Clipper crash, while she was on her way to entertain our men in overseas service.

ODDS AND ENDS—Told on the set of "Murder, He Says" that he had just become a papa, Peter Whitney got excited, tripped over a cable, and sprained an ankle. . . . The Lubbers, CBS new quartet, met 10 years ago while working on a strawberry plantation, and started their musical careers as singing waiters in a Florida hotel. . . . Walter Abel was star of the "Midnight Teller of Today" this Saturday that Betty Grable, of the air, was the voice of the Quaker Girl. . . . 28 hours of radio's top programs go to invasion troops each week. . . . 100,000 murdered, our servicemen have roles in the Edward G. Tired Canary Tries To Crash Night Club
BOSTON—A tired canary was cared for at an animal rescue league after an unsuccessful attempt to crash the Club Mayfair, a Boston night club. The bird escaped while undergoing treatment at the animal hospital and three hours later workers at the night club reported the canary was giving a concert outside the kitchen door.

'Double Trouble,' Belies Its Name

Remarkable Deeds of Yanks With Battered Machine.

ANZIO BEACHHEAD.—"Double Trouble," a tank that belies its name, rumbled back from the Alban hills at dusk with a shell hole in its nose, red wine in a water can and 13 German prisoners trailing behind. Steering his aged steel monster to the narrow mechanical surf, Sgt. Ralph Johnson poked his dusty face out of the driver's seat and grinned "we are trading it tonight for another one—"Triple Trouble."

Cracked Beachhead Line.
The 22-year-old Kentuckian from Louisville, who had to leave his bride of six weeks to come overseas, was the first tanker to drive across the Claterna-Bene railroad and crack the German beachhead line.

While machine-gun bullets splattered against "Double Trouble's" rugged frame, Gunner Corp. Arthur Boenze of Route 9, St. Louis, "fired everything—Krauts going down in dugouts and Krauts climbing trees."

When the platoon leader, Lieut. Walter Russell of "somewhere on Long Island," lost his own tank on the line, he called "Double Trouble," climbed in and the sortie continued up the rolling hills.

About 1,000 yards beyond the railway embankment "Double Trouble" shuddered and stopped. A German 88-shell had squashed in the face of the tank.

"A little deviation to the right and we'd all been scrubbed," said Sergeant Johnson. "But Lieutenant Russell got out and decided our best way was to fit for shooting and told us he didn't need us as a machine gun pillbox. Then he hunted up his third tank of the day and resumed the attack. What a guy!"

Dispute Over Boiling Eggs Cause of Slaying

DETROIT.—In a fight that resulted from an argument over the boiling of two eggs, Doris Neal, 15, shot and killed her father, Jacob, 48, in their home, police reported.

Charles W. Jones, assistant prosecutor, said Doris told him that she had returned from a store, where she works afternoons, about 7:15 p. m.

"I went to the kitchen to get something to eat," she explained. "After boiling the eggs for about five minutes pa remarked that they were done. I said I didn't think so."

"He accused me of assing him," an argument ensued and he struck her several times, she said. She then said he followed her into the dining room, and she told him that she was tired and he hit her in the face until she apologized.

Enraged over the beating, Doris went to a bedroom, took an old army revolver from the wall, returned to the dining room, and shot her father three times, once in the forehead and twice in the chest, she told Jones.

Waits in Parking Lot

8 Days for Errant Dog
NEWARK, N. J.—A little thin but happy, Tony was reunited with his mistress, Mrs. Gertrude Vachal, who spent eight days in a Newark parking lot awaiting the return of the runaway white dog for her.

The dog, cherished companion of Mrs. Vachal's 75-year-old ailing father, Edward R. Salisbury of Niantic, Conn., ran away from the woman's automobile here. It was feared news of her missing might have a serious effect on the sick man's condition.

Wandering Tony, fed and bathed on the sly by firemen of Engine Company 2 when his presence was noted in the room, by the company mascot "Beautie," found Mrs. Vachal waiting for him when he came pattering down Centre street to the firehouse. Fire Capt. James J. Walsh recognized pictures of Tony. The dog, he said, had been hanging around for several days.

Crew Bails Out Bomber

Flies Four Hours Alone
DENISON, IOWA.—A four-engine bomber from the Sioux City, Iowa, army air base flew over sections of two states for four hours with no one aboard before crashing on the side of a ravine two miles northwest of here.

The plane crashed more than 100 miles from where the 10 crew members and a bombardier instructor bailed out when fire broke out on the ship. The fire evidently burned itself out during the trip.

The fliers left the plane in the vicinity of Belden and Wayne, in northeastern Nebraska. None was injured seriously. Denison is in northwestern Iowa 75 miles south-east of the Sioux City base and almost directly east of Wayne.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

A recent report of the War Department showed that Army requirements of crude or synthetic rubber for combat material included 310 pounds for a medium tank; 105 pounds for a fighter plane; 404 pounds for a 77 mm. gun carriage, down to 1½ pounds for a gas mask; and 19 pounds for a mile of field wire.

Government officials estimate that an average of one million gallons of alcohol a day will be used this year in the production of synthetic rubber. This is a big contributing factor in the shortage of certain types of beverages.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

A coat of white shellac applied to the cover of your cook book keeps it looking like new.

When making aprons, sew on two pockets. Then, if you need a patch you can use one of the pockets.

The blunt end of a pencil may be used to turn a fabric belt right side out. And orangewood stick is excellent for working the corners out sharply.

Beware of dusty shoulders. Cut paper protectors to slip over clothes hangers and onto your dresses before hanging them away.

A wet sponge within arm's reach when ironing makes it easy to dampen the spots which have dried.

A large wooden salad fork comes in handy in washing jars and pitchers. With the dish cloth on the end of it, the job is soon finished.

To fasten the thread at the end of your work, take one or more backstitches, then bring the needle through to the wrong side. Make a knot by holding the thread down on the wrong side with the thumb and pass the needle under it.

Hemming a new frock will be easier if you cut a piece of cardboard to the exact width you want the hem and use it as a marker. Start the hem, insert the card and slip it along as you work.

Beware of dusty shoulders. Cut paper protectors to slip over clothes hangers and onto your dresses before hanging them away.

A wet sponge within arm's reach when ironing makes it easy to dampen the spots which have dried.

A large wooden salad fork comes in handy in washing jars and pitchers. With the dish cloth on the end of it, the job is soon finished.

To fasten the thread at the end of your work, take one or more backstitches, then bring the needle through to the wrong side. Make a knot by holding the thread down on the wrong side with the thumb and pass the needle under it.

Hemming a new frock will be easier if you cut a piece of cardboard to the exact width you want the hem and use it as a marker. Start the hem, insert the card and slip it along as you work.

A coat of white shellac applied to the cover of your cook book keeps it looking like new.

When making aprons, sew on two pockets. Then, if you need a patch you can use one of the pockets.

The blunt end of a pencil may be used to turn a fabric belt right side out. And orangewood stick is excellent for working the corners out sharply.

FOLK & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Wonder if folks are getting more careless or the automobiles are just falling apart from old age. Within the past few days there has been half dozen wrecks on the street in front of the News office. Fortunately, none have been serious.

This is told on one of our would-be after dinner speakers: He arose in confusion after dinner and murmured stumbly: "M-m-my f-f-friends, when I came here tonight, only God and myself knew what I was going to say to you—and now only God knows.

Where were their parents? Seen at the intersection of Maplesville and Birmingham Highway the other night, two teen-age girls. They were trying to get a ride home, and lived several miles north of town. It was about 10:30 and on Saturday night.

A card comes this week from L. D. Easterling, somewhere in England. He says he has just been down the road a short ways and got four eggs, (God bless hens) and a glass of sweet milk. The first he has had since he has been in England. He reports all is well.

After spending many days and much thought, most of it bad, on getting our gas ration coupons changed Marvin Marcus came to our rescue Monday and got the mess straightened out for us. Why, in the name of Caesar Augusta, (and that ain't what I wanted to say) do they have so much red tape for a measly three gallon gasoline coupon is beyond us. Of course we know that gasoline rationing is necessary—but it wouldn't take a great amount of gray-matter, it seems to us, to make the obtaining of one's share a little less complicated.

The lady of the house suspected that one of her two sons had been dating the maid. Anxious to find out which one, she said:

"Nora, if you had the opportunity of going to the movies with one of my sons, which one would you choose?"

"Oh, it's hard to say, ma'am. I've had grand times with both of them. But for a real rollicking spree, give me the master."

Herman Lowery says that the fellows here-about can beat him raising their peaches, but they'll have to get up before breakfast if they want to beat him raising copper skin sweet potatoes. Herman claims to have carried the first truck load to the Birmingham markets last year and he repeated this year. He expects around six thousand pounds off of his six acres.

Pat Hamilton, manager at E. L. Kliner Furniture Company tells this one. A negro that he has had dealings with went to Montgomery last week to buy a used automobile. After deciding on the car and fixing the papers he had the Used Car Company call Pat to O.K. his credit rating. Pat gave him a good recommendation and by and by the negro got back to Clanton and came around to thank Pat for his aid in the transaction. Pat told him: "That's all right, George, but did you get a good automobile?" "Yas suh, boss," responded the negro, "I sho' did. It's got four brand new sympathetic tires on it."

Had a nice long talk last Friday with Luther Kendrick at Thorsby. Luther is at home, or was at home, on furlough. He has returned to Fort Meade now. He says he is going to get his place back with the State Highway Patrol when this fracas is over. He and Ed Propst made two of the most popular State Officers that had ever been in the county, and his old friends will be glad to see him back here in the uniform of the State Patrol again.

The Chilton County News talks to nearly ten thousand (10,000), people each week through it's columns. Wonder if you could think of a cheaper way to talk to so many people than to advertise with us. You need not figure—there is no cheaper way.

We're sorry to hear of the serious illness of W. O. Hocutt. He isn't the closest friend we have, but he is a fine fellow and we think lots of him. We wish for him a speedy recovery and the best of luck.

Just as a last thought—We're sure are wasting our money and time on Judges and Juries if we are going to leave the present Parole Board in office at Montgomery. That bunch thinks nothing of changing a judge and jury's sentence of fifty years into a few short months.

MR. JOHN W. HENLEY

Mr. John W. Henley, age 74, died suddenly at his home on Clanton Rt. 3, July 19th. Funeral services were held at Pleasant Grove Church, conducted by Rev. G. B. Golden; interment in church cemetery.

He is survived by his wife; four sons—M. C., W. B., R. L., and J. J., all of Clanton; two daughters, Mrs. Myrtis Chapman, Tarrant City, Mrs. Beatrice Headley of Clanton; five brothers—E. L. of Clanton, Hybert of Wetumpka, Tom of Verbena, M. L. of Florenceville, Fla., D. S. of Lakeland, Fla.; three sisters—Mrs. Bob Owens of Clanton, Mrs. Jimmie Mims of Clanton, Miss Ella Henley of Wetumpka; 26 grandchildren. Pallbearers were: Robert Chapman, Donald Chapman, Houston Mims, Dewey Mims, Reaton Headley and Howard Mims. Spigener Funeral Home in charge.

Infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sewell died Saturday a.m. Funeral services were held from Beulah Church Sunday at 2:00 p.m. She is survived by grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Sewell, Mt. Creek; Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Cato of South Carolina. Spigener was in charge.

HOWARD ROBINSON KILLED

Howard Robinson, age 31, was killed by a Northbound passenger train Monday, July 24. Funeral was held at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday following at 2nd Baptist Church, conducted by the Rev. Floyd Smith, Jones and Miller; interment was made in New Harmony Cemetery.

He was survived by his wife; three sons — William, Arthur and Larrie; one daughter, Glenda, all of Clanton; parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Robinson, Clanton Route 5; two sisters, Mrs. Ala Mae Lockhart, and Mrs. Pauline Ellison, both of Clanton. Pallbearers were: O. T. Rushing, Grover Rushing, Marvin Maddox, Buster Harris and Clarence Jones. Spigener Funeral Home in charge.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

At an early hour Sunday July 23, friends and relatives gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Smith to celebrate Mr. G. W. Sansom's 69 birthday.

Those enjoying the occasion were: Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Smith and children, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Trammel and children, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sansom and children, James Carl and Shirley Kendrick, Sol Sansom, Mrs. Dewey Deason, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Sansom and daughters, Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Taylor, Mr. Jim Parrish, Mr. G. E. Sansom and children, Mr. and Mrs. Lowery, Mrs. Bernice Short and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Raril Sansom, Mrs. J. P. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Headley, Mr. and Mrs. Doryll Lee Bone, Mrs. W. M. Headley and children, Adelle Etta Jean, Dorothy and Lorene Short.

Each one enjoyed the morning laughing and talking. At the noon hour a bountiful dinner was spread in the grove which all enjoyed.

Those visiting in the afternoon were Mr. and Mrs. Grady Davis and children, Mrs. Daisie Craine.

At a late hour each one left for their home wishing Mr. Sansom many more happy birthdays.

CEMETERY CLEANING

There will be a cemetery cleaning at Mt. Pisgah August 8th and 9th. Everyone is asked to meet at the church at 8:30 with the necessary tools.—Board of Stewards.

on a long journey, too tired to go on, so I put him comfy and went to bed once more.

SOLDIER WRITES TO PARENTS

July 2, 1944.

Dear Mother and Dad: It is just me again this morning on paper with a few more lines to let you all hear from me again. As I sit here writing these few lines I am wondering how it will find everybody feeling at this time? This leaves me just fine, and I am hoping that it finds you all the same. I am also wondering what it will find everybody doing for themselves these days?

Well, daddy, as you know the 4th of July is near at hand and I am wondering how much you will like being done laying-by your crop. Well, as you say, the crops are so late I know that you won't be done but I hope that you don't like much. How does the crops look this time? Even if they are late, I hope that you make the best crop that you have ever made.

Well, daddy, it is nearly 8 o'clock on Sunday morning, and in my mind I can see you all getting ready for going to church. I am glad to know that you all back home still have a free country and all the freedom of worship and all the other things alike. Just remember, Dad, your only son is over here for the purpose of keeping you a country full of freedom, so don't forget me when you go to church, and also remember that I don't have a chance to go, will you?

All that I have is my little Testament and what I can do alone. I make the best of it that I can and by the help of every one back home, I hope that when my time on earth is done, that somewhere I will have a home that I won't be ashamed of.

Daddy, when a person tells you that a soldier on Foreign soil or on the battlefield don't pray, just tell them it is a lie—I know better than that myself. I just wish that I was there to go to church with you this morning, but I've got to go on duty instead.

How is Jewell getting along these days I sure hope that she is doing fine. I am also glad that she is back up there with you all; I am also asking that you all keep her up there for I'm not worried about her up there half as much as if she was off somewhere staying by herself. And if ever there was a time that I deserved a favor, I think it is now the present? I guess it is really fine hot there by now. It is really hot over here too. So, I guess puts everything about even. Well, as news is short, I'll close this time, so be good, answer my and don't forget to pray for me—thy will be done and not mind. Answer soon. Love,

How is the weather back home

Just a soldier boy,
S. J.

Mr. and Mrs. George V. Parkson, who have been interned since the fall of Manila, had not been heard from until last week, when W. M. Polk, first cousin of Mrs. Parkson, had a cablegram from saying that they were doing well.

Two County Farms Chosen For Demonstration

Two farms in Chilton County were chosen last week for demonstration visits by county supervisors of the Farm Security Administration from West-Central Alabama. The farms selected because of the outstanding achievements of the owners were those of James C. Durbin and Otho McKinney, Negro.

Durbin purchased his farm early during the year. It is the same farm that his father inherited from his grandfather and lost through foreclosure during the depression. Here the visitors saw what could be accomplished in growing truck crops for the market. Durbin this year will sell peaches in the amount of $1,700; watermelons $200, cantaloupes $75; tomatoes $100; string beans $50 and potatoes $40. He will also market cotton in the amount of $700. He has already retired an $810 rehabilitation debt to the Farm Security Administration and expects to make three advance payments on his farm next Fall.

McKinney's farm has been classified as an outstanding achievement in soil conservation and soil building. He has 12 acres in kudzu for hay and grazing, one acre in sericea for hay, 12 acres of permanent pasture added to Dallis grass, lespedeza and white Dutch clover, plants seven to ten acres of oats each year followed by annual lespedeza for hay and plants 12 to Miss Martha Miller, who has been visiting Mrs. J. H. Sweet has returned to her home at Greenville, Ala. Sara Nell Jones came home Saturday from Mr. and Mrs. Howard Oden's at Foley, Ala. Annie Joyce came with her to attend the revival. Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Veasey and Randall are spending their vacation here this week with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lecroy, and Mrs. Bell Veasey.

Miss Jewel Wright is spending the week with her sister, Mrs. Jesse Sumner, and attending the revival. Mr. Norman Smithman has gone to West Point, Ga. to carry Randy Smith home.

Miss Florence Carter from Washington, D. C., has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Lillie Carter, for the past week.

Pacific—U. S. marines advance over enemy dead during heavy fighting on Saipan island in inner Jap defense circle.

EUROPE: Tough Go

Following up earth-shaking aerial and artillery bombardments, Allied forces nudged ahead on both ends of the Normandy front in the face of continuing bitter enemy resistance.

On the American end of the front, Doughboys inched ahead only after clearing the enemy from behind the rolling countryside's thick, high hedgerows, which he used as a cover for sending up heavy mortar and machine gun fire. Although the Allied command used thousands of big, medium and fighter bombers to blast open a path, the U. S. infantry still had to root the enemy from his deep entrenchments to gain ground.

On the British front, Gen. Bernard L. Montgomery's forces pushed ahead against increasing concentrations of enemy strength, with German Marshal Erwin Rommel using heavy artillery and tanks to back up individual strong points in his defense line.

Tighten Grip

With the Nazi party attempting to strengthen its grip on the army through the placement of sympathetic officers in key positions, and with the important elements of opposition driven to cover, Adolf Hitler held his sway over Germany following the bomb attempt on his life at headquarters.

Weathering the officers' revolt, Hitler called upon Marshal Hermann Goering and Propaganda Minister Paul Goebbels to totally mobilize Germany and occupied countries for a fight to the finish by obtaining additional manpower and industrial capacity by skimming public services and less important occupations.

Reportedly executed were Col. Gen. Ludwig Beck, former chief of staff, and Col. Claus von Stauffenberg, who planted the bomb, both key figures in the officers' plot to overthrow Hitler and dicker for a compromise peace with the Allies in opposition to the Nazis' fanatical avowal to fight to the last man.

Switch Attack

With German lines stiffening in the north, the powerful Red Army switched its sledgehammer attacks to the central sector of the 800-mile front, tearing large holes in Nazi defenses on the Polish plains.

In Italy, Allied troops came under fire of heavy concentrations of German artillery situated on the approaches to the enemy's celebrated "Gothic line," first of the elaborate fortification systems he has set up to impede the Fifth and Eighth armies' steady advance up the Italian peninsula to the bustling industrial and agricultural region of the north. With Polish troops bearing the brunt of the attack on the eastern end of the front, U. S. and British forces concentrated on the tougher western sector.

Although enemy lines stiffened in the north, they buckled in the center, where Nazi armies were compelled to fall back toward the old Polish capital of Warsaw and German Silesia to avoid being encircled from the rear and wiped out completely.

U. S. LAND: Disposal Policy

Government disposal of surplus land acquired in connection with the war program but no longer needed will be directed toward sale of property in family-sized tracts for individual cultivation, the surplus war property agency announced.

With all property to be appraised by experienced and disinterested men drawn from the community, SWP said, the policy will be to sell as quickly as possible at current values without disruption of the market; give former owners opportunity to repurchase, and avoid sales to speculators.

The Reconstruction Finance corporation will handle the disposal program, WSP said, despite the National Farmer Union's opposition on the grounds that RFC supervision would lead to control by the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

PACIFIC: Fanatical Foe

Supported by the booming guns of the U. S. fleet and swarms of battleplanes rising from the decks of the aircraft carriers, American troops tightened their hold on Guam and Tinian islands in the Mariana group, about 1,500 miles from the Japanese homeland.

As the U. S. steamroller rumbled closer to Japan, an enemy naval spokesman declared that the boasted Nipponese fleet would come out to fight only after U. S. air power had been whittled down and the foe could call upon its own land-based air force to support its operations.

Although fighting was heavy on both Guam and Tinian, it did not match the bloody struggle for Saipan. In one frantic counterattack on Tinian, howling Japanese charged marines' lines, brandishing flashing Samurai swords, and depending mainly upon light arms to penetrate the withering defensive fire.

MARRIAGE: Popular Again

Partly because of an increase in the marriage rate since 1940, and partly because millions of single men are in the armed services, the number of civilian bachelors between 20 and 34 years of age has dropped from 7,100,000 in 1939 to 4,400,000 in 1943. Indicative of the revival in marriage, which always suffers a slump under depressed economic conditions, the U. S. census bureau reported that 63 per cent of the female population 14 years old or over was married, in contrast to 60 per cent in 1940.

If the experience of World War I is any criterion, there will be a large increase in marriages following the end of the present conflict, the bureau said.

OIL: Record Output

Despite a record production of crude oil during the first six months of 1944, the industry looked forward to an increased output for the last half of the year to take care of new refining capacity to be put into operation to help meet expanded war demands.

With the U. S. reportedly supplying 70 per cent of the oil for the United Nations during the present conflict, U. S. production of crude averaged 4,461,000 a day during the first six months of 1944, as against 3,919,000 last year.

Although the industry felt it could produce the additional oil needed during the last half of 1944, it declared prompt allocation of heavy duty tires to tank trucks was necessary to assure delivery of essential fuel.

POLAND: New Government

The live question of the character of the Polish government after the war dated anew with the announcement of the organization of the National Council of Poland in liberated eastern territory under Russian auspices.

While the National Council accused the Allied-recognized Polish government in exile in London of having set itself up through the "unlawful fascist constitution of . . . 1935," the latter assailed the new organization as consisting of "mostly completely unknown persons, who represent nobody except a small communist group without any influence . . ."

In conceding Ukrainian, White Russian and Lithuanian portions of prewar Poland to the Soviets, the National Council called for compensation through annexation of parts of eastern Germany and East Prussia.

In one of its first decrees, the National Council called for the unification of all Polish fighting forces, which would remain under Russian control.

LORD'S WHEAT: Yield Grows

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." John 12:24.

Thus inspired by the scriptural text, Henry Hayden of Tecumseh, Mich., planted a cubic inch of wheat on a patch of ground four feet by six in 1940, with the Friend's church receiving one-tenth of the yield and the other nine-tenths going back into seed on land provided by Henry Ford.

Tecumseh's miller and known as the "Tithing Quaker," Hayden continues this practice each year, with his yield expected to reach 90,000 bushels from 3,000 acres in 1946, with the entire crop going to the church.

Harvest of the 1944 crop was a gala event, with Henry Ford himself on hand to help with an assembly of old threshing equipment, which graphically depicted the evolution of such machinery through the years.

For months, Mr. and Mrs. R. Maxwell's hen laid standardized eggs for the couple in Oregon City, Ore.

Then, of a sudden, the hen started laying real whoppers, 9 1/2 inches around lengthwise and 8 inches around crosswise.

After seven days of super-production, the hen died.

POSTWAR PLANS: Tax Reform

With his celebrated pay-as-you-go income tax system in force, President Ruml came out for further tax simplification and reform in the postwar world in a report to the privately operated National Planning association.

In collaboration with H. Christian Some of a New York City business man, Ruml, himself treasurer of the big Macy department store, proposed abolition of corporate income taxes to lower prices, increase wages and remove the double taxation ensuing from levies on company profits and then shareholders' income.

Principal source of federal income, they said, should be a graduated income tax, ranging from 16 per cent on net income under $3,000 to 50 per cent on $250,000 or more.

Recognizing the need for government assistance during depression periods, Ruml and associate called for a balanced budget and retirement of public debt only after a restoration of high business activity, which might see 550,000,000 people working and drawing salaries in the 1943 level of $143,000,000,000 in income.

CATTLE: Less Primes

U. S. department of agriculture statistics disclosed the tendency toward the marketing of cheaper grades of cattle with the big Chicago yards handling 43 per cent fewer choice and prime steers during the first half of July than in the same period last year.

At the same time, USDA figures showed that the Chicago yards received 1.9 per cent more of the good grades during the recent July period, 75 per cent more mediums and 133 per cent more commons.

Chicago trade specialists attributed the decline of the choice and prime receipts to the activities of black market operators taking advantage of the production cut of these grades because OPA ceiling regulations allegedly have cut profit margins. Short-feds providing medium quality beef are returning the most money the specialists reported.

RUBBER PROGRAM

Satisfied that his task was accomplished, Rubber Director Bradley Dewey tendered his resignation with the recommendation that his office be discontinued, and that its functions be turned over to the War Production board.

Synthetic plants are now producing at the rate of 836,000 tons a year, sufficient to make the 22,000,000 new tires that are on the schedule for 1944. About 6,000 experienced tire makers are needed to meet the goal, Dewey concluded.

Hot Controversy Rages Over Food Distribution For Liberated Peoples

By BARROW LYONS

WNU Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.—

Some pretty warm discussions about whether citizens of liberated territories should be rationed on 2,000 calories of food a day, or 2,600 calories have been going on in Washington behind closed doors. The difference is 30 per cent, and when millions of dollars and tons of available shipping space, this may be the difference between what is possible and what is impossible of accomplishment.

The army is the only agency in a position to distribute food in liberated areas. It is the army's duty during the early weeks of occupancy. It is prepared to preserve civil order and health. Until order is restored sufficiently to permit other agencies of our government to function, the army must assume responsibility.

In approaching the nutrition problem the army consulted civilian authorities as to how much food—how many calories of a balanced diet—would provide a minimum for health. In the early stages of liberation the army does not feel that it can undertake to provide more than a minimum. The effort to beat enemy forces must take precedence over everything else, and at times battle requirements absorb all transportation the army can command.

What is more, we have found food distribution facilities badly disrupted in many areas. In some sections of Italy virtually all shopkeepers who were Fascists, have disappeared, and untrained persons had to be found to handle distribution of food and supplies.

Some Difficult Problems

Nor have experienced distributors always proved trustworthy. Food entrusted to wholesalers by civilian agencies has not always found its way into normal channels of distribution. In India and North Africa much of the grain and flour sent in was withheld from distribution by wholesalers who profited by the shortage of living people, until their practices were discovered and ended.

So the army is not undertaking to deliver more than a minimum diet to the people of France, Italy and other liberated territories. If civilian agencies, when given access, can supplement this, they will be welcomed.

In determining what constituted a minimum essential diet for the maintenance of health the army shared responsibility with civilian agencies—state department, foreign economic administration and department of agriculture. UNRRA was not invited to participate in the discussions. An interdepartmental committee, including army experts, decided that 2,000 calories a day, with some exceptions, was the minimum for maintenance of health.

Now, however, FEA nutrition experts disagree. They feel that a minimum diet should provide more than 2,000 calories a day—at least 2,600 calories. It is pointed out by them that the average American gets from 3,000 to 3,200 calories a day.

The army does not object to people in liberated territories getting all the food possible, if it does not interfere with transportation of soldiers and supplies to the fighting fronts—but army officials do not wish to see the development of heavy civilian traffic until the Germans are beaten. It has become evident that slow victory would mean willful destruction by the Nazis in subject quarters of millions of people. If we are to save their lives we must use available resources to the limit.

Belgium to Help

After the Germans are beaten all concerned hope to do much better for liberated peoples. For instance, the Belgian government in exile plans to purchase food for its own people. It has the money and the organization. It will approach undernourishment as an illness. The "sick people" of Belgium are to be fed back to health as rapidly as possible so that they can assume quickly their normal functions.

Our own authorities would approach the problem of feeding similarly. One of the first tasks of the surgeon general's office will be to make surveys to determine exactly what are the food deficiencies of liberated territories, and then see that right kinds of food are distributed.

It should be noted that the 2,000 calories, which has been set as the nutrition goal, is the basic allowance for the average man. Extra allowances are provided for those performing heavy labor.

In this connection Dr. Mark A. Graubard, in charge of labor education for the Nutrition Program branch, department of agriculture, points out that the average German worker today gets around 2,500 calories, as compared with 5,000 calories for an American lumberman and 4,500 for a truck driver.

PATTERNS SEWING CIRCLE

Three-Piece Play Suit

FOR THE newcomers who like to get out and play from morning until supper time—a three-piece costume of bonnet, jumper or jumper-dress and matching pants is the right garb for any little girl!

Pattern No. 8663 is in sizes 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. Size 3, dress and pants, requires 2 1/4 yards of 33 or 35-inch material; bonnet, 3/4 yard.

Due to an unusually large demand and current war conditions, slightly more time is required in filling orders for a few of the most popular pattern numbers.

ATHLETE'S FOOT NEWS

'80.6% of sufferers showed CLINICAL IMPROVEMENT after only 10-day treatment with SORETONE

Forster D. Spill, Inc., well-known consulting chemists, have just completed a test with a group of men and women suffering from Athlete's Foot. These people were told to use Soretone. At the end of only a ten-day test period, their feet were examined in two ways: 1. Scrapings were taken from the foot and examined by the bacteriologist. 2. Each subject was examined by a physician. We quote from the report: "After the use of Soretone according to the directions on the label for a period of only ten days, 80.6% of the cases showed clinical improvement of an infection which is most stubborn to control."

Improvements were shown in the symptoms of Athlete's Foot—the itching, burning, redness, etc. The report says: "In our opinion Soretone is of very definite benefit in the treatment of this disease, which is commonly known as 'Athlete's Foot.'"

So if Athlete's Foot troubles you, don't despair with this nasty, devilish, stubborn infection. Get Soretone! McCosken & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Connecticut.

PEARS LOWERED: The OPA has placed fresh pears under price control regulations. Up to September 10, the highest retail price will be about 16 cents a pound. It will be allowed to rise to 17 cents by next April, OPA officials said. The ceiling prices are expected to bring about a reduction of about 20 per cent in present retail prices in most localities.

SUMMER JOB: Back in 1894, James Ware took a job as a railroad water during the summer college year way through medical help pay. Somehow he hung on until fall came, and then summer. With Free Silver and one thing and another, James thought he had better stick to his job. Last week he was presented button for 50 years of service with the railroad.

FOREWORD

The author, Col. Robert L. Scott Jr., served under my command from July 1, 1942, to January 9, 1943, as commander of my fighter force. The only criticism of his actions in group combat was that he consistently scheduled himself as a pilot on all possible missions. He led all types of combat missions but specialized in the most dangerous, such as long-range flights in strafing from minimum altitude, Jap. aircraft, motor vehicles, and shipping deep in enemy territory. It was often necessary for me to forbid his participation in combat missions in order to enable him to discharge the many other duties of a group commander.

His story is a record of persistence, determination, and courage from early boyhood. Having determined early in life that he had to fly, he overcame all obstacles in the way to the attainment of his ambition. This story alone should inspire and never fail to inspire every American boy. Having become a military pilot, his determined struggle to meet the enemy and his glorious record in his career as a fighter pilot and as a commander of the American Fighters in China, should be an inspiration to all Americans of all ages.

Colonel Scott's group of fighters always operated against greatly superior numbers of the enemy. Often the odds were five to one against them. Their planes and equipment were constantly battered by enemy fire and supplies were extremely limited. Both Scott and his handful of pilots had one resource in unlimited quantities—courage. His story alone should inspire and never fail to inspire every American boy. Having become a military pilot, his determined struggle to meet the enemy and his glorious record in his career as a fighter pilot and as a commander of the American Fighters in China, should be an inspiration to all Americans of all ages.

C. L. CHENNAULT,
Major General, U. S. S.,
Commanding, 14th Air Force.

AUTHOR'S NOTE

My decision for the title of this book was probably made back there in Kunming one afternoon as I sat down to those five rivet heads from my back. They had been driven in when a Jap explosive bullet hit the armor plate behind my seat. To keep my mind off the pain the "Gee" came into my head. I began to get it kept talking to me. He seemed to find it hard to believe that I flew the little fighter alone—that I dropped the bombs—fired the six machine guns—changed the fuel tanks—reloaded the guns—landed the fighter. Finally, with disbelief in his eyes, he looked at me and said, "Colonel, you are up there all alone—even talk over the radio when you shoot the guns?" As I waited for him to go on with another question, I heard the old doctor say, "No, son—you're not up there alone—not with all the things you come through. You have the greatest courage in the world, even if there is just room for one in that fighter ship—no, you're not alone."

I believe when the life is over that we will be closer to God than at any time in the past. I believe this because I have seen instances of real faith in the world. I have seen instances: Just the other day a song came out, "Coming in on a Wing and a Prayer." That could have been conceived as a title or as the name of the song only by some real event. A ship landed with an engine shot away—the fuselage gutted by fire and the plane riddled with bullets. One of the war correspondents hurried out to the wounded pilot. "It was asked, 'How in the world did you bring this ship in?' The pilot shook his head, smiled and replied, "I don't know—ask the Man upstairs."

We who fly are going to get to know that Great Flying Boss in the sky better and better. My personal ambition is to be a pilot. I am going to gain into the combat against the Jap or the Hun; that he help me just a little to shoot down a hundred Jap ships—even a thousand. I hope he lets me come to tell you about it. I'm going to name that one—the sequel to this one—GOD IS STILL MY CO-PILOT.

CHAPTER I

Even the angels in heaven must have struggled with their wings after the few seconds of my first flight. For back home in Macon, Georgia, in 1920, I must have been, even at age twelve, the "vandal" type. There I climbed the steeple of the Baptist Church, and from the belfry took twelve white-pigeons, carried them to a tent-messing of Holy Rollers, and at the tense moment of fanatic prayer released them. I can remember nearly spitting my sides laughing at what happened. The doves were rolling on the sawdust floor. They were rolling their eyes and yelling, "Gideon, Gideon—hal-luh—glory, glory!" I suppose the Pigeons really did look like doves of peace.

But I had reckoned without the old preacher, who had me arrested for disturbing the noisy peace. When I got out of jail, more embarrassed than anything else, I swore vengeance on the Holy Rollers and the old preacher. Early one morning while delivering papers I took a razor blade and cut off fifty feet of canvas from the side wall of the converted circus tent—took it away and hid it in the woods.

I had to use for the purloined canvas, and to excuse myself from a nagging conscience I tried to forget it. But every morning I saw the jagged hole that I had made for vengeance. Later on I decided to wait a glider, and for wing-covering the canvas was ideal. Then, with the cloth stretched over the ribs of the airframe and varnished for tightening, even with American insignia painted on the fuselage, I found myself ready to fly. Two of my friends helped me pull it to the roof of a high colonial home in Macon, and with them steadying the wings I ran down the sloping roof, and out into space. How in those days I knew nothing of "main-springs," "center sections," or "wing-loading." With a crack like the closing of the jail door, the wing buckled in the center and I crashed to the ground. The Cherokee rose bush—that sacred State flower of Georgia into which I fell—probably saved my life, but the thorns stayed with me for a long time.

My father had pulled me from the wreckage—more scared than hurt—I was ordered to tear the glider apart. I did, but saved the ill-fated canvas for other plans. Later on it was used to cover the barrel-stave ribs of a home-made canoe which was intended to transport me down the Ocmulgee River to the sea, some twelve hundred miles away as the winding river made a curve. I made out the hundred miles of the trip when the sailing canoe caught on a snag and the current rolled us to the muddy bottom, tangled in the rope rigging of a barge. I was the only one who followed I nearly drowned—I saw my whole misspent life parade before my eyes. Finally the rope broke and I swam ashore; but I had already decided to leave the sacred canoe the nurse forever and fly. Once again my mind turned to flying. I confined my aircraft construction to scale models, and finally made a model of the first Boy Scout Aviation merit badge in that part of the country. I remember when General Mitchell (Billy Mitchell) led a flight of fast-looking MB-3's through the home of the first Boy Scout Aviation merit badge in that part of the country. I remember when General Mitchell (Billy Mitchell) led a flight of fast-looking MB-3's through the home of the first Boy Scout Aviation merit badge in that part of the country.

It was far back, when I was four or five, that I had seen my first airplane. A pilot by the name of Ely spun in a loop and I was terrified. He was killed and the hangar a heavy voice called, "Six hundred dollars." And to this fact the man the Jennys went, one by one. I must have bid over a hundred times before the man who had gone the sale had stopped for lunch and had been resumed.

That afternoon I kept bidding, and as I said "Seventy-five dollars" for about my hundredth time, I heard heavy breathing over my right shoulder. I turned to look at the man who had been overbidding me, and the deep voice said, "Now listen, son, I'm going to let you have this plane for the price you named. Get it and get the hell out of here, because I'm buying all the rest for an airline." Anyway I had a real plane, all crated up. I hauled it home on a truck, hid it in an old barn, and the man who had gone couldn't find out about it, and began trying to assemble the parts.

For days and weeks I worked, but couldn't get the knack of it. Finally I received a letter from a man named Mr. W. H. Jones, who had been a pilot in the war. He offered to help me put the Jenny together, and teach me to fly and navigate, if I would give him use of the plane for "barnstorming" over the State on week-ends.

The partnership began. He taught me some fundamentals, like taxiing faster and faster until the ship was almost ready to take off. I went to Chandler Field in Atlanta and took several lessons with the instructors there in Eagles and Jennys, until one day I trusted myself to take off from the racetrack of my hometown fairgrounds. I still don't see how I got by with the flight, because I knew nothing about the coordination of controls or the technique of flying—though no one seemed to know much about them in those days. But the ship was a pretty safe old crate, the wing skin saved me from digging a wingtip in the forthcoming ground-loops, and I got away with murder.

All of this ended very suddenly. The street-car conductor instructor who came to land one night and hooked the Jenny's right wing on the guy-wire of a smoke-stack. That was the last of him and the last of my Jenny, because they both burned.

As the years went on I moved up in the Boy Scouts until at seventeen, in 1925, I was one of the highest in the country, and had more merit badges than any other Scout in the South. With all of this, however, my schooling had suffered, for to me flying and athletics came before books and such. I sometimes think the only way I ever completed high school was by the grace of God. The Government would train you to fly, give you the best course in the world. Then they would order you to active duty as a Reserve Officer for about a year. After that, due to economy programs, it might all be over.

Wanting to fly for the rest of my life, I had chartered my course. I went to the Military Academy and became a regular army officer first; then to be ordered to the Air Corps Training Center as a student officer. After completing the flying course, I would have been in front of me as a pilot in the Army.

The greatest gift I had was to get into the Military Academy, for appointments were scarce in the South. I wrote all the Senators and Congressmen in Georgia, but four of them had promised their quotas long before. All such refusals merely made me more determined to win the opportunity. I wrote not only the military leaders but the members of other States. Finally, the Congressman of my Georgia district—at the earnest plea of home-town friends who knew of my Boy Scout record—gave me an alteration. This proved of little value; the principal won out by merely presenting his high-school credits and passing the physical examination. The next year I was given the first of the first and Bricker again the principal won.

Hope of entering the Academy seemed to wane, for I was approaching maximum age limit for applicants. The same year I tried a competitive examination in algebra subject. This failure at last proved to me that though my studies in high school may have been passed, I had learned very little. My mind in myself was at a loss. There, in 1928, when the high-school principal did me the greatest favor in the world by his remark: "Well, you really didn't expect to go to West Point, did you?" And again the principal won. He made me swear that by all that was made and holy I would get there.

The things that followed were chronologically peculiar for any boy. I'll bet I'm one of the few in this world who was graduated from high school, attended two colleges, and then returned to high school to really get the foundation I had missed. I know I had at last learned that what one of the old professors said was right: "Not for school, but for life, we learn."

Returning to my old high school, I chose my own courses and subjected myself to several periods of mathematics, history, and English every day. The professors, who remembered me as seldom opening a book, and enlisted in the ROTC Army as a private. There I became Private Scott, Serial Number 6355544, in Company "B" of the 22nd Infantry. Three months later, after a preliminary examination, I began training in the Fourth Corps Area—West Point Prep School.

Army Fears Political Snarl in Handling News for GIs

Military Not Desirous of Cutting Off News From Armed Forces; Dislikes Entering Possible Controversy.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building Washington, D. C.

There is a great deal of talk, some of it sincere and from the heart, some of it so dripping with sentimentality that it offends good taste, about "GI Joe" and what the country owes him.

After a bitter battle, a bill was passed in congress, following all kinds of political badminton, to provide means for the men and women in the armed services to vote in the coming election. Then, a fortnight ago, came a dispatch from the correspondent of the New York Herald-Tribune in Algiers which said:

"Unless some provocative discussion of the presidential campaign appears in the Stars & Stripes (the service newspaper) only a small percentage of the troops will vote."

A little later, Col. Egbert White (who worked with him on the original Stars & Stripes in Paris in the first World War) was relieved of his directorship of the Mediterranean editions of the Stars & Stripes and ordered to report to Washington.

About the same time, it was revealed that books like "The Republic" and similar works which have been accepted as standard textbooks are on the war department's prohibited list because congress has forbidden "political argument and propaganda" in the armed forces.

Colonel White wanted to make the Stars & Stripes as much like a metropolitan newspaper as possible. He wanted to send reporters to cover both the Republican and Democratic conventions. He wanted to have the use of a regular news report from the Associated Press wire, like any other newspaper, instead of being limited to the military service (a digest of the news carefully screened in New York).

Receives Legion of Merit

Just how far Colonel White had gone with his ambitious plans when the pressure began, I do not know. I do know that when he first went to the Mediterranean, he was a private. However was still there, the Colonel's work was apparently so satisfactory that the General made him a member of his staff and he received the Legion of Merit award. But General Eisenhower, who had another Pharaoh came to Egypt (or I should say to Algiers). For a time, White seemed to have a pretty free hand but there were no great innovations, while the general was publishing. He did start a reprint of the Reader's Digest which caused some disturbance, not because of the content, but because other magazines were to receive some reprints from the Saturday Evening Post were also used.

Then General Surles, head of army public relations, and Secretary of War Stimson both appeared in the war theaters and about that time White's mission occurred. He had left when President Roosevelt agreed to run against the GIs who read the Rome edition of the Stars & Stripes learned about it in a 190-word story given third place, well down on page one under a two-column head. The Normandy campaign was given first place and the Russian offensive, second.

The coverage by the Rome Stars & Stripes of the Dewey and Bricker nominations was a 500-word story, halfway down the page, with a box containing highlights of the convention. There were also 200 words on how New York papers covered the convention; seven paragraphs on Hoover's speech; two paragraphs on Farley. The Herald-Tribune correspondent described this as "meager" coverage due, not to the wishes of the editors, but to the restrictions.

No Public Statement

At this writing, White has not made a public statement—officials don't talk. Since the action occurred in the Mediterranean theater, Washington army officials can't comment. They merely point to Title Five, suggested by Senator Taft, the soldier's vote law passed by congress.

This Title Five says that anyone responsible for permitting publication in a service organ paid for by government funds of political argument or propaganda designed or calculated to affect the election of any federal officer can be put in jail for a year or fined a thousand dollars.

Now, the military fears a political embargo. Br'er Fox feared brambles. They are not particularly desirous of cutting off news from the armed forces. They have no objection to having the boys get into controversy so long as it doesn't interfere in the argument with the enemy. But they have a decided dislike for getting into a controversy themselves. They say, "There is the law. We don't intend to violate it."

Colonel White's departure has started a discussion, the end of which is not yet. Will "GI Joe" get his political news? That depends on whether congress and the army simply pass the buck back and forth or whether something definite is done.

Senator Taft said when he sponsored Title Five that in the first place he had no intention of banning news acceptances or textbooks in the schools. The senator met with army officials, members of the council on books in wartime, and others in New York on July 20 to discuss this question.

Taft also said to me that he felt the law need not interfere with furnishing the service newspapers with news generally circulated here. He said if the army asked for a clarifying amendment, he would be glad to take it up with congress.

I have also talked with Senator Lucas, coauthor of the original soldier's vote bill. He said he considered it "a little short of stupidity to deny the boys overseas or in the war theaters any of the information that any citizen in this country can obtain." He said he thought "something ought to be done to liberalize the regulations on publicity."

Definition Needed

There is no sign at this writing that the army will make a request for a clarifying amendment but it will be all right with them if what is considered propaganda directed to the election of a federal officer holder is clearly defined. Meanwhile, why shouldn't the military want to toe the line? Their commander-in-chief (a political candidate himself) is a Democrat. Their secretary of war, their chief of naval operations, Henry Stimson, is a good Republican. What about Colonel White? He must have known what was ahead of him when he tried to make the Stars & Stripes a metropolitan newspaper. He must remember as I very well do the headaches he and I and the rest of the old Stars & Stripes staff caused GHQ-G2D up in Chautau, in the last war.

The Stars & Stripes of World War II appears in London, Algiers, Casablanca, Oran, a weekly edition from Naples, editions out of Cairo for the Middle East. That is a publishing undertaking of no mean proportions intended to suit a real "GI."

But if a newspaper is any good for anything, it is supposed to view with alarm and point with pride come election time. It takes a real argument to sprout a vote. And that is what the army says congress says. The Stars & Stripes must have a part in. Meanwhile, you don't expect "political argument" in the service publications if it is going to cost some honest colonel with a wife and family to support, a thousand dollars a year or a year in jail. There will have to be a clarification of the law.

Nazi Civilian Morale

A significant editorial appeared in a Cologne newspaper—Cologne, the home of the once happy, carefree whippersnappers in Italy. There must have been a cheerfully hoarse "German wine and German song"—and one of the first cities to feel the horror of the early mass raids.

"It is not easy to calm one's raging nerves," says this newspaper, and then counsels resignation and stoical concealment of one's personal feelings, lest others be affected, and warns against the use of sedatives.

This quotation is but one link in a growing chain of evidence revealing the state of German civilian morale.

BRIEFS... by Baukhage

The Japanese Domei agency said today that approximately 30,000 school children had been evacuated from Tokyo to rural districts since July 8.

The new station Radio Cherbourg opens its daily broadcasting program with: "From the liberated soil of France, Radio Cherbourg speaks to you."

"A map is the foundation stone of any operation," says a long and precise document issued by the British Information service entitled, "Liberating a Continent—Index to Invasion."

Maps required for the Allied North African landing filled an entire warehouse at the embarkation port, the British revealed.

LEGAL NOTICES

NON-RESIDENT NOTICE

The State of Alabama, Chilton County, Circuit Court in Equity, July 19, 1944.

Lucie McAlister complainant, vs. J. Roy McAlister, defendant.

In this cause it is made to appear to the Register by the affidavit of A. B. Foshee, Attorney that the Defendant is a non-resident, and that his place of residence and post-office address is unknown, and that such address cannot be ascertained after reasonable effort; and, further, that, in the belief of said affiant, the Defendant is of the age of twenty-one years:

It is, therefore, ordered by the Register that publication be made in the Chilton County News, a newspaper published in the County of Chilton, once a week for four consecutive weeks, requiring him, the said J. Roy McAlister to plead, answer, or demur to the bill of complaint in this cause by the 18th day of August, 1944, or, in thirty days thereafter, a decree pro confesso may be taken against him.

Done at office in Clanton, this 19, day of July, 1944.—M. D. FOSHEE, Register. 29-4tc

NAVY OPENS ENLISTMENTS FOR YOUNG MEN OF 17

Restrictions on the enlistment of young men of 17 for the Navy have been removed and the quotas for those of this age group are unlimited. M. H. Potter, Petty Officer in Charge of the Navy Recruiting Station at Montgomery announced.

Pointing out that many men of 17 and nearing 18 were unable to enlist in the Navy during previous months and were therefore unable to choose their service, Mr. Potter said that all

Has Price Control Hurt The Farmer?

Compare the conditions existing during the World War I with no price control and the present conditions of World War II under price control, the following figures furnished by United States Department of Commerce.

The farmers were hit the hardest from farm price collapse a few years after the first World War I in 1920-21.

Wheat dropped 65%, corn-dropped 78%, cotton 76%, potatoes 85%, rice 79%, peanuts 70%, hogs 66%, beef cattle 57%, butter 53%, milk (whole-sale) 32%, eggs 73%, poultry 39%, oranges 76%.

Causing the farmers income to shrink from $1,360.00 to $460.00 annually, in the next five years 1922-26, 453,000 farmers lost their farms by mortgage foreclosure.

Congress on January 30, 1942, decided that such punishing blows of inflation and deflation should not be repeated, to IPA was given the responsibility. It has been a gigantic undertaking, it has involved difficult planning to give everyone really fair dealings.

Thus for 18 hectic feverous months OPA has been under a terrific pressure but, as time goes on and the people become better acquainted with price control, OPA is being "looked on as a friend." We look forward to a better understanding and closer contact with the farmers as a result of the new OPA farm advisory committees being organized to cooperate with OPA's field offices through the nation.

Now let's see how the farmers have fared under price control in 1942-43. The net income of farm operators in these years has reached an all time high after all property taxes, farm labor costs and all other operating costs are reduced.

1942 farmers net income $10,180,000; 1943, $12,775,000, compared to the following years: 1919, $8,799,000; 1926, $5,724,000; 1929, $5,878,000; 1939, $4,537,000.

The highest increase of farm production during World War I was 5%, compared to 21%, an all time high during this war through 1943, yet we hear that price control has caused a hardship on the farmers.

We don't say for one minute that all farmers are prospering, we do say that most farmers are far better off today than ever before in history.

We also know now that price control works.

We also know for many difficult months in spite of piling up inflationary pressures, living cost has been held level. And if we continue to hold the line... the value of investments will be safeguarded... people with fixed incomes will not suffer an inflationary squeeze... added billions will be saved on the cost of the war... we shall provide a firm price level on which to base an era of post war prosperity.

HARRISIN B. OWENS

Harrison B. Owens, age 52, died in Veterans Hospital in Hines, Ill., July 24th. Funeral services were held Friday afternoon July 28, at 4 o'clock, conducted by Rev. J. L. Bice, assisted by Fred Lowery and Ed Wilkins at Shiloh Church. He is survived by his wife, two daughters and one son; five brothers and four sisters.

Pallbearers were: Bill and Oscar Cox, Lamar Powell, John Burnett, Ed Edwards and Cornelius Mullins. Flower girls were: Jettie and Annie Maude Owens, Sarah and Micheline Mims, Euna Powell and Mavis Mullins.

Chilton County Urged To Cut Sawlogs Now

Spend your slack season cutting sawlogs, pulpwood or working in some forest industry, encourages M. R. Glascock, County Agent.

Recent information shows that the forest products industries are the only raw industries with a serious raw material shortage. This shortage has occurred as a result of constantly increasing government demands and a serious shortage of labor for cutting and sawing of raw materials. At present, the Army and Navy is rapidly draining all timber and pulpwood stock for the construction of crating material for supplies going overseas.

Alabama's quota for 1944 production is approximately 2 and one-sixth billion board feet of lumber and one million cords of pulpwood. Our production is now lagging. The mill employees will be unable to reach this quota without a great deal of part-time assistance.

Many farmers will find it profitable to use their spare time thinning their timber for pulpwood or clearing bottoms for pasture development. Sawmills are planning to use their trucks during the summer season to pick up logs from individual farmers that are unable to do their own hauling. This will give many farmers an opportunity to market saw timber and pulpwood on or near their own farms. Also, many grades of timber that were not marketable in pre-war days are now demanding attractive prices. This will help many farmers clean out and improve young growing forest stands. Undesirable species, crooked and damaged trees should be removed from growing stands. The present sellers market will help farmers pay for this improvement work. The materials put on the market will aid in getting supplies to the boys at the front.

Farm boys from 18 to 26 years of age with Agricultural Deferment (C Registrants) cannot legally accept jobs off the farm without USES releases. This group of farm boys is eligible for a release to only the jobs that are directly related to agriculture.

Temporary releases can be gotten for all phases of lumber, pulpwood, or veneer wood production. Applications for United States Employment Service releases can be started at your local County Agent's Office or by meeting the Employment Service at the courthouse in Clanton each Tuesday.

Although you cannot shoot at Germans or Japs you can get right in the middle of the fight by helping produce the materials that are necessary to get guns, food and other equipment to our boys.

See your nearest timber or pulpwood dealer so that you can get in the fight.

ANNUAL FOX HUNT WAS SUCCESSFUL. ALL AROUND

The annual meeting and supper of the Chilton County Fox Hunters Association, held on July 26th, at Old McKee Grocery in Beat 1, was a grand success in every respect, including financially, according to Jim Parrish, secretary-treasurer. In the absence of the President of the association, Mr. Parrish had most of the arrangements to look after, but everything was kept well in hand and the meeting and supper went over in a big way.

There was collected a total of $134.40, and the expenses were $119.88. There is left cash on hand after all expenses are paid, $14.52.

Everybody had a good time at the meeting and supper; there was no drinking or rudeness, but everything went off quiet and peaceably.

A full staff of officers were elected, including: Jim Parrish, president; Cleve Littlefield, secretary-treasurer. A board of directors was elected, and Joe Mullins was elected as chairman of the board.

VERBENA BAPTIST REVIVAL

The Verbena Baptist Church will hold its protracted meeting beginning Monday night, August 14th, and continuing through Sunday night, August 20th. Services will be held twice each day at 11 o'clock a.m. and 8:00 o'clock p.m.

The Rev. Roswell Owens, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Clanton, will do the preaching throughout the meeting. Rev. Owens is a good Bible preacher, having spent several years as a missionary in Palestine, the land where the Bible was written.

The pastor and people of the Verbena Baptist Church extend to you a hearty welcome to attend all of these services.

A ten-cent rubber plate scraper used to remove crumbs, grease, etc., will make dish washing easier.

SUNBEAMS ANNUAL PICNIC

The Sunbeams of the Clanton Baptist Church will have their annual picnic Thursday of next week. They will meet at the church at 11 o'clock and go in a group to the picnic grounds.

All Sunbeams are asked to attend the picnic.

Mt. Creek Post Office Now Third Class

The business at the Mt. Creek Post Office has increased for the past few years until on July 1st the office was advanced to a Third Class Post Office. Quite an increase was noted for the past year. The receipts (stamp sales) for the past year was more than $2,400.00. More than 2,500 patrons are served through this post office.

Several years ago the office was made a depository for Postal Savings. This business has increased until at the present time more than $8,000.00 are on deposit. This is the only Postal Savings depository between Clanton and Montgomery.

The new Postal Note System will be opened here as soon as the necessary forms are received from the printer. This Postal Note System will supplement the present Money Order System.

In recognition of his past record as Postmaster, the present Postmaster, Mr. George E. Culver, has been re-appointed as Third Class Postmaster.

"HORSE BITS"

The bleachers will be filled and there will be "standing room only" on August 30 at 7 o'clock at the High School Athletic Field, when Clanton stages its SECOND ANNUAL HORSE SHOW.

The 1944 show will outlast last year's show by far. The classes of this year's show are so arranged to take care of the fine horses of all the adjoining states. Much speed and pep will be added to the show in which fine harness, three and five-gaited horses and roaster classes will be enjoyed.

There will also be classes to take care of the famous Tennessee Walking Horses which are known as the "rocking chair" horses. There will be a class in which only Chilton County horses will be shown. The prize money for this class is as follows: 1st, $100.00; 2nd, $20.00; 3rd, $50.00, and 4th, $30.00. Much rivalry will be shown among the horse owners of this county.

The horsemen of this section are looking forward to the time when two or three days will be required to show all classes desired and stables will be available to accommodate the horses.

HILL GROCERY WILL BUY YOUR WASTE FATS

There is a place in Clanton that you can dispose of that waste fat you have been saving for these many weeks and do an important job for your country at the same time.

Mr. L. J. Stewart, manager at Hill Grocery Company, will buy all the waste fats that you bring him and he has made arrangements to get it to the proper government authorities so that it will go directly toward winning the war. The next time you start to throw that waste fat out in the garbage, remember, it makes explosives. In the hands of our fighting men that is what will win the war.

AVIATION COMMISSION PLANNING FOR 103 AIRFIELDS IN ALABAMA

Montgomery, Ala. — Blueprint for 103 airfields and landing strips in Alabama—with $12,855,000 to be spent to put the state's 68 existing fields in top condition and to construct 35 new ones — was outlined by E. W. Stanford, director of the Alabama Aviation Commission.

"Where now Alabama strawberries have to be picked green for shipping," Stanford pointed out in discussion of the commission's tentative plans, "Sun-ripened berries can be picked one day and by airborne freight be in the New York market next morning."

"Already the University of Detroit has revealed in a national survey that strawberries, for instance, can be moved by air for only 5 cents more per quart."

"And you know people will pay that extra for the fresh, sun-ripened product. Farmers should have 32,000,000 pounds of perishable commodities shipped from Alabama alone."

Aeronautics experts estimate, he said, that there will eventually be 350 private planes operated from Birmingham alone.

"The only solution," he said, "is to have several airfields around Birmingham."

The aviation commission's post-war plan includes 23 new Class 1 fields—10 Class 2—one Class 3 and one Class 4. Runways range from 1,800-2,500 feet for Class 1 to 5,500 or longer for Class 5.

The new fields would cost an estimated $6,110,000 and improvements on the old would run $6,745,000.

A budget will be submitted to the next Legislature as part of the commission's appeal for a constitutional amendment necessary before federal aid can be used in the state for construction.

New County Boards Of Trustees Appointed

At its regular monthly meeting for July the Chilton County Board of Education set the opening date for all county schools on September 5th. Teachers' Institute will be held at the Chilton County High School on Monday, September 4th, and all schools will open their doors the following morning, Tuesday, September 5.

A large number of vacancies in teaching personnel presents a real problem to school officials. It will apparently be necessary to employ quite a number of emergency teachers for Chilton County School rooms again this year. Last year about 35 emergency teachers had to be used and indications are that an equally large number of emergency teachers will have to be employed for the coming school year.

School buses are expected to operate under the same rationing regulations as last year. Bus repair parts can be obtained more easily than last year, but the tire situation is more critical than it has been in the past.

In compliance with the Alabama School Laws, the County Board of Education appointed new Boards of Trustees as follows:

Alabama Mills—Marvin Maddox, M. J. Bates, Lon L. Baker.
Baker Junior High—J. M. Moore, B. O. Johnson, J. Clint Billingsley.
Freeman—Joe Chapman, Napoleon Posey, Johnnie E. Poe.
Isabella—James W. Veazy, E. M. Hayes, E. S. Jones.

Jemison—A. C. Wells, Lonnie Cobb, W. R. Clements.

Lay Dam—Mrs. B. R. Wall, Mrs. S. E. Powers, Mrs. J. W. Wood.

Maplesville—Ribe Bearden, Dudley Nir, Bill Hampton.

Mineral Springs—Pryor Robinson, O. V. Cost, T. R. Gore.

Mt. Pleasant—J. C. McGee, C. O. Johnson, R. M. Foshee.

New Cedron—O. H. Lawrence, F. D. Williams, A. L. Baker.

Pinedale—Luther Headley, Enoch Noah, Harvey Easterling.

Refuge—A. H. Mims, P. N. Mims, Willie Mims.

Stanton—D. O. Burnett, William L. Ruddick, D. L. Langston.

Thomas Junior High—Ben Wells, W. C. Moore, Alvin Davis.

Thorsby—David Vines, John Childress, W. B. Higgins.

Union Grove—Roy Carden, Alton Davis, Harvie Barnett.

Verbena—G. H. Caffey, John H. Howard, Lonnie Messer.

Colored

Big Springs—Andy Wilson, Richard Polk, Leonard Spigner.

Chilton County Training — Ralph Oden, W. A. Dickerson, Guss Gordon.

Jemison Colored—Jack Sails, Green Reed, D. C. Cobb.

Maplesville Colored—P. W. Sullivan, P. C. Gayle, Richard Shepherd.

NEW CONVERT—Matthew Wilson, Stanley Davis, Henry Coleman.

Schools not listed above did not submit to the Board a list of six eligible persons for appointment.

REV. O. C. LLOYD ASSISTING IN REVIVAL

Rev. O. C. Lloyd left last Sunday afternoon to help in a revival on the Ramer Charge. He will return Friday or Saturday of this week and be in his pulpit next Sunday morning and evening. He was accompanied by Mrs. Lloyd.

Turks Swing Closer to Allies
As Nazi Lines Continue to Sag;
Plentiful Food Supplies Seen

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

EUROPE:

The War

Quivering under the assault of Allied forces, German lines buckled and gave all along the perimeter of Adolf Hitler's crumbling Fortress Europe.

In France, U. S. tanks and armored columns spearheaded a break from the narrow neck of the Cherbourg peninsula into the open country of Brittany to the south, chasing seven enemy divisions in their drive and bagging upwards of 30,000 prisoners. While the U. S. forces smashed into Brittany on the western end of the 100 mile French front, British troops took up the assault on the eastern flank and pounded forward. As the Allies fought into the open country, leaving the tall, thick hedgerows and peaked hills behind them, they were in position to bring the full force of their mobile, armored equipment into play and slug it out with the foe.

As German commentators emphasized the Russian numerical superiority on the eastern front since the Allied invasion of the west had necessitated the diversion of many divisions to that battle-sector, the Red avalanche rumbled further north and westward, threatening to cut off 300,000 Nazis in the Baltic states and engulfing the old Polish capital of Warsaw. Already half-way across prewar Poland, the Russian drive had come within 150 miles of Guam—Marine Captains Paul O'Neal, Brighton, Mass., and Milton F. Thompson, Upper Montclair, N. J., repaid Old Glory on recaptured Guam.

PACIFIC:
New Strike

With U. S. forces under Adm. Chester Nimitz fighting through Japan's inner ring of fortifications within 1500 miles of the enemy homeland, other American troops to the south under General MacArthur's command jumped to the far northwest corner of New Guinea to threaten the foe's first-line defenses guarding the rich treasures of the Indies region.

By hopping up the New Guinea coast to the northwest tip, the American troops by-passed the enemy garrison of 15,000 men at Mankawari, nursing General MacArthur's policy of landing on the flanks of Japanese strongholds and isolating their defenders from neighboring lines.

As General MacArthur's forces secured the whole northern coast of New Guinea and approached to within 600 miles of the Philippines, Admiral Nimitz's naval and ground units pressed their conquest of Guam to the north with over 6,000 of the enemy's defenders counted dead in the U. S. drive.

FOOD:

Even Balance

Because of larger supplies of fresh fruits and vegetables and cereals, food stocks during the approaching fall and winter will be relatively plentiful despite decreases of at least 3 per cent in meats, the U. S. department of agriculture reports. Despite large war requirements, the USDA said, food demands were being met by the record-breaking

Although production of farm machinery in June was the largest for the year ending in that month, the War Production board's overall program remained 11.3 per cent behind schedule, with manufacturers given another additional month to make up the deficit.

In addition, manufacturers have been given until September 30 to finish production of eight types of machinery lagging far behind schedule and including small combines, corn pickers, ensilage harvesters, peanut pickers, corn shellers and hay balers. farm production, with 1943 volume 38 per cent above the 1935-39 level, and 1944 output 5 per cent above last year.

Although meat production is expected to reach the all-time high of 25 billion pounds this year, the greater portion was marketed during the first half of the year.

U. S. SERVICES:
6,000,000 Overseas

Of almost 11,000,000 men in the army and navy services on June 1, nearly 6,000,000 were on overseas duty, the war and navy departments announced, with substantial increases predicted before the end of the year.

Of 7,700,000 in the army, more than 4,000,000 were overseas, with the total expected to peak at 8,000,000 by December 31. Of the navy's strength of 3,250,000, 1,568,000 were afloat or on foreign duty, with 900,000 men in transit or training for combat.

Indicative of the huge problem of supply connected with keeping the services in the field, army chiefs revealed that 63,000,000 tons of supplies have been shipped overseas since Pearl Harbor.

AGRICULTURE:

Potato Crop Suffers

With the prolonged drought affecting the potato crop in the northeast, and small improvement expected in certain sections even with rainfall, OPA granted growers an increase of 90 cents a bushel to bring returns from $3.30 to $3.65 per hundred pounds.

With the drought general, potato production in the southeast also was reported to have suffered, and crops in Ohio, western New York and Long Island were said to be off 40 to 50 per cent. Despite recent rains, damage reportedly spread to Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas.

Fewer Lambs

High swirling snowdrifts, shortage of sheep herders, wolves and wild dogs were among the factors contributing to a heavy toll of lambs and ewes on the western ranges during the last season with estimates that only 78 lambs of every 100 ewes survived.

Popular since sheep raisers began marketing the animals early instead of waiting for virtually two or three years as formerly when many people disliked the odor, lambs will be in smaller supply this year than last.

Despite the big death loss, however, western ranges were expected to market over half of the nation's lambs in the coming crop year.

Proudly They Serve

When Thelma A. Young joined the WAC in Philadelphia, Pa., she became the first member of the family to enter service. Five brothers have been killed in action in various theaters from Bataan to Anzio.

Serving overseas are Mrs. Kathleen Young Bridge, who fought in the Pacific in Great Britain; Mrs. Eileen Young Gallagher, British WRENS; Ensign Virginia Young Otto, nurse corps; Pharmacist's Mate Paul Young, who has a hospital ship in the Pacific; First Lt. Gordon Young, a marine in New Guinea; Pvt. Alden Young in Italy; William and Philip Young with a navy construction battalion in Iceland, and Machine's Mate Edwin Young in the Mediterranean.

In this country are First Lt. Anne Young Barnett, WAC; Lt. Frances Young Crawford, WAVE; Sgt. Nancy Young Cooper, marine, and Yeoman Diana Young Gentiana, SPAR.

DDT:

Medical Weapon

Deadly when applied against lice, flies and fleas, the new insecticide DDT will soon be brought into use against the malaria bearing mosquito plaguing U. S. fighting men overseas. Maj. Gen. Norman T. Kirk, the army's surgeon-general, announced.

Impressed by DDT's effectiveness in checking a typhus epidemic spread by body lice in Naples, Italy, last winter, the U. S. fight men overseas, when sprayed against insects, the army's present pre-occupation is in developing methods for applying the chemical against the malaria bearing mosquito.

DDT, shortened form for the jaw breaking term, dichloro-diphenyl-trichloroethane, one of whose constituents is chloral-hydrate.

SURPLUS GOODS:

Disposal Progresses

With estimates that from 50 to 100 billion dollars worth of surplus goods would be available after the war, government authorities already have developed plans for disposing of the material without throwing the whole economic machine out of gear.

With more than 400 million dollars' worth of surplus goods already disposed of, the Office of War Information said, plans call for selling surplus material through sealed bids and auctions at about 75 per cent of cost to discourage speculators, and making the goods available in small lots for little business men.

One billion dollars' worth of government-owned surplus also will be declared surplus after the war, it was said, and individual units will be offered separately if satisfactory bids for whole projects are not forthcoming.

ALIENS:

Number Decreases

Because of an increase in naturalization proceedings, a relatively high death rate resulting from their advanced age, and a sharp downturn in immigration, the number of aliens in the U. S. was reduced to 3,400,000 by June 30 of this year.

There were 5,000,000 aliens in the U. S. before the war began, and their number fell to 3,400,000 by June 30, the all-time peak for naturalization set during the year ending last June with 435,483 new citizens.

With only 30,000 immigrants admitted into the country during the 12 month period ending last June, one of the lowest in every 15 years.

ROCKETS

Revelation that the U. S. navy is employing rocket projectiles on a huge scale came when the naval ammunition procurement program would be doubled, with rockets accounting for most of the increase. Rocket projectiles of various sizes are being used to strafe enemy airfields, roads, and to attack both surface and submarine craft. Rocket firing planes are operating in the Pacific, and to some extent in Europe.

Paradoxically, on the eve of what may be the greatest land battle America has ever fought, this country is turning its eyes outward. The nervous Berlin radio has already announced that the war in Europe may be decided in three months. That statement lends color to the hints that General Rommel, the one Nazi commander who seems to see eye to eye with the Fuehrer and yet is apparently permitted to work out his strategy according to military science and not Hitlerian intuition, is going to fight a great loss or draw, along the outer edges of Normandy. What effect the events following the attempt on the life of Hitler will have on the internal situation in Germany—or what the incident indicates about Germany within, remains to be seen.

Whether the German collapse comes before the leaves turn, or after the snow flies, the next weeks will see a battle placed in the Pacific campaign. It is not beyond the realm of possibility that great can be wrung from Japan well within the current 12-month. The fall of Tojo and his cabinet indicates the gray with which the Japs are looking ahead.

First, let us examine the material upon which Japan counts to make up her snivels of strength. She has managed to keep her main battle fleet "in being" as the phrase goes. Like Germany, toward the end of the last war, in spite of heavy losses in auxiliary craft, she still has enough of her big war wagons to stage a "base raid" in the Pacific, or at least to attempt it.

Second: Japan still has a large, well-trained, well-equipped army. That army has never been subjected to the wear and tear of sustained fighting with planes. It falls out so that there are many retreats which we have read about when the Japs have staged what was advertised as a big offensive and which petered out with the flag of Nippon waving where it started from.

Third: Japan still has a large, well-trained, well-equipped army. That army has never been subjected to the wear and tear of sustained fighting with planes. It falls out so that there are many retreats which we have read about when the Japs have staged what was advertised as a big offensive and which petered out with the flag of Nippon waving where it started from. It is generally agreed among military men that, except perhaps in the recent abortive morale drive into India, and in Burma where General Stilwell and the Chinese armies are moving to a junction, the Japs have usually done just about what they expected to do and could have done more if they had made up their minds to it. For the most part they have not tried to win territory and hold it. They have tried to wear down the Chinese army, contribute to the impoverishment and the weakening of the Chinese government.

Fourth: Japan still has a large, well-trained, well-equipped army. That army has never been subjected to the wear and tear of sustained fighting with planes. It falls out so that there are many retreats which we have read about when the Japs have staged what was advertised as a big offensive and which petered out with the flag of Nippon waving where it started from. They have likewise reduced the number of actual and potential American airbases in China. They have made a possible land invasion of the Chinese coast hard to carry out. Such an invasion is considered inevitable and essential to Allied victory.

On the debit side, there are these items: First, is one word written in the boldest hand because of the thing it symbolizes—SAIPAN.

U. S. Planes Within Easy
Bombing Range of Japan

The capture of this island base within easy bombing range of Japan means many things. It tends to neutralize what heretofore has been Japan's advantage in destroying American bases in China. It brings the war figuratively, as well as literally, close to Japan. It registers the success of a strategy which has smashed Japan's outer defenses, her great Pacific island empire. It proves that "island-hopping" is unnecessary. This means that the remaining Japanese strongholds such as Truk, and other outposts do not have to be knocked off one by one, they can be by-passed and starved out, if necessary.

Saipan in American hands means that the B-29's which have already sounded their warning to the Jap home folk will soon be in active operation on a scale hitherto unapproached.

Germany, Japan, has at this writing a powerful land army.

But Japan, like Germany, has a vanishing air force. Note the corollary and see how it applies to Japan. The Allied air force crippled the German air force. And as Nazi fighter-defense dwindled, so the weight of sheer numbers reduced the effectiveness of German anti-aircraft defense and offense, due to the bombing of her plane factories and plane-part factories and to the destruction of her pilots. Germany's next greatest weakness is lack of gas and oil. This has been caused by the destruction (by the Allied air force again) of oil wells, gasoline refineries and synthetic oil plants.

Proofs of the effects of this bombing are not limited to photographs showing the effect of Allied air raids on ball bearings, on the Floesti oil wells, on the synthetic oil plants and the refineries. It is shown in the German tanks and other war vehicles in perfect condition abandoned and captured because they ran out of fuel.

Raiders, really shake-down cruises of the giant B-29s directed against Japanese industrial plants, have just begun.

Japan is already suffering from shortages of essential materials. Her great stolen storehouses of the Philippines and the Dutch Indies are a long way from home. The transportation problem is a terrible one—Japanese shipping has been subjected to terrific losses by our submarines and planes.

Distances Shrink in Far Pacific Warfare

Is Japan in any better position to resist air attack than Germany?

The answer seems to be "no." Her greatest defense is distance, and distances in the Pacific theater have shrunk at a speed far greater than most people dreamed was possible.

Japan's next defense—fighter planes—has suffered in greater proportion than was expected. The quality, as well as the quantity of fighter planes has fallen off so that Japan has become stingy in her use of fighters as the Germans. The quality of her pilots has greatly deteriorated. And this point blends into another—Japan simply has not the strategic know-how of aviation. When she does send her bombers and fighters out in great numbers, they are no match for Allied power, massed planes.

There is no question that as Japan's resistance weakens the Allied striking power is increased. It is impossible to mention details, of course, for security reasons. But it is wise to assemble known facts and figures concerning the type of material manufactured and the disposition of forces which, taken together, would indicate clearly how the power of Japan of Allied might is being distributed.

We can quote the statement of Prime Minister Curtin of Australia, for instance, who says that "this year" British forces in great numbers will be transferred to the Pacific theater.

Finally, there is a third factor which seems to be a hastening of the day when it is difficult to speak of "morale" in connection with Japan since the people are told how and what to think. But the tone of the official utterances has taken on a decidedly gloomy note. Even as to the shift in command the fall of the Tojo cabinet—which might have been hailed with a cheerful fanfare, the phrases were grave and grim.

It is also reported, from sources in touch with Japan's inner politics, that the Jap militarists are waiting hopefully to see if the Allies grant enough leniency in their terms to Germany to justify surrender on their part. Although it is emphatically denied in Tokyo it is still believed here that the Japanese representative to the Holy See laid a tentative peace offer before the "Pope."

Briefly, then, as the conservative look at the picture rapidly forming in the Pacific, they see several factors which heretofore worked toward a long drawn out struggle in the Pacific, they see the other altered. First, the theory that the Allies must fight their way to victory, sea-mile by sea-mile, island by island, has been completely exploded. Second, Japan's air force has been measurably defeated. Third, the strategy of a blow at the heart of the empire rather than at its periphery is now considered a reasonable certainty.

BRIEFS... by Baukhage

The Tokyo radio makes a point of accenting the friendliness of Japan's relations with Germany but Japanese films make it clear that the Axis pact can be carried only so far, and no farther.

Seventy-five American Red Cross Home Service scholarships in accredited schools of social work now are available.

Unlike American movie heroes, the Japanese film Japuro usually doesn't win the heroine in such a way as to live happily ever after. Japanese movies have a tendency to end on an unhappy note of sorrow or frustration with the hero and heroine being torn apart by an incident that exalts family duty and sacrifice above their own personal desire.

GOALS MY CO-PILOT

Col. Robert L. Scott

WNU RELEASE

The story thus far: In 1920 young Robert Scott set out to find a canoe from the side wall of a Holy Rollers' tent in Marion, Ga., and decided to use it for the wings of a glider. He built the glider from a roof and crashed 67 feet to the ground. He fell into a Cherokee rose bush, which probably saved his life. He was then in the building school model planes and wins a Boy Scout aviation merit badge. At an auction sale he buys his first plane for $75. He plans to go to West Point but meets with many difficulties. He goes to Ft. McPherson and enlists in the regular army as a private. Three months later he begins his training in the Fourth Corps Area, West Point prep school.

CHAPTER II

Scott put in six months of study here, but there were some eight hundred of us soldiers in the competition for about fourteen vacancies. As luck would have it that to eight. Once again West Point seemed a long way off. I got down to business then; I was called from my room and almost memorized the lessons, especially every cut West Point examination as far back as 1920. The study bore fruit. I kept at the top of the class and in March took the dreaded examination.

One day, some weeks after the annual competition for entrance from the Regular Army, I was walking guard duty. I was called from my room. Number one, around the guard-house; I had just heard the familiar call, "Number One—two prisoners," and had replied, "Turn me in." The General had sent for me. As I stood before him, my heart felt as though it would beat out through my blouse. He smiled and spoke.

"Son, you have won in the West Point competitive examination and I want to see you in uniform. You are on the same road I started out on a long time ago. It's the greatest school in the world—but learn some common sense too. I'm sending you on furlough until you report for duty at the Military Academy. Congratulations."

The world was never so sweet. I gained two inches in the chest that day.

Thus, in July of 1928, I walked through the salty port with my suitcase and began the routine that is familiar to nearly everyone. I had heard of the strict discipline of West Point and the difficulty of studies for one handicapped by a Southern accent. My worst fear was that I would make a hate books again, but I resolved that after the work I had gone to I most certainly would not be kicked out or "found," as we say in Kaydet slang. I remember my father's ambition for me. He was of course proud of my appointment, and used to wonder why I didn't rank about number one in my class. During my Plebe year, which was my first year at West Point, I learned the first year's work at the prep school, he used to write and tell me that while it wasn't too disgraceful to be number fifty in a class of over three hundred, he thought I should be a better student. Little more and get up into the first twenty. Well, as the first year went by and I got into the more difficult studies, I went lower and lower in the class, and finally to the bottom of the class, number one hundred and twenty. During the last year, when I was very far down, Daddy would write:

"You just stay there, Son, just stay there."

I still heard the planes flying over and try as I would, I could concentrate on nothing but the Air Corps. In 1930 I wrote an essay on flying, and it most got me kicked out of the Military Academy. You have to write a monograph on the profession employed in one of the major battles of the world. I had always liked military history and had been in the first section of that subject. At the Academy, each student is in a section commensurate with his scholastic standing. My presence in that group permitted me to choose my battle. I had had a grandfather killed at Bull Run, and therefore selected the first battle of Manassas.

There was, as usual, many a slip. Before I was able to write the story we were permitted to travel to the West Coast to play Stanford in football. Coming back under the care of the doctor, I did not bother to open my books, believing that even West Point would not expect a student to recite within one hour of his return from California. But I neglected about the rigidity of the Academy. Our train arrived across the Hudson at Garrison at 6:55, and we marched into History at 7:55. I was immediately assigned to recite in the battle of Valley. I did not know that it was the day of the battle, for I knew nothing concerning it. To say that and get a zero, however, would be fatal and in fact could mean disciplinary action. I therefore resorted to the time-worn West Point tactics of evasion—known as "bugling."

Going to the blackboard with an air of confidence, I stood at attention with pointer in hand and began, "Sir, my duty for today is to explain the battle of Valley. Napoleon declares after this engagement that the forces of an army must be concentrated for battle . . ."

At that instant the professor stood up and said: "You would save five seconds for me to begin the recitation correctly. I tried again and was ordered to sit down."

The zero I received dropped me from the first section to the last. Furthermore, I found immediately that in this last section the subjects for monographs were not selected by the cadet, but were assigned. The new instructor gave me the battle of Sandepu—some insignificant engagement in an insignificant war. I looked for days in the library for data on the battle, and finally found about one paragraph devoted to it in the Encyclopaedia Britannica. It was Sandepu, Haikoutai, or Yen Kai-Wan, fought during the Russo-Japanese War of 1904-05.

A person with my imagination and initiative, I reasoned, would simply waste his talents on such a small battle. I therefore decided to create a fictitious battle. This extra work mattered not to me. I had nothing but time, having been placed in confinement for getting the zero in history. I worked out an elaborate plan for the battle and introduced the subject in a manner that I knew would attract attention to even a last-section monograph. I dedicated the work of art to the officer in charge of Field Artillery, Lieut. Pete Nuby—a contraband nickname of a very tough officer. I illustrated the monograph with pictures of New York street cleaners and wrote under them that they were Japanese soldiers waiting to go over the top at the River Ho in 1905. Lastly I tied the book in red ribbon at least six inches wide, completed with a how larger than the monograph. I wrote myself the first paragraph by saying that I had dreamed I had observed the battle, but had been awakened by reveille, which, as Napoleon declared at the battle of Maloyroslavitz, is a hideous noise in the middle of the night. All of which went to prove, I contended, that history could be made in sleep, and it therefore did not require an "engineer" to be a historian.

For the story of Sandepu, I imagined the battle to have taken place in the city of Cherboung. I was assigned to inspect the Army's first aircraft. This was a free balloon—the latest invention of 1905. Becoming weary, I went to sleep in the basket of the balloon. But a storm must have blown the craft from its moorings, for when I looked down I was being blown to the East across the Atlantic. For days we drifted over ocean and continents, until, coming close to the hilly ground, I used the air-bus to get down. They were composed of one mile of government red-tape and the anchor worn by the captain of the "goat" team of 1904. (This was readily in the hands of the professors for the traditional football game of the year is one played between the first thirteen in the Second Class, called the "engineers," and the last thirty men, known as the "goats." I was in the last thirty. I had been Goat Captain, and had worn the anchor sewn on my football jersey.) These improvised airbuses worked, and the anchor caught on a hill which identified from maps as the hill of Chere Honat—the theater of the Russo-Japanese War. From this vantage point, swinging in the balloon, I watched the two armies in battle. Merely rank facititiousness, I admit, even then I was completely over my mind.

I was reported by submitting a facetious monograph in military art and for casting reflections on the Engineering Department.

In the summer of 1932, after being graduated and commissioned a second Lieutenant of Infantry, I went to the United States Military Academy at West Point. I bought a motorcycle and set out to ride to Constantinople. The one-cylinder Soyer took me down through Paris, then Southeast into Switzerland, and over the Swiss Alps to Italy. I spent some time in Venice, then I went up through the dust into Jugoslavia.

One day I had ridden some four hundred miles into the town of Novo Mesto. Tired, and dirty from the heavy dust of the roads, I went to the best-looking of the hotels, and after some delay in making myself understood among Serbians and Croats, I ordered beefsteak. During the explanation I gathered the man who lived there in the town spoke English. This of course was pleasant news, for I was, after all, a lonely tourist in a very foreign land. They now sent a small boy to bring back this connecting link between us. I waited and waited, while they all pointed and jabbered about me. Finally the steak came, and got cold while my mouth watered, but I felt I had to wait and eat the American if he would eat with me. At last there was a commotion at the entrance, and I turned anxiously to see my American friend.

Through the door waddled a dark, dirty little man—evidently a former fruit-vendor in New York. He saw me, stopped his Croatian talk, threw out his arms, and cried, "Son of a bitch! Son of a bitch!" To my discomfiture, that was the only English he seemed to know. But I calmed him and asked him to let me talk, and in the end I guess his compatriots really thought their friend spoke American anyway. I could hear them calling me Americans.

I continued on, keeping clear of the subject of the war. Finally, after a forty-five-day trip from Cherboung, I rode into Constantinople. Here I came close to getting in a real jam. Back through my life I had concentrated on scouting, archery, and flying, and I had no idea of the subject of crossing the street to keep from having to talk to them. But that real bashfulness was far behind me. Now I had about gone to the extreme. I had found relatives in Paris, Venice, and other cities, and had a fine time.

Before reaching Turkey, I had been warned by the head of the American Express in Sofia that I should be very careful in Istanbul and should avoid the Danube. I had to the Americanized Turks in and around the Pera part of the city. They told me above all to stay clear of Galata—the old Greek and Turkish section of the city. I had no real acquaintance was from Galata, and that night I headed for the city of the veiled women.

Well, even with right ideas the men in that quarter had the wrong idea. I saw the danger just in time, and even then I had to jump through a window—glass and all—into an alley. I can hear the yells even these years afterwards as I ran through Galata back to Pera for my motorcycle. Stopping at a hotel just long enough to check out, I was off in more dust for Scutari and East in Asia to Ankara.

So raising the veil of a Moslem female shortened my stay in Constantinople in my return to the West from Ankara. I found a way to dodge the city on the Hellespont by getting a Black Sea steamer and crossing North of Istanbul to land at Varna in Bulgaria. From there I crossed the Danube to Rostchuk and went to Bucharest.

My spirits had risen a little after missing the Turkish knives in Galata, but here I found a cablegram awaiting me. The Comptroller General had ruled that the Economic Act of June, 1932, affected all officers on leave. He had decided that I, like many others, was on leave without pay. My orders were to report to the nearest American Embassy in the city. I remember that they were signed by McColl. I sent my champagne back and ordered beer, for the money for this trip had been borrowed against my three months' leave pay. Here I was, thousands of miles from home and Randolph Field, where my flying training would start. If I reported to some ground officer in Europe, I would probably never get to fly.

Anyway, just to make sure, I wrote a motorcycle that night and headed for Texas by way of Budapest—Linz—Bingen-on-the-Rhine—and Paris. I sold the motorcycle in Cherboung and boarded the Bremen for a quick trip home. I had had the right idea. I was expecting to get during leave, and I'd be paying the bank for a long time. But I resolved right then and there that I would pay that money back from the Air Corps at Randolph Field and not from the Bremen in an Embassy.

And so I came at last to the Air Corps Training Center at Randolph Field, Texas.

It's hard to describe my feelings as I walked into the North gate of that field and down the nearly million-foot road to the Beeler Officers' Quarters. I was expecting to find, where I was to report, it seemed that all my life I had waited for this moment. Now at last the great day was at hand when I would begin my government flying training. I thought about the blue Texas sky I could see the roaring airplanes in their Army colors. As my feet carried me into the field I could hear the rhythm of the fields seeming to say in cadence, "This is it! This is what I've waited for all the days of my life!"

In October, 1932, I was assigned to Lieut. Ted Landon for primary flying training. I imagine this assignment was about as momentous for him as it was for me—for after all I must have been quite a problem, with all I thought I knew about flying and the eagerness with which I approached military aviation.

Disaster Faces Farmers If Boom in Land Values Continues to Skyrocket

By BARROW LYONS

WNU Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.—

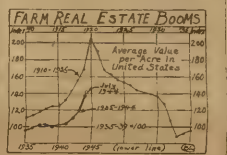

One glance at the current USDA index of farm real estate values indicates that a boom in land values is well started, which, if not checked by the most vigorous legislation, is likely to develop into a condition that will have a disastrous effect upon farming for many years to come.

The average value of farm land per acre for the nation as a whole has been rising at the rate of about 1 per cent a month since the January of 1943. At the moment, the movement has slowed down slightly—but this is a seasonal condition, and unless inflationary forces are checked, acceleration can be expected in the fall and winter, when farmers generally do most of their land purchasing. They have time to look around and bargain then.

Only the very young farmers of today cannot remember what took place in the farm land boom of the late war, and the two years that followed that war. It took five years then for the national index of land values to climb from a level of 124 in 1915 (the average for 1909-1914) to 190 in 1920. Those figures are March 1 averages for the nation in the years mentioned. That was a climb of 65 per cent.

Started in 1942

This time the inflationary movement did not start until 1942. It began from a somewhat lower level of values, as the chart accompanying this article shows, and for the first two years the rise followed closely the pattern of 1916 and 1917. But beginning last winter, the rise in the third year of increase has been far more rapid than in the third year of the previous boom. In the first three years of the World War I boom the rise was 26 per cent. In the first three years of the present boom the rise has been 34 per cent.

If the upward climb continues until next March at the same rate, the rise for the first four years of the present movement will be more than 50 per cent, compared with 35 per cent in the first four years of the previous boom. That means that inflation of farm land values is sneaking up on us much faster than last time, and threatens to get very much further, for the war is still in progress, inflationary forces are much greater than in 1916-1917, and we already are beginning to relax price rise restraints.

Let me quote from the bulletin on the subject issued by the USDA bureau of agricultural economics in March, this year. It says:

"In the principal agricultural areas the value-increasing forces are increasing in strength, while the value-curbing influences are weakening. The predominant forces operating in the farm real estate market are the forces of high farm commodity prices, record farm income levels and growing accumulations of funds available for land purchase."

The analysis points out that demand deposits of country banks in 20 leading agricultural states increased 30 per cent during 1943, and by January, 1944, had trebled from 1939. This condition continues to grow, as farm income from marketable crops compares well with the all-time record of the last year. There is a bumper wheat crop at excellent prices, and other crops promise high cash yields.

Increase in Transfers

The most alarming feature of this movement is the increase in the number of transfers for speculative purposes. Reselling after only short periods of ownership is increasing, especially in the Pacific and North Central regions. In the latter part of last year, almost three-fourths of the tracts resold were held for less than a year, and over two-fifths for less than six months.

Despite earnest pleas made to halt this boom through purchase of war bonds, the bill introduced by Sen. Guy M. Gillette of Iowa, which would impose a 90 per cent tax on profits made from the sale of farm land held less than two years.

Some responsible officials fear that if the full vigor of the present boom is publicized, it will lead to speculation, with resulting stimulation of boom and greater disaster when values collapse.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

THE PRIEST IN THE LIFE OF ISRAEL

LESSON TEXT—1 Samuel 2:27-30, 35; 4:12-18.

GOLDEN TEXT—For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God.—Hebrews 5:1.

Failure to observe God's law inevitably brings disaster. That is true in the family, and in the nation. It follows even though the man who sins is in a high and favored position in God's service.

Our lesson which brings before us the chief of the priest in Israel also reminds us of the sacred relationship of father and son. These are important matters inviting our careful study.

I. A Holy Calling: (2:27, 28). Eli was the chief of the priest in Israel, an office ordained of God, and by Him established in the household of Aaron. The priest was to stand between God and man, there to seek forgiveness for the sins of the people and His grace and mercy upon them. He was to teach them the law of God and to seek for them divine guidance. He was subject to special laws, and had great privileges.

Such a man must not only be holy himself, but unusually diligent about properly rearing his sons who would follow him in this office, which was by God's ordinance an hereditary one. He was to be both a good minister and a good father. Eli was the former, but he failed as a father.

In the New Testament, Christ becomes our High Priest (Heb. 7:26; 9:11), and those who follow Him are to be to Him—the "one Mediator between God and Man" (1 Tim. 2:5; Heb. 9:15). In this new covenant the minister has a high and noble calling, but it also is clear that all believers have the liberty to come boldly to the throne of grace (Heb. 4:16); hence they too are called "a holy priesthood" (1 Pet. 2:9).

II. A High Responsibility: (2:29, 30, 35). As already suggested, Eli was evidently a man of personal piety and integrity in office. We honor him for that, but we regret his failure to properly rear his sons who were to succeed him.

It is not enough to meet one phase of our responsibility before God and men, because of our faithfulness there to seek justly weakness elsewhere. One sometimes hears the expression, "But he is such a good man," as an excuse for failure, but it just will not do.

Eli did not share with his boys, but he waited until it was too late or did it in such a way and at such a time as to be ineffective. His failure at this point is declared (v. 29) to be placing of his sons above God in his thinking.

What a solemn warning to indulgent parents! "Not to rule and restrain our children, to give them their own way, is to honor them more than God. Ere we think it, weakness becomes wickedness in ourselves and in our children too." God has "made every parent . . . a king in his home, that he may . . . command his children in the way of the Lord" (Andrew Murray).

God will not permit such sin and failure to pass unnoticed. He will set aside those who fail Him (v. 30) and bring them into judgment. He has others who will be willing to serve Him (v. 35). Evidently young Samuel was one in the mind here.

It is both significant and encouraging to note that in the midst of the weakness and immoral surroundings created by Eli's sons, God had the tender vine of His own planting—the life of the boy Samuel, growing up in the temple. He was already hearing God's voice and learning to do the call.

III. A Heavy Judgment: (4:12-18). The Israelites went out to battle against the Philistines. Meeting defeat, they thought to gain victory by bringing the ark of the covenant into the battle. But they were to appear as "priests" with the ark but the wicked sons of Eli.

Swift and awful was the judgment of God. Not only was there defeat, but the ark was lost to the heathen Philistines, and when Eli and his sons were killed, when Eli heard the news of what had taken place, he too fell and died. Here was the tragic end of a life that had begun with promise, and all because of weakness, failure and sin.

There is a pointed lesson here for us. The people of Israel depended on the ark itself, an outward symbol of godliness, when there was no spiritual life in the hearts and they were to appear as "priests" with the ark. We will see that we go through the motions of religious exercises, talk easily of prayer, appoint men who please our itching ears (II Tim. 4:3) to preach to us, and battle, and on our knees, worldly, indifferent, we suppose that our formal religion will save us? Paul tells us in II Timothy 3:1-5 that "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof" is a sign of the "last days," of "perilous times" which have come upon us. May God save us!

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Mrs. Belle Wade is a very sweet lady. She visits us here each week and helps with our locals and personals. We enjoy her visit very much and look forward to it. "Ma" Wade is sincere in her convictions and if you think she minds telling you what she thinks—then you don't know Mrs. Wade.

Gene Gore dropped in to tell us that he knew we didn't have the nerve to run our picture on the front page for two weeks in succession. We will tell you about that. Every time a party would come in to buy a paper and we forgot to turn it face down on the counter they would yell "E-ee-k" and rush out the door and down the street. We lost more sales that way.

A dirty trick was played on Mrs. R. C. Williams and the News last week. A middle-aged couple came into the office late one afternoon last week and told us that they were visiting Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Williams and that she was entertaining at a Bridge one afternoon and gave the time and all the details, etc., etc. Anyway the whole thing was a falsehood and a dirty trick. According to Myra she hadn't seen the parties named in more than a year and certainly hadn't done any entertaining in a long time because of her health. It seems that the whole thing was a practical joke which did not turn out very funny. We are willing at all times to print the "doings" around the county, but when someone wants to use us to play dirty tricks on others it gets our dander up.

You know, just because two fellows are in the same business is no reason in the world why they should be at each other's throats. The printing business is no exception. Mr. Wyatt at The Union-Banner is a good friend of ours and we have enjoyed six years of business association which have been most pleasant in every way. It has been the custom at both papers if one could be of service to the other they were ready at all times. This brings us to our story. Last week end we were having trouble with our linotype machine and as usual when we get bad stuck we call in Gene Wyatt. While he was working there at the machine a tall farmer came into the back office, stood and looked at us both for a few minutes and said, "I swear, some competitors." Then nothing was said for several more minutes and the tall stranger repeated, "I swear, some competitors." After which he turned and strode out of the office.

Let's We Forget

(Mrs. Lila W. Sheppard, Verbena, Ala., in Birmingham News)

I have just heard over the radio that Dewey and Bricker were of their way to a whirlwind canvass, and a sweeping victory for their election in November. I do not doubt the whirl, and I am sure of the wind, but I cannot conceive a promise they could offer, that would make the first World War Veterans forget the reception they met with after they had fought, bled and died to keep this a free country in which to live. It ripples deep in the minds of their wives and children.

For the benefit of those who have grown up since that time and do not know, I will touch on the subject. No need to go into all the suffering they underwent before they headed in a body to Washington, poorly clad, hungry, footsore, maimed and blind. They went to plead with their President for work of any kind. They did not want to stand in a bread line. They wanted their jobs back.

But this is what they got: The militia turned on them in full. At the time it nearly killed me, and did I hug close to my heart that it was not a Democrat, but a Republican, who turned the militia on their own soldiers. The Republicans may, and I guess they will, outlive the Teapot Dome oil scandal, but they can never wipe their slate clean of what they did to Uncle Sam's boys.

Nothing but a Republican could muster sufficient courage to canvass the same country in which these boys live and ask them to put the Republicans back in power.

Pays Debts First

We have read with interest how money is piled up at Montgomery from the many tax sources in Alabama today—and how it seems to be worrying some of the officials that such is the case and how they seem to be looking for some avenue in which to spend it.

Business experience would make us conclude now is the time to begin paying off indebtedness. We venture to say there are some outstanding bonds against the state that are nearly as old as Alabama.

Why not let's pay some on debts and clean the slate, get a new start and save the taxpayers this great interest load they are now paying?

Business is business, no matter what the circumstances may be. Talk about all these no-account buildings here and there over the state, including some schools such as our larger institutions. They've stood the test of several years and are good yet. We'd better look to a bigger future and less tax load. That is the safest way to prevent a depression after the war.

The move is already under way to induce the Legislature to accept a $16,000,000 building program as a means to spend some of the surplus money now on hand at the capital.

Let's wait a while and let the debts be paid first. There's no sense like common sense, even when you've got too much money.—Franklin County Times (Russellville).

Now is the time for the citizens of this county to open their eyes to the fact that air transportation, both freight and passenger, is going to be the thing after the war.

Within ten years immediately after this war aviation will see its fastest growth. The boys who are coming back are air-minded and the old ways will be too slow. Clanton to keep abreast of the times must realize now that she must have a modern airport. The airport of the future will be to a town or city, what the depot and bus terminals are today. Business districts will grow toward the airport. The center of all activity pertaining to travel and shipping will be around the airport.

Why wait until a more wide awake city takes advantage of our shortsightedness? Why not start now and be ready when the time comes to take advantages of every opportunity?

NEW CEDRON NEWS

Our Sunday School attendance was very good Sunday, but there is still room for improvement. We are glad to have you. Come and the Lord will reward you.

Our revival was held last week. Bro. Fred Lowery of Montevallo assisted the pastor, Rev. J. I. Bice. Those who heard the soul-stirring messages were greatly revived in spirit. Our prayers go with these two great men of God wherever they may be.

A nice collection was taken Sunday with which to purchase new song books.

The following committee was appointed Sunday to help raise funds to rebuild the church:

Mrs. J. D. Williams, Clanton Route 3; Miss Audrey Johnson, Billingsley Route 1; Mrs. W. C. Hickerson, Billingsley Route 1.

Come on, folks, let's get our shoulder to the wheel and contribute to this worthy cause, especially all members of the church. A list of those who have donated money and the amount will be published monthly.

Don't forget Sunday School next Sunday promptly at 10 o'clock — old time.

MT. NEBO NEWS

A large group of friends and relatives gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Patterson Sunday to celebrate the 88th birthday of Mr. P. A. Vance.

Miss Martha McKee is visiting Misses Marjorie and Carolyn Street of Gadsden for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Burnice Culp from Selma visited his parents over the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. John Rain and daughter, Rose Marie, from Pensacola, Fla., were the week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Williams.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Culp and children from Panama City, Fla., are visiting the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John M. Culp.

FSA BOON TO VETS

UNABLE TO OBTAIN CREDIT ELSEWHERE

Marvin Durbin, County Supervisor of Chilton County, said recently that 48 veterans of World War II had applied for assistance of the Farm Security Administration in Alabama to aid them in getting a new start in farming or in the purchase of a family-type farm of their own.

Of this number, 20 had been approved by the local county committees for enrollment in the rehabilitation program, and three have purchased farms under terms of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. In some instances applications were filed too late to enable them to make a crop this year.

Within the limit of funds available the rehabilitation program is open to veterans who are unable to obtain credit elsewhere to enable them to farm.

All veterans with a farm background are eligible for consideration by the County FSA Committee for the purchase of family-type farms of their own under terms of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act.

Clothes baskets should be emptied, dried and aired each week, and scrubbed and sunned occasionally when weather permits.

How To Handle Hay For Highest Feed Value

The greatest possible amount of feed value should be obtained from hay produced this year because it is so scarce, County Agent, M. R. Glasscock, said this week, pointing out that this can only be done with high quality hay.

High quality hay is green in color and the stems are fine and not woody, he said. The leaves, which contain a good portion of the feed value, are on the plants and there is little foreign matter such as weeds or dead stems of plants other than the hay. It has a characteristic hay odor.

"To make good hay, the right kind of crops must be used," Mr. Glasscock asserted. "In Chilton County the leading hay crops are lespedeza, cowpeas, soybeans, kudzu, and sericea lespedeza. In the peanut area, peanut hay is of major importance."

To make good hay the plants must be cut at the right time, the Extension Agent declared. Lespedeza is ready to cut at blooming time, cowpeas and soybeans when pods begin to fill, kudzu when a good growth has been obtained, sericea lespedeza when 12 to 15 inches tall and millet and sorghum when heads have formed. The best peanut hay is made when crops are just ready to dig for nuts.

"To make good hay, the crop must be cured properly," Mr. Glasscock continued. "With the exception of crops with heavy thick stems, hay should be racked into windrows as soon as well wilted and curing should be finished in windrows or on hay racks. Curing on hay racks is surer because of danger of rains. Thick-stemmed crops should remain in the swath longer, but not so long that dews and the sunlight will bleach the green

HAND FAMILY REUNION

The twentieth annual reunion of the Hand family will be held at Poplar Springs Church the second Sunday in August—the 13th.

All the relatives will meet at 10:00 o'clock for fellowship together in song and prayer.

11:00—Sermon by a brother—J. L. Hand.

12:00—Lunch and fellowship together.

1:30—Song service.

2:00—Sermon by Clark Burkhalter.

All friends and singers have a special invitation to come and be with us in the afternoon.—Arrange Robinson, Sec.

color and the leaves are lost in raking. Leaf loss can be reduced by raking peanuts when damp."

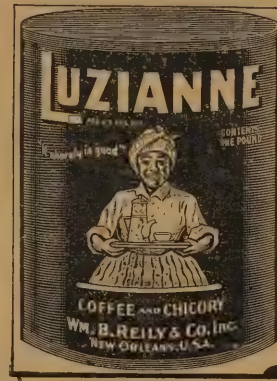

GOOD CARE OF COTTON URGED

More cotton of all the higher grades is needed in the War effort, according to M. R. Glasscock, County Agent, and ginners and farmers in Chilton County must work together if higher grades are produced. Farmers are urged to pick cotton as dry as possible, to keep the trash out, to pick before the weather damages the cotton, and to keep good and bad cotton separate.

Ginners can protect the grade of cotton by ginning with loose seed rolls, by keeping gin saws in good condition, by operating at speeds 600 to 700 revolutions a minute, giving brushes and air-blast system close attention, by using cleaning and extracting machinery where needed.

What is ALABAMA POWER COMPANY Doing About it?

You read much in the newspapers about the use to which war plants will be put after the war. Many of them, of course, will go back to making their regular peacetime products. Others will close down—leaving buildings and men idle unless other jobs can be found for them.

For twenty years Alabama Power Company has been concerned with developing jobs for Alabama people. Not by running an employment agency. Not by hiring more people than we need. The way we've done it is through our Industrial Development Department. This department, working with Chambers of Commerce and other groups of progress-minded people, presents to industry what might at some future date consider the establishment of a new plant, facts regarding the availability of employees, agricultural products and other raw materials, transportation, climate, sales possibilities—anything that may be a factor in the operation of the new plant. When interest is shown, it arranges for a visit of representatives of the prospective new industry to the location under consideration. Buildings which might be suitable are looked over, or if a new building is to be built, suitable sites are discussed.

The success of the effort of this company, in cooperation with other groups and agencies, in developing jobs is evident from the record. From 1923 to the time of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, 300 industries manufacturing 121 commodities, and with a total investment of $409,000,000 employed 69,500 persons and had an annual payroll of about $1,200,000.

Although the war has greatly curtailed the work of our Industrial Development Department, contacts made before the war have been maintained. When the war reaches that point when civilian manufacturing may be expanded, the Industrial Development Department will go into high gear to help about the establishment of new industries in Alabama, assist in the expansion of those already here. Broader employment opportunity is the goal we know that we can achieve only as Alabama progresses.

AT PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The regular services in this church for the second Sabbath in August will be held on the Sabbath at 11:00 a.m. and 8:30 p.m. The morning theme will be—"The Ax That Did Swim." The evening theme will be—Evangelistic. The Sabbath School will be at 10:00 a.m., Mr. Robert Oglesby, Superintendent.

The pastor has just returned from Montreal, where he spent two weeks very pleasantly and profitably, also a very restful period, for which I am deeply grateful to the church permitting me to be absent on the 5th Sabbath in July.

The pastor is hopeful that there will be a full attendance of all the Presbyterians at these services, and all who will worship with us.

The pastor expects to be in Clanton, and also his wife, Friday afternoon. He will be glad to know of any who should be visited while he is in Clanton.

Miss Aldene Johnson of Jemison Route 2 and John Dudley Williamson of Clanton Route 5 were married August 7th, at the home of Judge T. W. Bryan.

Rev. T. M. Duncan will preach at the new church at Bro. Harmon Culp's Sunday afternoon, August 13, at 2 o'clock. Everybody is invited to be there and hear the message.—Reporter.

Larger quantities of some chemical nitrogen materials available this year has resulted in WFA's authorization of the use of as much straight chemical nitrogen materials per acre as State Agricultural Experiment Stations in states east of the Rocky Mountains recommend for the area and crop. The increased use of nitrogen should help farmers to meet food crop goals this year.

NEW COUNTY CANNING PLANT

This Spring it was decided that Chilton County would have a twelve months Vocational Home Economics Program. Also the County Board of Education in collaboration with the State Department of Education and the Federal Government, began work on plans for a school community canner. This plant is nearing completion and is located on the Chilton County High School grounds.

Because of the above two decisions a "Foods Preservation" program was launched in the territory served by the County High School of Clanton. This program was carried on by class organization under the guidance of Mrs. Edna G. Kinney, Vocational Home Economics teacher. Classes were held weekly from the following communities: (1) Concord, (2) Mt. Pleasant, (3) Lomax, (4) Vermont, (5) Clanton. There was an enrollment of about sixty ladies and the attendance was splendid, and the work above the average.

Meetings were held in the homes and many came to the Home Economics Building for lessons on sulphuring and blanching of fruits and vegetables for dehydration in the electric dehydrators.

All types or kinds of steam pressure canners were used. The lessons consisted of food preservation by means of:

- Canning—
 - Non acid foods.
 - Acid foods.
 - Dehydrating fruits and vegetables.

JOSEPH CORNELIUS GLENN

Joseph Cornelius (Ben) Glenn, age 63, died in a Mobile hospital August 6th. Funeral services were held Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock, conducted by Rev. Raines.

Pallbearers were: Fred, Ernest Charles Barnett, Arthur Headley, J. W. Peady and Tony Connell.

He is survived by his wife, Ella Barnett Glenn; three daughters—Mrs. Anna Vines, Okla., Fla., Mrs. Lena Dier of Panama City, Fla.; one son, Leslie, of Mobile; two brothers, M. V. Glenn of Clanton, Adam Glenn of Titus; three sisters—Mrs. J. S. Hardy of Clanton, Mrs. Nellie Barron of Mt. Creek and Mrs. George Hardy of Sylacauga. Also several grandchildren.

BRIEF FARM NEWS

The War Food Administration has announced a purchase program for Austrian winter pea seed produced in 1944 to assure a regular supply of seed for southern farmers to plant this fall. The Administration also has a price-support program for hairy vetch, crimson clover, common vetch, and rye-grass.

Hooks, eyes, and snaps are most satisfactory when sewed on with buttonhole stitch.

A little dry pulverized mustard or salt rubbed on the hands and then rinsed will remove onion odors.

Raw biscuits that are handled too much or baked in too slow an oven will be dry and hard, not fluffy.

An offer to buy the 1944 crop of Puerto Rican sugar at 34¢ cents per pound, f.o.b. Puerto Rican ports, plus 20¢ cents per 100 pounds of raw sugar for compliance with specified planting requirements, is being made by the War Food Administration to Puerto Rican producers.

The War Food Administration through the Commodity Credit Corporation will allow producers until August 15, 1944, to repay outstanding loans and redeem cotton pledged under the 1942 loan. All of the 1942 loan cotton not redeemed by August 15 will be placed in a pool.

Foods Rally Day

The Food Preservation Classes came into Clanton for a rally day program July 31. The program was an information one for the ones interested in "Food Preservation." All classes were well represented, and many visitors came to get direct information on the canning plant and the Chilton County Freeze Plant. The following took part on the program:

Mr. D. P. Culp, County Superintendent; Mr. J. H. Jackson, Manager of the Quick Freeze Plant; Mr. Patterson Hicks, Principal County High School; Miss Mattie Jo Barber, County Demonstrator; Mrs. Edna G. Kinney, Vocational Teacher.

The above pictures are of the foods classes represented at the meeting. In one picture, a view of the Canning Plant can be seen. This plant will be ready for service in late Fall. From official headquarters we get this information about the canner, "A place where you CAN all you can."

CERTIFICATES MUST BE FILLED IN BY BOTH BUYER AND SELLER

Dr. A. H. Collins, district director of the Office of Price Administration at Montgomery, today reminded buyers and sellers of used cars, that certificates of transfer, filled in by both buyer and seller, must be turned in by the purchaser to his local war price and rationing board on or before the date he applies for the gasoline ration for his car.

Correct information about the year, model and body type must appear on the certificate which the local board will audit.

Under amendments to the used car price regulation, the provision which states that only dealers may sell at warranty prices, now also states that sale between dealer may not be made at warranty prices. This will guarantee that used cars available for resale cannot legally be offered for sale to them at prices above the "as is" levels established by the regulation. Dealers will always have an opportunity to buy at prices permitting resales at a profit.

The dealer warranty provisions have also been amended to make it clear that the warranty or guarantee extends to rebuilt equipment and heater or radio for which charges have been included in the complete selling price of the car.

Dollars-and-cents ceiling prices for the 1944 crop of sweet potatoes at levels which will result in reductions from retail prices for the 1943 crop, have been established by the Office of Price Administration. The prices went into effect July 15.

F.O.B. country shipper prices have been established at $3.15 per bushel for the months of July and August. Prices will be readjusted from time to time in accordance with traditional trade practices based on the supply.

The highest retail price for sweet potatoes in this area should not exceed 22¢ for 2 pounds.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Rinsing sifters in cold water until all the flour is washed out, then washing them thoroughly in hot water and rinsing keeps them clean.

If glasses or china cups become stained with tea or coffee the stains can be removed by rubbing them with a rag dipped in salt-vinegar solution.

REVIVAL AT EAST VIEW CHURCH NEXT WEEK

The annual revival meeting will be held at East View Congregational Church from August 13th to 18th. Services will be held at 11 a.m. and at 8 p.m. each day. Mr. David Clark, ministerial student, will be in charge of the revival. Mr. Clark held services at Mt. Springs Church with success two weeks ago.

Tuberculosis

Tuberculosis is an infectious disease, and is wide spread among men and animals, generally fatal in men. It has been known to medical science since remote antiquity but until 1882 the definite cause was not known. No branch of the human race has escaped the touch of this disease but it varies in distribution in various climates and countries. It leads all causes of death in the age group between 15 and 45 years and ranks 7th on the list of killers. Although this disease can reach any tissue in the body lung tuberculosis is 91 percent its distribution is measured two new cases for every death. In 1938 there were 315,000 active cases in the United States.

The symptoms of lung tuberculosis are fever, chills, sweating, fatigue, and loss of weight besides coughing, excessive spitting and blood spitting. Your health department examines your sputum and if the disease is advanced sufficiently you can find the tubercular (bug) present. However, from time to time we have free x-ray clinics which demonstrate the presence of this disease even before the positive sputum. In this county last year we had eight deaths and seven cases reported. With the cooperation of the doctors in finding this disease early enough there is no reason to have a high death rate or to have your relatives infected. We also have available a plan of hospitalization which should cost less than $50 per person to receive adequate treatment which will heal their lungs and prevent them from being a possible cause of death to their friends and family. This county will have one of the x-ray clinics July 19th, but you must be given a request by your family doctor to have benefit of this free service. If in doubt, see your doctor.

Food Problems
Can Be Solved
By Careful Cooking

Vegetable platters offer light summer eating possibilities. Arrange them in a pretty pattern with green beans or asparagus making a pattern with macaroni in the center and spaces filled in with corn kernels.

There's nothing like good food well prepared. It's a pleasure both to the cook who prepared it and also to the one fortunate enough to eat it. Proper preparation is a matter of following rules carefully. That's why we have recipes carefully tested and with accurate directions given.

Formerly, good cooks put in a lump of butter, a handful of flour, etc., but no one else could cook like they did.

Now we have recipes so that everyone can be a good cook as long as he follows directions.

Vegetables, to be perfection itself, must be cooked to domesticity with just a bit of crispness left in them. Pies must have a crust with flakiness that will melt in your mouth, with creamy smooth fillings or luscious juicy berry fillings.

Cakes are at their best with fluffy, fine grain texture, well flavored icings or frostings. Ice creams and sherbets should be frozen so that they are creamy and contain no ice particles.

And now, to get down to the business of preparing food with results such as I have just described. The first is an ice box cake with chocolate filling:

Chocolate Ice Box Cake.
(Serves 6)
4 squares unsweetened chocolate
1/2 cup sugar
Dash of salt
1/4 cup hot water
4 egg yolks
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 egg whites, stiffly beaten
1 cup cream, or evaporated milk
2 dozen lady fingers

Melt chocolate in top of double boiler. Add sugar, salt and water, stirring until sugar is dissolved and mixture blended. Remove from boiling water; add egg yolks, one at a time, beating thoroughly. Place over boiling water and cook 2 minutes or until thickened, stirring constantly. Add vanilla and fold in egg whites. Chill. Fold in cream.

Line bottom and sides of a mold with lady fingers or strips of sponge cake. Turn chocolate mixture into mold and place remaining lady fingers on top. Chill 12 to 24 hours in refrigerator. If desired, add 1/2 cup walnut meats to chocolate mixture before turning into mold. Unmold.

There's a short-cut method to making finer, lighter cakes. If you want a real treat in making cakes, try the new method. Be sure ingredients have stood at room temperature for 4 hours or more so that shortening is soft and pliable.

Maraschino Cherry Cake.
Sift together in a bowl:
2 1/2 cups cake flour
3/4, or 4 (4) teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 1/2 cups sugar
Add:
1/2 cup shortening

Lynn Says
Point Stretchers: For the vegetable course, combine two left-overs such as lima beans and corn; tomatoes, and eggplant; peas and small onions; cauliflower with peas.

Stuffings stretch meats: prune and apple stuffing for roast duckling or veal; oatmeal stuffing for plump beef roll; and apple stuffing for roast pork or slices of ham.

Potatoes can stretch hamburgers or hash. Or, use leftover mashed or rice potatoes in stretching these meats.

Vegetables can stretch scrambled eggs. Try carrots, celery and onion.

*Recipes Given

1/4 cup maraschino cherry juice
16 maraschino cherries, cut into eighths

1/2 cup milk
Mix with electric mixer or by hand with spoon for 2 minutes, by the clock. Scrape bowl frequently.

Add:
4 egg whites

Continue beating for 2 minutes, scraping bowl frequently. Fold in 1/2 cup chopped nuts, if desired. Pour into 2 well-greased and floured 8-inch cake pans. Bake about 30 minutes in a moderate (350-degree) oven. When cool, ice with boiled or seven minutes icing.

The peach crop looks plentiful and luscious and it seems like part of it should go into those light, fruity pies:

Peach Pie.
2 cups sliced peaches
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1/4 cup sugar
3 tablespoons cornstarch
2 teaspoons butter
Dash of salt
1/4 teaspoon almond extract
1 9-inch baked pastry shell

Sprinkle peaches with lemon juice and sugar. Cook slowly to extract juice. Mix juice with cornstarch and blend. Cook over low heat until thickened, stirring constantly. Remove from fire. Add butter, salt and almond extract. Add peaches. Pour into pastry shell. Chill. Garnish with cream or piped meringue if desired.

Veal is a simple and economical meat, but elegant if properly prepared in this chilled loaf style:

Jellied Veal Loaf.
1 veal knuckle
1 pound veal shoulder
1 onion
2 eggs
9 pimiento olives
1 tablespoon salt
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce

Have the veal knuckle sawed in 3 or 4 places. Simmer the knuckle, veal, onion and seasonings in water, cover until veal is tender, about 2 hours.

Chop veal fine. Garnish the bottom of the loaf pan with sliced hard-cooked eggs and sliced pimiento. Add chopped veal. Strain the broth and cook until reduced to 1 cupful. Pour over meat, add salt and Worcestershire sauce. Press meat firmly into pan. Chill. Unmold and serve with preserved fruit and cole slaw in lettuce cups.

A sauce to go with fish or vegetables is Hollandaise. Here is a quickly made recipe:

Hollandaise Sauce.
4 eggs
1/2 cup melted butter
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon paprika
1/2 cup boiling water
2 tablespoons lemon juice

Stir egg yolks, adding melted butter gradually. Season with salt and paprika. Add boiling water, stirring constantly. Place in double boiler and cook until thickened. Remove from fire. Add lemon juice and serve immediately.

To Hollandaise sauce to serve over fish, add one of the following:

1/2 cup chopped pimiento olives
1/2 cup capers
1/2 cup chopped tart pickles

SNAPPY FACTS

The reason for the great demand for tires and other rubber products for military motor equipment is evident when it is realized that today's infantry divisions require 3,500 ordnance vehicles of 160 different varieties. The same size outfit in World War I was equipped with 4,400 horses and 153 ordnance motor vehicles.

Because of the poor condition of tires and other parts, 43 per cent more cars had breakdowns and had to be towed from the tunnels beneath New York's Hudson River in 1943 than in any peacetime year, although traffic was 28 per cent lower than in 1941.

Committees for Economic Development Plan to Maintain Employment After War

Surveys Being Made In More Than 2,000 U. S. Communities

By AL JEDLICKA

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

In over 2,000 communities throughout the United States, people are laying their own plans for a return to a peacetime economy when the war ends and the country's gigantic armament production ceases.

Although these people are being guided by the Committee for Economic Development, they are no trained technicians nor market analysts nor economists themselves, but just plain Mr. and Mrs. America familiarizing themselves with the conditions peculiar to their communities and anxious to provide opportunities for its prosperity in the critical postwar world.

Citizens in towns and cities ranging from hundreds to thousands in population have grouped to undertake a problem that otherwise might be cast solely upon the shoulders of the government, and thus they have sought to apply democratic principles directly through themselves rather than through distant public officials.

Recognizing the great business possibilities in the postwar world, and seeking to acquaint the people the country over with them so they might relieve any distress attending demobilization of the military establishments and industry, the Committee for Economic Development, or CED, was organized in 1942 and began operations in 1943, with the intention of assisting in the creation of postwar planning groups in communities of more than 10,000. But with the realization that only through a widespread organization affecting every economic segment of the country could any movement be effective, the CED extended its activities to smaller cities as well, where the limited fields offer an even more thorough application of the plan.

Headed and supported by the nation's biggest businessmen, the CED makes no bones about its objective of stimulating individual in-actual operation in one of the small cities, as described by Mr. Hermann C. Wehmann, CED's regional manager for the Ninth Federal Reserve district, embracing the Northwest.

In helping to organize a town, Mr. Wehmann said, CED representatives contact some representative member of the community, who then assembles other active citizens to discuss the program. Expenses are negligible, since the local chamber of commerce, etc., furnish the headquarters, and financial outlay is limited to stationery and postage stamps.

To get an idea of the possible postwar conditions in the community, various surveys are conducted. Mr. Wehmann continued, with local industries canvassed as to the number of employees they expect they will be able to hire, and residents polled as to the different kinds of merchandise they plan to purchase. Businessmen then figure on how many people they will need to service the demand. Surveys also establish plans for postwar public works to take up any employment slack.

To provide a solid basis for the business community to figure on, residents polled also are asked to reveal whether they intend to purchase goods out of current income, installment credit, savings or bank deposits, or war bonds.

Through banks, building and loan associations, postal savings and war bond sales, financial assets of the community are tabulated, to determine the extent to which postwar activities might be supported.

Albert Lea, Minn., Survey.

Typical of the consumer surveys upon which businessmen can project their potential needs, Mr. Wehmann said, was the one conducted in the town of Albert Lea, with a population of 11,200 in Itasca county with over 31,000 people, in Minnesota.

The survey showed that residents of the town expected to buy 1,158 automobiles at $1,217,268, and farmers of the county 1,140 cars at $1,105,800.

People in the town hoped to buy 442 new houses at an average cost of $4,068, while farmers looked forward to the construction of 150 homes at $3,150 each.

Repairs averaging $514 were planned for 714 houses in Albert Lea, while similar work averaging $900 was anticipated on 540 farm homes in the county. In addition, farmers indicated they would build 360 barns at an average cost of $1,473, and 360 silos at an average price of $539.

Farmers also expected to purchase 780 tractors averaging $928 each; 810 prefabricated small buildings averaging $566, and 810 electric services averaging $325.

With businessmen thus able to figure upon their possible employment needs, and with surveys of local industries determining their future operating prospects, communities can partly visualize their postwar condition.

New Industries Encouraged.

Towns that may be faced with a surplus of employables can be encouraged to explore the possibility of developing a new industry after consultation with economic experts at their state universities. In cases where such development may be desirable, consideration may be given to some industry which might be based upon a local agricultural crop.

After extensive field work, Mr. Wehmann has set up a chart of the employment prospects of towns which have undertaken communal planning within his region, and as evidence of the value of the survey, consultations with Governor Thye of Minnesota have resulted in the state's consideration to locate public works projects within those areas where labor surpluses may develop.

In organizing communal planning the country over, the CED does not hold that such preparation will be a sure-fire cure for the employment and business problems that will develop upon military and industrial demobilization after the war.

The CED does not overlook the importance of industry quickly reorienting to civilian production to absorb the mass of employables, nor does it ignore the fact that any solid stability can be expected unless agriculture is assured an adequate market at a fair price.

On a question of reconversion, CED stands for the swift settlement of cancelled war contracts to provide industry with funds with which to finance the switch back to civilian goods. At the end of the war, CED figures that about 10 billion dollars of claims will be entered against the government, of which probably 2 billion dollars will be subject to dispute.

Government Surplus Sales.

Besides reconversion, CED also advocates the orderly disposal of surplus war material, so as not to repeat the mistakes that followed marketing of such goods after the last conflict, with the subsequent disturbance of normal channels of production and distribution. In this respect, the government already has established an agency for handling surplus goods, with emphasis placed upon a maximum return for any material.

In a recent address, Paul G. Hoffman, chairman of the board of trustees of CED, declared:

"Private business cannot by any means do the entire job of providing postwar employment. But it is aware of its obligation to make its maximum contribution to that end. With labor and agriculture, it hopes to see reestablished after this war a free and growing American economy."

"What is America's postwar goal for civilian employment? The Committee for Economic Development places that figure at from 55 to 56 million jobs. That is 7 to 10 million more than in 1940, the banner year in all our prewar history . . .

"It is clear that private business—in which I include agriculture and the professions—must provide employment for the overwhelming proportion of those Americans who after this war will be seeking jobs. No governmental employment yet planned—let alone blueprinted—can take up more than a fraction of the unemployment slack that would exist if private employment were not able to go full steam ahead when the war ends . . .

Opportunity for Profit.

"Meanwhile, the Committee for Economic Development is committed to these beliefs:

"The American economy after this war must be predominantly one of private enterprise, in which the opportunity for a fair profit will encourage businessmen to expand present operations and to undertake new ventures.

"The American economy after this war must be an expanding economy in which more wealth will be created and consumed year after year, and in which the American standard of living will steadily rise.

"The American economy after this war must be such as to give every encouragement to the small businessman, for small business, and particularly new enterprise, promotes competition and flexibility in our economy, and thus furnishes protection against monopolistic practices which maintain prices and restrict production . . .

Scott Fletcher, director of CED field development division; Paul G. Hoffman, president of Studebaker corporation and chairman of the board of trustees of CED; and William Benton, vice chairman.

The committee is aiming at post-war production levels 30 to 45 per cent greater than in 1940.

Star Dust STAGE SCREEN RADIO By VIRGINIA VALE Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THE first movie to be shown on the Normandy beach-head following the June 6th invasion was Columbia's technicolor "Cover Girl," according to information received from Col. E. L. Munson, chief of the Army Motion Picture Service. The musical was shown to the invading armies on June 16, and Colonel Munson reports that "the boys loved it." So this costarring effort of Rita Hayworth's and Gene Kelly's makes movie history.

(short features) and has completed his first assignment, "Peeks at Hollywood," in which he also appears as an actor.

Carleton Young will be remembered by thousands of CBS radio-thriller fans as "Chips Davis, Commando." Some months ago he decided to give up radio and become a movie actor. In his first big part, in Phil Baker's "Take It or Leave It," he's an announcer reading from a radio script.

Gary Cooper certainly knows what he does best. For his first personally produced film for International Pictures he's a decision, "The American Cowboy," which is said to be a super-western. It's laid way back in the last century—adding one more to the long list of costume dramas.

Bob Haymes, playing an army private in Columbia's "Mr. Winkle Goes to War," was stuck by a pin when he put on a uniform rented from one of Hollywood's big costumers. Investigating, he found a note pinned inside the jacket. It read, "This jacket was worn by me in 'Seven Days Leave.' Let it look sharp on you, and act like a hero. I did. (Signed) Victor Mature." Bob pulled out the pin and did his best.

James Melton, who's now heard over CBS Sunday nights, has been elevated to stardom by Metro as a result of his work in "Ziegfeld Follies." They've put him down for the lead in a musical version of "Gimmaron." Meanwhile, after vacationing on his Connecticut farm and doing a series of "Oklahoma" recordings with Jeanette MacDonald, he'll sit in on a concert tour which will last from October to March. And he'll do six operas at the Metropolitan.

From Metro comes the news that the first Clark Gable picture following his discharge from the army will be "Strange Adventure." Based on the novel, "The Anointed," it's a prewar story of a merchant seaman and a non-acting girl. And we'll see Myrna Loy as the girl.

Former child stars who grew up to enter the armed services will be honored in the new Columbia Screen Snapshots series, "The Kids Go to War," which Ralph Staub is preparing. The reel will include intimate shots from Staub's private film library of Jackie Coogan when he played in "The Kid," Jackie Cooper in "Skippy" days, Freddie Bartholomew at the time of "David Copperfield," and others, including Mickey Rooney.

Jimmie Dundee, the ace stunt man, is having a vacation from doing hazardous stunts; he's playing a vice-cracking marine in Preston Sturges' "Hail the Conquering Hero." In 22 years his toughest stunts, he says, were diving an army jeep off a 100-foot embankment in "The Story of Dr. Wassell" (the first time the jeep rolled over, his head struck the wheel and knocked him unconscious), and being blown up in a six-ton truck in "Wake Island."

ODDS AND ENDS—Marlene Dietrich brought a coral necklace for Maria Montez when she returned from Italy, the gift of Jean Pierre Aumont. . . . Top role in the re-make of "Of Human Bondage" goes to Paul Henreid; Eleanor Parker gets the Bette Davis role, opposite him. . . . Diana Lynn, billed as a star in Paramount's "Out of This World," raises the dressing room nose Paulette Goddard's "Star Road." . . . Lee Tracy has been signed by RKO in the lead in "Betrayal From the East," his first picture since his discharge from the army, in which he served as a captain. . . . Don Ameche is reported to be forming his own independent producing company.

ATHLETE'S FOOT NEWS

"80.6% of sufferers showed CLINICAL IMPROVEMENT after only 10-day treatment with SOROTONE"

Forrest D. Seel, Inc., well-known cosmetic chemists, have just completed a test with a group of men and women suffering from Athlete's Foot. These people were told to use Sorotone. At the end of only a ten-day test period, their feet were examined by a physician. We quote from the report:

"After the use of Sorotone according to the directions on the label for a period of only ten days, 80.6% of the cases showed clinical improvement of an infection which is most stubborn to control."

Improvements were shown in the symptoms of Athlete's Foot—the itching, burning, redness, etc. The report says:

"In our opinion Sorotone is of very definite benefit in the treatment of this disease, which is commonly known as 'Athlete's Foot.'"

So if Athlete's Foot troubles you, don't temporize! Get SOROTONE! McCann & Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Connecticut.

ative to assist in the solution of the grave problems which demobilization will present. But, in pursuing its goal, CED's organizers welcome the backing of every economic group within a community; the businessmen, the farmers, labor, public officials and any other persons who might be interested.

Each City Makes Own Plans.

In proceeding with their work, CED's organizers insist upon each community developing its own plans, on the principle that its members are more familiar with the city's circumstances than anybody outside of it might be. CED actively enters the picture through its guidance in organization, the distribution of findings of its expert research departments, and its establishment as a clearing house for the exchange of information gathered through its country-wide operations.

As an indication of the grass-roots character of the communal postwar planning, CED's records show that 35 per cent of the cities organized are under 10,000 population, and in the typically rural state of South Dakota, for instance, 130 out of 172 communities engaged in the program have less than 1,800 people.

The working of the program may be best explained by a study of its

CARD OF THANKS

Editor Chilton County News:
I would like to express through your columns my sincere thanks to the many fine people who so generously helped me after everything I had was destroyed by fire three weeks ago.

It will be impossible for me to see every one, and thank them personally. So I take this means of doing so.

People whom I have not seen in years were kind and generous enough to send me gifts and deeds of this kind prove to us that the world is still good and beautiful after all.

My family joins me in this humble line of thanks, and we pray God's richest blessings may befall each and every one of you.—H. E. Robinson and Family.

NO LIMIT ON TERRACE BUILDING ON ANY FARM

Auburn, Ala. — Farmers in Alabama will have an unusual opportunity to terrace their land during the remainder of 1944 under the Agricultural Conservation program, according to A. W. Jones, Alabama AAA Administrative Officer.

In previous years, conservation payments could be made to farmers who terraced their fields only up to the extent of the soil-building allowance set up for each farm. This year the amount of terracing that can be paid for under the program on any individual farm is unlimited.

Farmers may either construct their own terraces and receive payment or they may arrange with the county committees to have the terraces constructed for them. This service will be furnished in the same manner as lime, phosphate and seed have been distributed to farmers under the program.

BRIEF FARM NEWS

The Alabama Agricultural War Finance Committee suggests in connection with the 5th War Loan Drive that farmers (1) keep debts in shape by reducing and holding excessive debts to a safe basis, (2) produce a maximum of essential food and fiber, (3) avoid speculation, (4) build up financial reserves and help win the war by investing in war bonds, and (5) make plans for the wise use of money invested in war bonds.

Ben Dean Elected President Kiwanis International

An advertising executive and former newspaper editor, who long has been for the free enterprise system of government, will guide Kiwanis International's more than 2,200 clubs and 132,000 members throughout the United States and Canada during the coming year.

Ben Dean, of Grand Rapids, Mich., known by thousands of Kiwanians from coast-to-coast, came up the ladder the hard way and previous to his election as president of the international service organization played an active role in the movement of business, industry and agriculture to preserve and protect their constitutional rights.

A Kiwanian for 16 years, Dean has not allowed the national picture to undermine his civic responsibility in Grand Rapids, where he is chairman of the Better Business Bureau, director of the Chamber of Commerce, a trustee of the Baptist Church, a former chairman of the Red Cross chapter and one time president of the board of education.

Dean was elected president of Kiwanis International at its 1944 world convention in Chicago. His selection was hailed by leaders in all walks of life for he speaks a language calling for a stable world economy after the war.

Dean has consistently advocated the development of specific community plans to meet post-war problems, and orderly but certain demobilization of war-time economic controls, the development of fiscal policies which will give the free enterprise system a chance to operate, the rehabilitation and employment of servicemen and women, and an enlarged program of education for all who are able to take advantage of it.

In a recent nation-wide broadcast, Kiwanis International's new president declared that the problem of post-war employment can be solved only through plans involving free enterprise, individual initiative and private industry. He expressed the opinion that "the jobs of our men and women in uniform have the first call on the industries of this country."

Dean, who owns a widely known advertising agency organized in 1919, once served as a reporter and then city editor of the Grand Rapids Herald. Author of a book on furniture styles and contributor to magazines, he is the father of a son fighting overseas and a daughter who is married.

As the head of Kiwanis, he will urge clubs to continue their work on behalf of underprivileged children and among boys and girls. He will stress the importance of maintaining cordial relations between the United States and Canada. He also will advocate the need for vocational guidance, support of churches in their spiritual aims and constant vigilance in public affairs.

DECREASE IN "ALL CROP" ACREAGE IN ALABAMA

Montgomery, Ala. — There will be a decrease of about 1.5 per cent in the "all crop" acreage for harvest in Alabama this year, according to a report recently released by the Alabama Cooperative Crop Reporting Service. Acreage of cotton to be harvested was indicated at 1,463,000 acres, the smallest in any year since 1871, and 90.7 per cent of last year's acreage. Tame hay decreased 14.3 per cent, and peanuts 10 per cent. The corn acreage was estimated at 98 per cent of that harvested in 1943. Small grains showed slight increases, but soybeans, cowpeas and velvet beans showed decrease.

"In general, weather conditions this year," the report said. "Too much year have been favorable to crop program characterized the early crop season, while dry weather hurt some crops in June. Rainfall was scattered and mostly in the form of local showers with drought conditions becoming more serious in the northern part of the State. Damage is greatest on old corn, pastures and hay crops. Crops are clean and in a state of cultivation, but are reported later than usual in most areas of the State."

Inclusion of milk and dairy products in the army dietary is an essential phase of our program, says Col. R. A. Isker of the U. S. Army Quartermaster Corps, in urging all farmers to increase milk production where possible. Alabama dairymen are confronted with the enormous job of producing 1,300,000,000 pounds of milk as during the part of the 122 billion pounds of milk needed by civilians and our armed forces in 1944.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

One day Jesus was sitting in the Temple and along came a poor widow and cast her donation into the collection box. Jesus knew her and He knew how much she gave, but we do not know her name and neither do we know how much she gave. The amount did not matter. The right kind of giving does not seek for publicity. I was taking up a collection in a certain church and one man arose and with his thumbs in the arm holes of his vest he said, "I will give a $100.00." I may have been wrong in my estimate of the man, but it sounded like he wanted publicity. Jesus not only knows who you are, and how much you give, but He knows how much you have left. The gift of this unnamed woman made great, but who was she?

A check for a $100.00 was handed to me and I took it and started to the bank to have it cashed. On the way some one called to me and I went elsewhere and for days that check remained in my pocket uncashed. To be sure I was half way to the bank, but I did not collect a penny. I did not collect on that check until I went the whole way to the teller's window, and then the check was paid in full. Half trust in God is no trust at all. We have got to go all the way in our trust, before we can realize fully on what is treasured up in Him for us.

A rich man stood on shore watching a vessel lift anchor and go out to sea. "You look unusually pleased this morning," said a friend to him as they clasped hands. "Yes, I am happy," replied the man of wealth, "You see that vessel. I have ten thousand dollars worth of equipment on her and she is carrying it to China to fit up a hospital for those poor Chinese. And that is not all, my only daughter is on that ship going to China to give her life as a missionary." That man of wealth not only gave of his money, but he gave his life along with his money. When the church learns to give her life, along with her liberality, then it is that the Kingdom will come. The rich man was truly liberal in his gift of money, but the gift of his daughter was greater.

It was Sunday morning and a beautiful Spring day was in evidence, as a wife walked out on the back porch to see her husband tying his fishing poles on his car. In astonishment she shouted to him, "Man, where is your conscience?" The husband replied, "Wife, do not be disturbed, no harm will come to me if I go fishing on Sunday." A little boy's conscience is in the seat of his trousers. He feels that he can do anything and it is morally all right, just so it does not result in discomfort thereabout. That grown up husband carried all the conscience that he had in the seat of his pants. Everything was morally okay with him just so he did not get hurt. Remember that your conscience is to guard your soul, and not the cat of your pants.

A young man who was mentally incapacitated to see a wrong, passed off flower yard every Sunday morning, and he would invariably slip in and take the flowers, pin them on his coat and walk away to Sunday School. Just so no one saw him, he was okay in his moral ideals. When he was caught he would promise never to do that again, but the next Sunday it was forgotten, and our flowers were taken. You say that he was an object of pity, but what about you being an object of pity when you act just like that irresponsible young man? You hold up your hand and sin every day, and you are as proud as a peacock, as long as no one knows about it. Like the little boy, you carry your conscience in the seat of your pants.

When I was a lad with a group of boys one Sunday afternoon who were students of Sunday School. We found ourselves on the edge of a watermelon patch, and the ripe melons belonging to a neighbor were scattered all over that patch. About half of the boys wanted to steal a melon. The other half of us said no. "Why, Uncle Willie will never know about it," contended one boy. "Yes, but we know about it," replied the rest of us. You have a dangerous conscience unless it will protect you when on one but yourself knows what you are doing.

NOTICE

To employers and workers in the Birmingham Manpower area, the revised Employment Stabilization Program of the War Manpower Commission, as approved by the Birmingham Area Management-Labor Committee, which becomes effective July 1, 1944, requires that:

I. In the cities of Bessemer, Calera, Fayette, Birmingham, Ensley, Jasper and Tuscaloosa and in a ten-mile radius of the city limits of such cities, essential and locally needed employers:

(1) May hire workers who have black Statements of Availability or United States Employment Service referral cards.

(2) May hire women workers who do not have Statements of Availability or United States Employment Service referral cards, provided they have not been engaged in essential industry during the past 60 days.

(3) May NOT hire male workers without referral by United States Employment Service.

(4) May hire women workers without United States Employment Service referral cards, provided they have not been engaged in essential industry during the past 60 days.

II. In all parts of the Birmingham Manpower Area other than those named in Column I, essential and locally needed employers:

(1) May hire workers who have black Statements of Availability or United States Employment Service referral cards.

(2) May hire male workers who do not have Statements of Availability or United States Employment Service referral cards, provided they have not been engaged in essential industry during the past 60 days, and provided further, that employers comply with War Manpower Commission tentative hire regulations.

(3) May hire women workers who do not have Statements of Availability or United States Employment Service referral cards, provided they have not been engaged in essential industry during the past 60 days.

Non-essential employers:

(1) May hire male workers, provided they have not been engaged in essential industry during the past 60 days, and provided further, that employers comply with War Manpower Commission tentative hire regulations.

(2) May hire women workers without Statements of Availability or United States Employment Service referral cards, provided they have not been engaged in essential industry during the past 60 days.

III. No employer may hire any worker who has a restricted (red) statement of availability except upon direct referral by the United States Employment Service.

WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION.

WOOD — A WAR MATERIAL

Too few people realize the importance of wood as a war material. Many therefore frequently ignore the War Production Board's statement that wood is today the Number One critical war material. We all laughed at the pre-war army training pictures showing soldiers practicing with wooden guns and tanks. True, an Army that depended on such weapons wouldn't last long today, but by the same token an Army that didn't have wood to go along with steel, guns and tanks wouldn't last long either. That is particularly true of an Army, such as ours, that is carrying the war to the enemy's shores. Without wood, in the form of lumber, paper, poles, etc., we could not build and deliver the arms and supplies necessary to enable our men to successfully fight the war.

Chilton County has long produced her full share of lumber, poles and pulpwood, but of late our production is failing to keep up with the war needs. Chilton County is well represented on the fighting fronts.

"Back up the boys with Boards and Bonds."

Merit awards worth $100,000 are offered this year as incentives to rural youth throughout Alabama and the country to achieve outstanding records in 4-H agricultural and home economics activities to help speed Victory. Details may be obtained from county or home agents or from T. A. Sims, Auburn, Ala.

Production of blue-lupine seed in Alabama this year is estimated at 2,300,000 pounds of clean seeds, an increase of 64 per cent over the 1943 production of 1,400,000 pounds. Total production in Alabama, Georgia and Florida in 1944 is estimated at 6,400,000 pounds of clean seeds; compared with 5,100,000 pounds produced in 1943.

How Your Local OPA Operates

(Third of a Series by Marvin W. Marcus, Price Clerk).

On or about March, 1942, your Local Board was opened to serve Chilton County. A. A. Bazzell was selected as your chairman and has served faithfully and continuously since that time; J. W. (Dick) Hayes as co-chairman; Clarence (Chick) Fiquette, S. A. Jones, S. C. Porch, compose the Gas Board. Dr. W. L. P. Gish, M. C. Godwin, H. J. Taylor, T. Board. Mrs. A. A. Bazzell, Food Board. Mrs. Gertrude Calloway, A. Crowson, R. C. Williams, Cleva Wyatt, Price Panel. Mrs. Archie Taylor, Mrs. Mollie Smith, Mrs. J. Adams, Mrs. Alma Huff, Price Panel Assistants.

The entire above boards are and have been active for many months, giving every necessary minute of their time to regular and special meetings to pass on all applications and problems pertaining to the successful operation of this board.

The writer feels that the proper appreciation and cooperation have not been shown the board members of this county, for the sole reason that he has heard many remarks that were erroneous and were made without doubt conceivably, but due to lack of knowing the existing facts, and as, the entire board spends all of its necessary time receiving absolutely no compensation, and in many cases no gratitude and I feel that if every one would only put himself in the shoes of the board—what disposition they show different than is shown.

For an example: You as a board member being instructed by the OPA to carefully consider every application for tires, bearing in mind that defense workers, doctors and farmers having priority over others and you had (figuratively speaking) 100 tires allowed to this county this month (not the same number of tires allotted in any month) and you and your co-workers had before you 150 applications and 110 of these from defense workers, doctors or farmers, who would you do? The 10 application who were entitled to tires were able to get same and they feel the should of been given the same consideration that the 100 were shown. To take 100 and make 110 simply cannot be done.

Also imagine you being one of the board members (understand doing what you are requested to do according to regulations and not giving a penny for it) and you are faced with several hundred applications for gasoline and 90% of the parties who have applied for gas you do not even know, how would you act on passing on such application? Only by the information given on such application wouldn't you? If the general public could only see what vague information and unreasonable requests are shown, it would be easier for them to understand what a problem such boards have in trying to give the kind of service they would like to render; and how wonderful and simple it would be if all of the board members were mind-readers—or, better, if every one was honest and a person could believe, every day that was said, but it only converted down to the only reasonable way to make a decision is to weigh up all requests and information shown and use his or her best judgment. Therefore it would be a great help to be concerned if the ones making applications to give more thought to the information that is asked for. This is the only way the boards have been passing on requests that are made.

Next week still more about your Local Board.

HOME-CANNED PRODUCTS REQUIRE LESS POINTS

Auburn, Ala. — Now that rat points are again required for the canned vegetables—tomatoes, peas and asparagus—Alabama housewives are being reminded of the advantage of canning vegetables at home.

The new point values for No. 2 containers are: Asparagus 10, peas 10, tomatoes 5. These vegetables when home-canned, however, call for only 2 points a quart. Home-canners wishing to sell their products now have a good point bargain to offer. No good prices are set on home-canned goods unless they are sold in very large wholesale quantities.

Only five-eighths as much commercially canned tomatoes and tomato juice will be available to civilians in fall and winter as was available last year. Home canning of tomatoes is a very practical way to augment the winter's supply of vitamin C.

Allied Drive Draws Near Paris; Nazis Put Torch to Homeland; Senate Debates Postwar Relief

Pacific—With motor transportation lacking, Yanks use native ox carts to haul heavy ammunition to Tintin front.

EUROPE:

Enemy Gives

As Brittany's four big sea-bases of Brest, St. Malo, Lorient and St. Nazaire, came under the muzzles of American siege guns, other Allied forces pressed their thundering offensive aimed at Paris.

Their defense lines in Brittany shattered before the lightning advance of the American armored columns, stubborn German detachments squeezed within the limits of the four big bases put up a furious last ditch fight against the crushing weight of the attackers.

While the bases were being reduced, other American forces, striking out eastward to within 100 miles of Paris, came upon the big communications hub of Le Mans. To the north of them, the enemy was covering a retreat with strong armored forces in the constant counter-attack.

As the Allied drive rolled up the Nazi line to the west and north, German forces also gave ground below bloodied Caen to the east, with Canadian troops punching holes in the enemy defenses after terrific aerial bombardment by U. S. and British planes.

As Russian forces pressed on East Prussia, men, women and children of that stronghold of German militarism were mobilized to assist Nazi armies, and houses, farms and other installations were razed to prevent their use by the Reds.

In the center of the flaming eastern front, the Nazis bitterly resisted Russian advances upon the prewar Polish capital of Warsaw, throwing strong armored forces into the surrounding plains to contain the surging Red troops.

Farther to the south, the Russians were within 100 miles of the German eastern industrial province of Silesia, and already had overrun the Polish oil-fields which formerly supplied the Nazis with about 2 per cent of their crude.

In Italy, U. S., British, New Zealand and South African troops making up the Fifth and Eighth armies poised for an assault upon the enemy's vaunted "Gothic Line" in the hills north of the Arno river.

Although the historic art center of Florence was spared the war's destruction, the opposing armies lined up on either side of the famed city for a death struggle, with big German guns in the hills to the north lobbing shells on Allied troops massing for an all-out attack.

WORLD WHEAT:

U. S. Leads

With large increases in the U. S. and Canada offsetting decreases elsewhere, world wheat production this year may be moderately above last year, the U. S. department of agriculture reported.

Of the big four wheat producing countries, only the U. S., with 1,125,000,000 bushels, and Canada, with 475,000,000, are expected to show an increase in output, with Australian and Argentine harvests about the same as last year.

Because of shortages of fertilizer and manpower, European production is expected to drop below last year's, although certain sections like Great Britain and parts of the Balkans are looked upon to harvest above average crops. India's harvest was expected to drop to 369,000,000 bushels.

Despite a 600,000,000 bushel reduction in stocks over the previous year, world wheat supplies approximated 1,140,000,000 bushels in July, far above the 1935-39 average of 487,000,000 bushels. The big decrease reflected increased use of the grain as feed in the U. S.

LIVING COSTS

The cost of living moved up slightly during June in 53 cities of the 63 surveyed by the National Industrial Conference board. In seven cities costs remained unchanged, and in 23 there were small declines. For the nation as a whole, living expenses were practically unchanged. The largest increase was found in Indianapolis, where a rise of 1.8 per cent was calculated. Next came Cincinnati with 1.2 per cent, and Dayton, 1.1 per cent. The greatest decline was in Newark, N. J.

CASUALTIES:

Costly Fighting

In a month and a half of bitter fighting in France, Allied casualties totaled 115,655, of which American losses numbered 11,026 killed, 52,669 wounded and 5,331 missing.

Second to the U. S. were British casualties, with 5,546 killed, 27,768 wounded and 6,182 missing, while

Not long after Lieut.-Gen. Lesley McNair had been killed at the front in France by a bomb which an American airman released accidentally behind U. S. lines, his only son, Douglas McNair, 37, met his death during the rearguard action of Guam. Like his father, young McNair was a field artillery man.

Canadian losses totaled 919 killed, 4,354 wounded and 1,272 missing.

On the basis of Prime Minister Churchill's statement that losses among the Allies were proportionately the same, casualty figures would indicate that Americans composed 60 per cent of the troops in France, the British 34.4 per cent, and the Canadians 5.6 per cent. When the invasion began, the number of troops was about equally divided.

CIVIL SERVICE:

Discharge Plans

Looking forward to the day when cessation of war activity will result in the trimming of the federal payroll now including 2,908,912 persons, the civil service commission has established procedure for the discharge of workers.

First to be laid off will be those recalled from retirement and beyond the retirement age, with the second including temporary employees serving under appointments limited to one year or less. In each of these instances, non-veterans will be discharged before veterans, the commission ruled.

Next to be discharged will be so-called transitory employees, embracing those with appointments for the duration and six months afterwards, and finally, "casual" employees with unlimited appointments.

Welcome Americans

Entering city of Perles in great drive that carried across Brittany, crew of U. S. LSTs are greeted by two aged French women.

POSTWAR GOODS:

Higher Prices

Because of wage increases, higher material costs and taxes, prices of many postwar civilian goods are expected to rise, with OPA avoiding any undue restriction which might interfere with the reconversion from war industry.

According to estimates, the first new cars, refrigerators and washing machines will cost 20 to 35 per cent more than pre-war models, and there will be increases in the prices of radios, with the trend being toward the production of better quality sets incorporating wartime developments.

Spending Spree

With the nation's pockets well heeled as a result of all-out production for the war effort, U. S. retail spending for the first six months of 1944 reached record proportions, with prospects that the whole year's expenditures would surpass 1943's all-time high.

Chief increase in retail sales for the first half of 1944 was in the so-called non-durable line of goods, including food, clothing, gasoline, drugs, liquor, ice, fuel, cigars, smokers, etc., although business also was up in the so-called durable goods, like jewelry, furniture, building materials, automobiles and auto parts. Only sales of furniture showed a decrease.

Much of the increase in spending, however, was attributed to payment of higher prices for goods, as reflected in the upgrading of inferior meats, greater sales of more expensive clothing in the absence of cheaper apparel, and the soaring costs of used cars.

NAZI ARMS

German weapons are of uniformly high quality in material and workmanship, reports the U. S. army ordnance intelligence branch, after examining large numbers of captured arms. There is no evidence of a lack of critical materials, such as tungsten or manganese, it was stated.

Unusual arms that have been taken include a paratrooper's automatic rifle, a 2.4 inch rocket gun with a breech, and a 6.6 inch gun with a mechanical range computer.

STAGE SCREEN RADIO

AFTER Laraine Day had worked up the hard way—playing heroine in Westerns, and "Nurse Mary Lamont" in the Doc Kildare, RKO set to work to glamorize her; it was to play the richest girl in the world in "Bride by Mistake," with Alan Marshal. So the hairdressers and make-up men went to work, and the clothes designers whipped up some very daring costumes. Then the photographers got busy, so that the newspapers could print pictures showing the public what a beautiful girl had been hidden by those nurse's uniforms. When Laraine took the photos home, her mother took one look, and remarked "I hope, dear, that you had a lady photographer!"

If a guest star clicks, give him a contract—that's the policy of "The Chamber Music Society of Lower Basin Street," with the signing of Johnnie Johnston for a nine-week run as the latest demonstration of the practice. The movie baritone appeared for a single guest performance on July 16, and was promptly signed for nine more. Practically the same thing happened to Victor Borge.

Andre Kostelanetz and Lily Pons, touring the Persian Gulf war theater, extended their trip for four weeks, to visit the Italian-North African area. Eleanor Sieber and Percy Faith's orchestra continue to hold down their CBS Sunday time.

They credit Hedy Lamarr with this. Seems her husband, John Loder, playing in "The British Strangler," was to strangle the Lord Mayor of London in a snowstorm. Only the factory supplying movie snow broke down. But when Loder came home and told his wife about it, she suggested that the limestone chickens to make the egg shells hard would make perfect movie snow—which it did!

Ethel Barrymore, settled in Hollywood to work in "None But the Lonely Heart," sort of startled the community by being an ardent listener to the radio's "Information Please" and "Quiz Kids"; heard them on the radio in her dressing room, where she lived, and beat the quizzes to the right answers nine times out of ten. Of course, no one can stump her on the league standings of the ball clubs, ever.

Paper salvagers now have a song to sing. Henry Sylvern, of Mutual's "Screen Test," has composed a theme song for the juvenile carter's searchers entitled "Paper Commemoration." It will be taught to youngsters through the medium of recordings.

One of the young actors in Metro's "Dragon Seed," played a character out of his own experience. He's Wei Hsueh, who plays a Chinese student leader in an uprising against the Japs—as a college student in Peking in 1925 he played that role many times.

The British Broadcasting Corporation's industrial music project, "Music While You Work," has celebrated its fourth anniversary with its 3,615th program. Eight thousand factories, employing 4,500,000 workers, now take "Music While You Work"; an average of 1,000 people a year join the course, which is being eagerly watched by leading industrialists in the United States.

Ellen Drew had quite a day a while ago. First came word that her overseas husband, the former screenwriter, Cy Bartlett, had been promoted from major to lieutenant colonel. Then she was signed by RKO for top gal in Boris Karloff's "The Isle of the Dead."

ODDS AND ENDS—When it was announced that "Road to Utopia" would be the last of the "Road" pictures starring Hoot, Crosby and Lamour, more than 75,000 letters of protest poured into the studio. . . . Lively role Sara Padden has in "Her Heart in Her Throat" as she walks through two brief scenes without speaking, then becomes a corpse. . . . Reginald Owen literally plays opposite Pauline Goddard—required to play a completely bald man, he had to have his head shaved.

Mediterranean Sea, Known As Being Tideless, Is Not

The Mediterranean is often known as the tideless sea, and it is true that in its western half tides are only a matter of a few inches. But farther east tides are obvious enough.

At Leghorn, on the Italian coast, there is a foot of tide; at Venice (Adriatic) there is as much as three feet. The strange thing is that in the Gulf of Syrtis, on the Tunisian coast, quite large tides occur. The rise and fall amounts to six and a half feet, while on the shores of the island of Djerba, off Tunisia, there is actually a difference of nearly ten feet between high and low water.

Actually, the Baltic is far more tideless than the Mediterranean. Though it is 900 miles long and from 45 to 145 miles wide, there is nowhere a tide of much more than a foot.

The whirlpools of Scylla and Charybdis, in the Straits of Messina, which were so dreaded by the ancients, still exist, and are real oddies dangerous to small boats but not to modern ships.

Gems of Thought

WHEN there is love in the heart, there are rainbows in the eyes, which cover every black cloud with gorgeous hues.

One's experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning.—Lowell.

Rejecting things because they are old-fashioned would rule out sunshine.

"80.6% of sufferers showed CLINICAL IMPROVEMENT after only 10-day treatment with SOROTONE"

Former D. Snell, Inc., well-known consulting chemists, have just completed a study with a group of men and women suffering from Athlete's Foot. These people were told to use Sorotone. At the end of ten-day treatment period, their feet were examined in two ways: 1. Scrapings were taken from the feet and examined by the bacteriologist. 2. Each subject was examined by physician. We quote from the report:

"After the use of Sorotone according to the directions on the label for a period of only ten days, 80.6% of the cases showed clinical improvement of an infection which is most stubborn to treatment."

Improvements were shown in the pruritus of Athlete's Foot—the itching, burning, redness, etc. The report says:

"In our opinion Sorotone is of very definite benefit in the treatment of this disease, which is commonly known as 'Athlete's Foot.'"

So if Athlete's Foot troubles you, don't despair with this easy, devilish, don't-leave-it infection. Get SOROTONE! McKesson, Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Connecticut.

"80.6% of sufferers showed CLINICAL IMPROVEMENT after only 10-day treatment with SOROTONE"

Former D. Snell, Inc., well-known consulting chemists, have just completed a study with a group of men and women suffering from Athlete's Foot. These people were told to use Sorotone. At the end of ten-day treatment period, their feet were examined in two ways: 1. Scrapings were taken from the feet and examined by the bacteriologist. 2. Each subject was examined by physician. We quote from the report:

"After the use of Sorotone according to the directions on the label for a period of only ten days, 80.6% of the cases showed clinical improvement of an infection which is most stubborn to treatment."

Improvements were shown in the pruritus of Athlete's Foot—the itching, burning, redness, etc. The report says:

"In our opinion Sorotone is of very definite benefit in the treatment of this disease, which is commonly known as 'Athlete's Foot.'"

So if Athlete's Foot troubles you, don't despair with this easy, devilish, don't-leave-it infection. Get SOROTONE! McKesson, Robbins, Inc., Bridgeport, Connecticut.

MRS. MARK L. TUCKER, Owner

R. M. TUCKER, M'g'a.-Ed

The Defense of American Freedom is our First Consideration

THE DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF OFFICE PERSONNEL OF WAR BOARD

(Fourth Installment Written by Marvin W. Marcus, Price Clerk).

Introducing first Mrs. Audelle Miller, who has been connected with OPA since this board was organized. She volunteered her services without compensation for good many months; became actively employed as tire clerk July 1st, 1942, holding that position for almost a year. In June, 1943, she was promoted to chief clerk and the entire personnel of the district office, as well as the Local Board members, feel very fortunate in having such a person serving so faithfully and efficiently as Mrs. Miller has proven herself in the face of many difficult problems she's confronted with; as the responsibility of the whole office force is hers.

In our rationing department, we have Miss Evelyn Wilson employed as gas clerk, issuing all gas books after approval has been made by the gas board.

Miss Wilson has been with this office for a year and has proven herself very efficient in her work.

The next department is the tire and stove rationing, handled by Mrs. Kathleen (Honeycutt) Brown, having had charge of same about six months.

This department covers quite a volume of business and Mrs. Brown has shown she is very capable of handling this work.

We have next the food clerk, who is Mrs. Katherine Gibson, transferred last February from the Dadeville office. Mrs. Gibson has been with OPA since the beginning, and is widely experienced with the regulations and duties of this department.

In the front desk will be found Mrs. Carmel Crew. Her official title is application clerk, and every one finds her to be very capable and cooperative in explaining and assisting in making out the necessary applications that is required by the different boards. Mrs. Crew has been in this department for over a year and is well known and liked throughout the county.

The price division is composed of Mrs. Mary W. Browder Sr., price clerk, who has acted in this capacity for over a year. Miss Willie, as she is often known, has proven very valuable in this department, and when she is not occupied in making and sending into the district office the required reports on price conditions of this county, she'll be found reading and looking up information on different regulations and will at all times be found capable and willing to inform anyone on price regulations.

In addition to Mrs. Browder in the price division will be found the writer, Marvin W. Marcus, who has been active as an OPA employee since May 1st this year as a price clerk, and I am proud to be a part of this great work, as it is very interesting, as well as realizing great results that is being shown in holding the price line, and my work has been very pleasant, due to the fact I find everybody I am required to call on showing the greatest desire to cooperate. The only unpleasant time that I'm confronted with is when a person does not understand just what is expected of him, and a great deal of my time is spent in trying to keep the merchants informed of such requirements. I am very anxious for it to be known that I stand ready to work with and for any of you that I can in helping you better understand OPA regulations. Next week's article will be, "Patience and Cooperation."

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our friends for all the kind words and deeds that were said and done through the illness of our son and brother, F-O Kenneth C. Durbin, at the base hospital at Alliance, Nebraska; to Mr. Leroy Martin of the American Red Cross, our deepest appreciation for helping arrange the long trip up there. Kenneth is much better. We are glad to report that he is well on the road to recovery.

May God's richest blessings be with everyone who helped in any way—Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Durbin.

MT. NEBO NEWS

Next Sunday is our regular preaching day. Be sure and come to church both Sunday and Sunday night, and bring someone with you.

It is not safe to buy land or to lend money and accept land as security without first investigating the Title of the land. Often there are unpaid mortgages and judgments or other liens, affecting the Title, which an Abstract would set out. Therefore, when buying land or lending money thereon, it is important that an Abstract of Title be furnished. A few dollars spent for an Abstract is cheaper than going ahead and having a law suit a little later on.

1944 8 POINT
NATIONAL
MILK PRODUCTION PROGRAM

A cow will give more milk if she is in good flesh at calving time than if she is thin... During the dry period, she should continue to get lots of good roughage—grain feeding should also be continued if necessary, to put her in good condition by calving time.

The 8 Point Program

1. Grow more legume hay, pasture, and grain.
2. Fertilize to increase quantity and quality of feed.
3. Feed to avoid summer milk slump.
4. Feed cows liberally during their dry period.
5. Keep as many cows as feed and labor permit.
6. Market more whole milk whenever possible.
7. Produce good-quality milk and avoid waste.
8. Breed for better herd replacements.

Telephone Lines to the Front

As battles roll on to victory and vast new areas are conquered, the need for tremendous amounts of telephone equipment becomes more and more urgent.

Since the start of the war the huge telephone manufacturing plants of the Bell System have been concentrating on the manufacture of telephone equipment for war use exclusively, to insure that there shall be no shortages of telephone equipment on the war fronts.

Just before war started, the Southern Bell Company completed a large program of expansion of central office and outside plant facilities. This enabled us to continue installing telephones after the manufacture of telephone equipment for civilian use had stopped.

Now, however, the normal reserves of switchboards, wire, cables and instruments have been used up, and we have many people on our waiting lists for service. But war's needs must come first, so for some time we at home shall continue to make the most and the best use of what we now have.

as soon as approvals and materials are received

Newspaper reports suggest that some of the restrictions on the manufacture of some materials for civilian use may be relaxed. We are hopeful that wire, transformers and other items needed in electrical construction will be released in necessary quantities so we can begin work on extension of lines to applicants for electric service.

Electric line extensions must, under present regulations, be approved by the War Production Board. For each application we receive, we make up a report which states in detail all facts about the application. This is submitted to the W. P. B. for approval. We cannot build any lines without this approval. The W. P. B. gives its approvals on the basis of materials available from manufacturers and not needed to prosecute the war.

We are ready to go ahead with the construction of electric line extensions. In many instances location surveys have been completed and rights-of-way acquired. As soon as the necessary approvals and materials are received, our construction crews will begin work.

By JOHN C. PORT
McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

THE Old Man scooted his chair away from the desk in the corner of the print shop known as his office and handed a sheet of type-written paper to the boy at the linotype. "Page one, column one," he said briefly. Then he stalked to the rear of the shop. "Speedy!" he called, and the youth who was oiling the outmoded cylinder press straightened and ceased his operations.

"Yes, sir," The Old Man stroked his chin thoughtfully and regarded the boy through narrowed bloodshot eyes. "If you put a form tonight it will be the third consecutive week you've done it. A pretty poor average when you consider this is a weekly paper."

Speedy ran his hand over his smooth black hair. "Yes, sir," The Old Man shook a menacing forefinger. "It takes Red a whole day to pick up the pieces and make up the form again. If I wanted the paper to come out on Saturday, it would read that way instead of having Friday on the masthead!" He stopped for breath. "If you could once get your mind off playing-act you might be of some value here. But get this and get it straight; if you put a form again tonight, you're through!" With that final warning the Old Man put on his shapeliness hat and left.

Speedy walked over to the linotype. He stroked his chin thoughtfully and squinted his azure eyes at Red. "If you put a form tonight, it will be the third consecutive week you've done it." He took his hand from his chin and shook a menacing forefinger. "Get this and get it straight; if you put a form again tonight, you're through!" Red grinned. "You left out some of it, didn't you, Barrymore?" Speedy laughed. "The Old Man still grousing about Walters?"

"Yeah," Red answered. "Page one, column one. He'll land in jail, printing such stuff. Listen: 'The incumbent county treasurer, George Walters, has served his term of usefulness. He is a crook, as his record proves. He vainly imagines that lends dignity to his office by clearing his throat at the beginning of a sentence and coughing at the end of it. The voters of this town will no doubt be glad to see their most distinguished citizen replaced by an able man.'"

"The Old Man isn't my idea of an ethical editor," Speedy mused. "When he's mad, he'll do 'most anything'—unless someone scares him. Then he's not so tough. You know what the trouble is, don't you?" Red asked.

"I could guess," Speedy answered. "The Old Man's sore because Walters gave the contract for the commissioning of the new printer to our competitor. Well, it's a free country and Walters had a right to do it. The Old Man ought to brag about the opposition candidate and lay off Walters and his asthma or whatever it is."

"Maybe you're right," Speedy agreed. "Anyhow, what time will you be ready?" "Midnight," Red answered. "Incidentally, if you just look the forms on the press before you start it, they aren't so likely to fall off."

The Old Man swore as he stumbled through the darkness to the telephone. "Yes . . ." he said.

He heard a throat being cleared and then: "If that rag of yours comes out, I'll give you a piece of another of your editorials, I'll sue!" A cough, and another clearing of the throat. "It's libel, and you know it—you won't have a chance! And when I get through with you, you won't have anything at all!" The cough was more violent this time, and the throat clearing more prolonged. "Remember what I've told you!" Then came a veritable spasm.

The Old Man hung up. He broke into a cold sweat. "I'll have to go down there," he told himself. "Speedy'll never hear a phone if that cylinder press is running." He shook as he hurried into his clothes. "Got to stop it," he kept muttering. "Can't let it go out." A few minutes later he was at the shop. "Speedy!" he bawled. "Speedy, stop the press!"

But the press wasn't running. Speedy was looking at him, a queer expression in his blue eyes. "I forgot to lock the forms on again, sir," he confessed.

The Old Man blinked. Then he sighed and a grin spread over his face. "Oh, well," he said, "it isn't the first time. I'll call Red. There are a few changes I want to make, anyway."

The Old Man had left by the time Red arrived. "Congratulations," he squealed acidly to Speedy. "I'm surprised to find you're still here."

Speedy shrugged his shoulders. "The Old Man left copy for you," he said. "I'll replace what was originally page one, column one."

Red sat down at the machine. "Was he pretty sore?" he asked.

"He didn't seem so sore," Speedy answered thoughtfully. "He was practically, he lifted his pointed chin a trifle. 'I phoned him as soon as I made the mistake, but I'm sure glad he didn't recognize my voice.'"

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D.
Of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for August 20

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Religious Education, used by permission.

THE PROPHET IN THE LIFE OF ISRAEL

LESSON TEXT—1 Samuel 3:10-21; 7:3-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully.—Jeremiah 23:18.

Remarkably up-to-date is the helpful guidance found in this lesson. When our nation finds itself facing those other nations which would destroy our Christian faith, and we know that we need the key both to a true victory and a satisfactory peace, the message of this scripture comes with fine helpfulness.

The prophet Samuel (who was also priest and judge) served God in ruling his people at a time when they were under the hard heel of the Philistines. The way out of oppression was revealed in God's Word, which brought revival and deliverance—which was not forgotten in the day of triumph.

1. God's Word Declared (3:10-21).

While a prophet had the ministry of foretelling, his chief work was forth-telling. He told of the future, but his larger ministry was to declare the message of God. As Samuel did this in faithful devotion to the Lord, there was the immediate blessing of God which established the prophet throughout the whole land.

Those who are timid about "limiting" their ministry (imagine that!) to the Bible should learn of Samuel that it is the only really effective message. Get it down! "Let you down!" if you teach and preach His Word. He let none of Samuel's "words fall to the ground" (v. 19) and He will not desert us as we give forth His truth.

Note that the Lord Himself came to strengthen and encourage Samuel (v. 21). He is just as gracious to His servants today. He comes to them in that blessed strengthening fellowship which stirs their hearts and fires them anew with holy determination.

II. Man's Heart Revived (7:3-6).

The response of the people to Samuel's message was wholehearted. They were sick of their sin and idolatry. They proved the reality of their repentance by putting away their heathen gods.

Such repentance and appropriate action is a prerequisite to spiritual revival. God cannot give us His blessing if we hold on to our sin and idolatry.

Note how the revival expressed itself. They gathered together and prayed (vv. 5, 6). Spiritual life thrives on the gathering together of God's people. The crisis in Israel was met by a convocation of the people. We need to revive the great soul-stirring religious gatherings of a generation ago. Go yourself, and encourage others to go. Let the fire of God burn, and let those who meet scatter far and wide as brands which will light new fires.

"I will pray," said Samuel. He was a great intercessor (1 Sam. 7:9). "For the Lord do it again," was the word of Samuel. They cried, and He did! "The Lord thundered with a great thunder," and discomfited the enemies of Israel.

In these days of warfare we might well cry out, "Lord, do it again!" thunder upon our enemies and defeat them in such a way that they and we shall see that it was the hand of God and not of men! (See Ps. 20:7).

Seeing Israel at prayer, the enemy took advantage of them and attacked. In the previous battle at this very spot (see last Sunday's lesson) Israel had been defeated because they had fought with the weapons of man. Now, with God's weapons of prayer and faith, they had glorious victory.

IV. God's Mercy Remembered (7:12).

Samuel raised a stone of remembrance, to remind Israel in the years to come that He had been their help. A defeated, disheartened, sinful people had turned to God in repentance and faith, and God had given them victory. They must never forget His mercy.

One of the great concepts of thinking men in our day is the fear that victory may come to us before we are spiritually and morally ready to receive it. If it does, we shall see a mad rush into excesses of all kinds, a bold glorying in our own ability and power, and even greater forgetfulness of God.

What America needs now is a deep going spiritual revival which will both prepare us for a God-given victory, and for the peace which is to follow.

Bacon Sandwiches Make Grand Outdoor Eating (See Recipes Below)

Picnic Tips

There's nothing like the great outdoors to produce great appetites. And there's nothing that tastes so good as food eaten in the great wide spaces in sand, under the pine needles and the smoke of a fire.

Our recipes and suggestions today are designed to fit those who want to do part of their cooking at home, and finish when they arrive at the picnic. It is easy to lay out a well spread when everything is well organized and planned ahead.

You'll like the recipes because they're not fancy. They do add to some downright good eating, though, and will give you a grand experience in outdoors eating.

Food is best packed in hamper or tied in cloth. It's easiest to carry that way. If you have anything breakable, use a metal container.

Best Type of Fire.

For those of you who want to cook outdoors, use the trapper type of fire. Never start cooking until the wood has burned and is a bed of glowing red coals.

To make this type of fire, place 2 medium sized logs (green) 6 to 8 inches apart. Between these set up dry twigs and brush. Carry something that will make the fire start easily, a bit of tissue paper.

Our recipe round-up starts with the favorite hamburgers. If you snuggle in the extra cheese, you'll like the flavor.

All-American Hamburgers.

- (Serves 6)
- 1 1/2 pounds hamburger
- 1/2 cup milk
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 pound American cheese
- 4 tablespoons butter
- 6 buttered buns

Mix meat with milk, salt and pepper. Form 12 thin patties of the meat about 3 inches in diameter. Cut 6 slices of cheese slightly smaller than meat patties and place the cheese in between the meat patties, sandwich-fashion. Seal edges well. Melt butter in a skillet and fry the patties slowly for 10 to 15 minutes. Serve on toasted buns.

Hot Cheese Frankfurters.

- (Serves 10)
- 20 frankfurters
- 2 slices of bacon
- 1/2 pound sharp cheese
- Split frankfurters lengthwise and fill with long strips of cheese. Wind a strip of bacon, spirally, around each frankfurter and fasten at ends with toothpicks. Toast on forks or long-handled toasters over fire until bacon is browned and cheese is melted. Place in a hot toasted roll and serve with relish.

Creamy Scrambled Eggs.

- (Serves 6)
- 6 eggs
- 1/2 cup milk

Lynn Says

Campfire Cook: Make sure the drinking water is safe on your camping trip. Boiled water always is, sparkling water isn't necessarily.

A hole dug in the earth in the shade of the tree, lined with small stones makes a nice outdoor refrigerator. Moist caves, shallow underground streams, small drops or falls are all good "refrigerators."

Be sure to put your campfire in a safe place. The best thing, soil next best.

A canoe paddle makes an excellent bread board or a checker board! Paint squares as for checkers and play with cookies or candies.

Lynn Chambers' Picnic Menu

- *Bacon Sandwich
- *Roasted Corn Cherry Tomatoes
- Cocoa
- *Rocks
- *Fresh Fruit
- *Recipes Given

- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 4 tablespoons butter
- 1/2 cup diced American cheese

If desired

Beat the eggs well. Add salt and pepper, if desired. Melt butter in heavy skillet and pour eggs into pan, stirring well as the mixture begins to thicken. When eggs are partially cooked, add cheese. Serve on toast when thick. Do not overcook.

Bacon is a grand outdoor appetite tempter. It is also an important concentrated source of food energy that you'll need after working hard outdoors.

If you are frying bacon at the picnic, then this is the best method to follow: Place the strips in a cold skillet over a low fire. Turn frequently until all parts of bacon are evenly crisp.

After cooking, do not let fat smoke. For extra crispness, drain off the fat as the bacon cooks.

Bacon Sandwich.

To make delectable sandwiches, fry the bacon as directed above with thick slices of fried onion and tomatoes served on toasted buns.

Have you caught some fish? Nothing will taste better than a chowder made in a chowder kettle over a bed of coals.

Fish Chowder.

- (Serves 6)
- 5 slices bacon, diced
- 3 medium onions, diced
- 2 pounds fresh fish, boned
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1 teaspoon pepper
- 5 to 6 medium potatoes, sliced or diced
- 1 quart milk
- 4 tablespoons butter
- 4 tablespoons onion

Fry bacon and onion together until onion is light brown. Cut fish into small pieces and rub with salt and pepper. Add potatoes to chowder kettle. Cover with boiling water and cook 30 minutes. Blend flour with 1/2 cup milk. Add remaining milk to fish and stir in flour mixture. Add butter, simmering constantly. When mixture thickens, serve in soup bowls with crackers.

Like vegetables cooked outdoors? Then, here is one.

Roast Corn.

Use fresh sweet corn. Remove corn silk but leave husks on. Dip the ear, husk and all into a pall of water and lay on a grate over a hot bed of coals. The water turns into steam within the husk coating and thus cooks the corn, making it steamy and juicy instead of dry and tasteless. Corn may also be roasted by burying in the ashes.

Cookies and fruit make the ideal campfire dessert. Take cookies easy to carry such as:

Rocks.

- (Makes 5 dozen)
- 1 cup shortening
- 1 1/2 cups brown sugar
- 3 eggs
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- 4 teaspoon cloves
- 3 cups sifted flour
- 1 teaspoon soda
- 1 1/2 cups walnuts
- 2 cups raisins

Cream shortening and sugar. Add eggs and beat well. Add sifted dry ingredients, chopped nuts and raisins. Drop from spoon onto greased cookie sheet and bake in a moderate oven (350-degree) oven.

If you wish additional instruction for canning fruit or berries, write to Miss Lynn Chambers, 210 South Desplaines Street, Chicago 6, Illinois. Please enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply.

Maid Locked Boss in Closet, Stole Purse
CHICAGO.—A maid in a maid in these days of wartime shortages. So when a woman applied to Mrs. Anne Gordon for work she didn't bother about references. She told the police that the new maid locked her in a closet and left with her purse containing money and four ration books.

Father Subs for His Son Overseas

Girl Says 'Yes' to Plea for Absent Suitor.

CHELSEA, MASS. — Proving there's no limit to what a father will do for a son, particularly when that son is fighting overseas for his country, Edward Jankowiak dutifully purchased a diamond engagement ring, knelt before the pretty blonde daughter of a neighbor and proposed marriage to her in the name of his son.

The girl, 19-year-old Helen Szymanczak of 143 Park street, said "yes" but her tears in her eyes and her thoughts were thousands of miles away with Corp. Stanley Jankowiak, 23, whom she hasn't seen for more than a year.

All this was the result of a letter Corp. Jankowiak wrote his father. It contained explicit instructions, even to the size and weight of the diamond in the ring, and the money with which to buy it. Both families were to attend the proposal ceremony and the father was directed to kneel before the girl in his most ardent manner.

"And not forget to say it's Stanley who's proposing," he warned. The father went his son one better by arranging the ceremony for Helen's 19th birthday, when she was given a surprise party at the home of her sister, Mrs. Genevieve Dombrowski.

The young couple have been sweethearts since they both attended Chelsea high school. Corp. Jankowiak is in a medical unit which was last heard from in England.

Deer, Notorious Slayer Of Live Stock, Is Slain

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Old Hook, the notorious deer long hated by farmers because of his murderous attacks on live stock during the years he roamed the countryside, died recently at the hands of his best friend, Zoo Director William T. A. Cully.

Barns and fences were not made for Old Hook, said Cully, explaining that the animal had gone berserk and actually was killing himself.

After Cully had brought him down with a high caliber rifle shot it was found that Old Hook had broken his own jaw in four places and opened deep gashes on his body in leaps which did not clear his long barbed wire fences and zoo corals.

For three hours he sailed over fences—one of them 10 feet high—before his strength ebbed and he began cutting himself on the top strands of wire.

Farmers, angered by finding gashed or dead cows after the zoo fugitive's visits, long had been running for Old Hook before Cully recaptured the 16 pound deer several weeks ago. Five 22 caliber bullets and large numbers of shotgun pellets were found in and under his hide. Farmers had put them there.

Japanese Deserter Lives Hunted Life In Sweden

LONDON.—Prof. S. Sakimura, reportedly the first Japanese diplomat to desert to the Allies since Pearl Harbor, is living the life of a lonely, frightened fugitive in Stockholm, the Daily Mail said. The Mail, publishing an interview with Professor Sakimura, said he lives in constant fear of the Japanese Black Dragon society and the Nazi Gestapo.

At the end of 1943 Professor Sakimura, industrial expert in the Japanese embassy in Berlin, became convinced that neither Japan nor Germany could win, the newspaper said.

He has joined the embassy staff in 1941 as leading expert on the Japanese commission charged with working out German-Japanese trade harmony after the war. His work gave him close insight into the strength and weakness of German war industry.

It is this information which his Japanese and German pursuers are determined he shall not reveal. He broke with Japan openly this year and fled to Sweden. He has been forced to take innumerable precautions against assassination.

'Painter' Is Accused of Looting 50 Households

PHILADELPHIA.—It's so hard to get a painter nowadays that householders were delighted when George Kelly, 26, answered their want ads. They weren't so pleased after he left, according to Detectives Glasgow Driscoll and Eugene Brenner, who charged Kelly had looted 50 homes and stores of more than $20,000.

The detectives said they'd been answering want ads for painters themselves, confident they'd run into Kelly. They did next day.

Ruse Lures Tiger Tank to Its Doom By Hidden Mines

Lone Attack Halts Monster Where Aids With Bombs Were Posted.

WITH THE BRITISH SIXTH AIRBORNE DIVISION, FRANCE. — When British paratroopers holding a vital sector of the Orne Valley in Normandy recently saw a Tiger tank and two self-propelling guns rolling down the road toward them, they thought they were done for. Since down they had been cut off from the rest of the British forces in the area by continuous and ferocious Nazi counterattacks.

They had held them all, but as usual by the enemy's armor was something more grimly serious—especially since the last anti-tank gun the company possessed had been knocked out by shellfire a few hours before. So they did not have much hope of survival when the Tiger tank advanced.

And then Pvt. Michael McGee from one of the paratroop regiments decided that somehow he would stop the tank. Michael McGee is a fighting Glasgow Irishman from Kelvin-side and he has a couple of fighting pals as recklessly courageous as himself.

Friends Prove Game

He called them over—Corp. Tom Killen and Pvt. John Sullivan. He said:

"Look, boys, if these Jerry panzers get through this road and among us we're a gone-away way, so we may as well die trying to stop them. I've an idea. Are you game to try with me?"

They agreed. McGee went to a dump and handed Killen and Sullivan a pile of anti-tank bombs. He told his friends to hide inside a house 100 yards up the road and said:

"Now wait in there till the tank steps outside the door and then throw your bombs and throw them straight."

An hour later paratroopers heard the rumbling approach of the giant Nazi tank. A few of them believed McGee could do anything about it and it was the grimmest moment of the campaign for most of them. Then, hidden behind walls, they saw the Tiger tank turn round the corner and into the village. Already heavy shells from its 150-mm. gun were blasting among them. With hearts in their mouths, they suddenly saw McGee leap over the wall and dash to the middle of the road.

"It looked like a crazy thing to do," a paratrooper said afterward. "All he had in his hand was his Bren gun and you know how little good that is against a monster tank. But Michael put the gun to his hip and opened fire. He sprayed the front of the tank and you could see bullets bouncing off it as it advanced."

Prediction Comes True.

"And what Michael had said happened. The Tiger tank, as if astonished at the impudence of this lone soldier with his little gun, stopped. Stopped, moreover, right outside the house where Tom Killen and Sullivan were hiding and those boys did their stuff.

"We saw bombs flinging over. We saw them hit the tank and then there was a terrific explosion, a sheet of flame and great billowing of smoke—and there was one less Tiger tank in Field Marshal Rommel's 21st Panzer division."

All done so neatly and swiftly that Private McGee wasn't even touched by the guns of the Tiger.

He dashed back behind the wall as the bombs hit. He stayed there until he was sure the tank was destroyed and then, with more bombs, he went up the road to survey the damage and congratulate his pals.

"Feel like doing it again, boys?" he asked.

"If you're game, Mike, we are," they told him.

So twice more that afternoon Michael McGee dashed into the road with his Bren gun and peppered attacking armor. Twice Nazi panzers self-propelled guns this time—stopped in sheer astonishment just long enough to be destroyed by skillfully flung bombs.

Gobs Have Day Off, So They Take Hand in War

WITH THE FIFTH ARMY AT GROSETT, ITALY.—A couple of first class seamen from Uncle Sam's navy, Robert Gaston, 19, of Reading, Pa., and Harold Simpson, 18, of Billerica, Mass., had a day off. They went to a salvage dump, picked up a couple of used army rifles and then hitchhiked to the front north of this town.

They made it alongside the doughboys, took some pot shots at the Jerries, looked things over, said they'd had a great leave, thumbed a ride back to port and reported ready for duty again.

Most of Village Razed By Alaskan Island Fire

JUNEAU.—Seventy-five per cent of the inhabitants of the Chichagof village of Hoonah were reported to be homeless after fire swept through the town. One native was known to have perished, possibly two. The fire was reported to have destroyed about 60 per cent of the structures. Replacement cost was estimated in excess of $500,000.

Jiffy Play Set
EVEN though you've never cut out a single garment in your life, you can make this one-piece play frock and matching one-piece sun hat in an afternoon! It's the simplest set to cut, sew and launder you've ever seen.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Pack all apples individually in newspapers before putting in a barrel. They keep better this way.

Try cutting the outside leaves of cauliflower into inch-long pieces, and, when done, creaming with white sauce.

Quartered lemons add the "something sour" to the salad beans need and make a good looking garnish as well.

Hang a good-sized jar in the sewing room to receive scraps from sewing to be used for weekly mending.

Try keeping the peanut butter jar upside down on the pantry shelves between trips to the table. The alternate turning it receives this way helps keep the oil distributed through the entire jar.

If you have a dog, cook him some cornmeal in the water in which vegetables have been cooked. Divide the dog's daily ration into three meals, instead of two. He does not get so hungry then and does not eat so fast.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1988 is designed for sizes 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 years. Size 2, dress and bonnet, requires 1 1/2 yards of 36 or 38-inch material; 6 yards ric-rac trim.

Due to an unusually large demand and current war conditions, slightly more time is required in filling orders for a few of the most popular pattern numbers.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Millions of dollars will be saved by American purchasers of rubber items in post-war days because of the availability of synthetic and the influence its cost will have on the price of natural rubber. Rubber authorities anticipate that hereafter synthetic rubber prices will serve as a ceiling over charges for the plantation product.

Special rubber pipe lines have been developed which troops can string across rivers, ravines or gulches to bottle water to deliver fuel to motor equipment. The "pipes" yield to the force of concussion, but never break.

CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

VOLUME XXII CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 24, 1944 NUMBER 34

HOW THEY ARE AND WHERE THEY ARE

Cpl. Hermon B. Edwards, 27, who has been in the service since October 11, 1941, is serving at a North African Air Service Command Base with the quartermaster outfit.

Cpl. Edwards, a truck driver, went overseas in September, 1941, and spent three months in England before moving to Africa with his outfit.

His wife and child reside in Clanton where his parents also live.

Private First Class Lewie F. Robinson of Jemison, Ala., was promoted from Private to that rank at Nergerson Field, the First Troop Carrier Command's crew replacement center at Austin, Texas, according to announcement by Col Samuel J. Davis, Post Commanding Officer.

Pfc. Robinson's mother, Mrs. J. C. Palmer, resides on Jemison Route 2.

"They blew off part of my right alleron, ripped holes in No. 3 gas tank and propeller, tore a three-foot gash in No. 2 engine, and shot out my instrument panel. No. 1 engine must have been hit too, because it began to vibrate badly.

"Seven other cannon shells ripped the fuselage, the tail wheel was blown off, part of the rudder was gone, and an 88-millimeter flak shell blasted through the wing root and exploded about 50 feet above us.

"We dropped our bombs and turned away from the target with 1 1/2 engines doing the job of four. But my urgent prayers were answered. We made it home safely."

This is only one of the exciting experiences that happened to this crew. Space does not permit us publishing all of the narrow escapes of the ship and its crew.

Mrs. Mary Gwathney is the mother of five sons in the service of their country. She has just received the news address of the fifth son, which makes them all in active service.

The boys are Pvt. Walter Gwathney in New Guinea; Pfc. Thomas R. Francis; EM 3-C somewhere in the Pacific; Sgt. Arthur and Pfc. Homer somewhere overseas.

Chilton County and Clanton are proud of the service these boys are rendering.

T-Sgt. Preston Culp, United States Army Air Corps, has returned to the states after spending thirty months overseas in the Southwest Pacific Theatre of Operations.

T-Sgt. Culp's wife resides at Clanton, Ala., Route 3.

Seaman 2-C Newt Popwell from New York, arrived here last Thursday for a few days leave with his family. He will leave Friday for his station, where he will resume his duties.

Julian E. Calfee, 23, Electrician's 1-C, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Calfee, of RFD 3, Clanton, has completed his basic training at the Submarine School, Submarine Base, Groton, Conn., for duty with our newest fleet of undersea fighters.

Calfee was graduated six years ago from Isabella High, Maplesville, letting in football there. He joined the Navy in May, 1942, had recruiting at Great Lakes, Ill., and duty in the sea.

Sgt. Daniel (Bottle) Alred, son of Mrs. Hattie Alred of 8th Street Clanton, has been awarded the Purple Heart.

Pvt. First Class, James H. Warren, of Clanton, Alabama, has been cited by his regiment of the 88th Infantry Division and awarded the Combat Infantryman Badge for actual participation in combat with the enemy on the Fifth Army front in Italy.

Pvt. Frank Presswood from Fort McClean, Anniston, Ala., was here for the week end with his family.

We just received a card from J. E. Bennett, S 2-C, who is in Miami, Fla., with the Fleet Post Office. He says his basic training with him and that his wife Sammie decided to have him sent the mail on to the boys instead "Passing the Ammunition." "Of course that suits me," he says.

—HELEN.

LOCAL BOY HAS EXCITING EXPERIENCE WITH 15TH AIR FORCE IN ITALY

Sgt. Marvin J. Bates, Jr., 21, aerial engineer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Bates, Sr., of Clanton, has participated in some exciting experiences in Italy with the 15th Air Force.

One incident, in particular, was a bombing mission to Munich, in the "LADY QUEEN," of which Lt. Robert Kilmark, 22, of Coloma, Mich., is a member.

Story related to Birmingham Post, Lt. Kilmark:

"We were on the bomb run, 60 seconds from the target, when a flock of German Me 109's roared by six abreast, raking the plane with 20 millimeter shells and .50 calibre. They were like a cyclone."

JACKSON CHAPEL

Sunday School was not so well attended Sunday for some reason, but we are expecting a larger crowd next Sunday.

There will be an all-day service here next Sunday—the fourth.

We are expecting the Rev. Curbie from Alabama to be with us, also some good singers. Everybody come and bring a well-filled basket and spend the day.

KIWANIS CLUB TO SPONSOR LIBRARY

At a regular weekly meeting of the Clanton Kiwanis Club last Thursday night a motion was adopted and a committee appointed to organize plans for a public library.

A meeting of the committee will be called this week to form plans for the new undertaking. Patterson Hicks was named chairman of this committee.

Efforts will be made to get full co-operation of all churches, clubs and organizations here to lend their services to furthering this local project. Each individual citizen should also feel it his civic duty to aid in this worthwhile endeavor.

A report of the meeting this week will be published in the next issue of the News.

MRS. CECILIA THATFORD

MRS. THATFORD WINS BALE OF COTTON

At last the bale of cotton that was First Prize in the drawing during the Fifth War Loan Drive has been claimed.

For several weeks it looked as though a second drawing was going to be necessary, but last week Mrs. Cecelia Thatford of Verbena, wife of Petty Officer, 1-C Jack Thatford, came in and claimed her prize. Her husband was at the drawing.

According to Mrs. Thatford she was reading the News and noticed where the First Prize had not been claimed. Upon checking the number given and the one on her stub she was overjoyed to find that hers was the lucky number. Saturday she came to Clanton and claimed her prize from Mr. J. C. Pattillo, County War Finance Chairman.

Mrs. Thatford is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Baker, of Verbena. The News congratulates her on her good luck.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Allies Forming Huge Pincer to Squeeze Nazi Armies in France; Permit Essential Goods Output

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

France—U. S. infantrymen draw beads on Nazi snipers during street fighting for Brittany port of St. Malo.

EUROPE: New Front

With U. S. and French troops storming inland in southern France, the Allies were developing a huge pincer in that embattled country to squeeze in the Germans.

Even as the new Allied invasion armada swept ashore between Toulon and Nice, U. S. and British troops cleared the Germans from the northeastern corner of France, with doughboys advancing within 40 miles of Paris.

Although not conducted on the scale of D-day operations, the invasion of southern France was a gigantic undertaking, with no less than 800 warships from the U. S., British and Canadian navies supporting the landings. As U. S. doughboys and French poilus spilled onto the beaches, paratroopers and glider-borne troops were dropped far inland to paralyze enemy defenses and communications in the rear.

First sporadic, enemy resistance gradually stiffened as the Nazis overcame the shock of the attack and shifted troops and artillery into the endangered zones. Because the terrain in this sector is rugged and mountainous, the enemy was expected to base his defense on natural obstacles.

Although suffering a major defeat in northeastern France, Nazi General von Kluge succeeded in pulling the biggest bulk of his forces out of the huge trap the Allies had formed, with the British and Canadians bearing southward from below Caen and the Americans pressing eastward from Mortain and northward from Le Mans.

Even though von Kluge did extricate the bulk of his forces, Allied armor took a big toll of his desperate rearguard units, while U. S. and British airmen whose roaring aircraft dominated the skies, shot up the long columns in retreat.

Russ Slowed
As the Russian advance rolled into East Prussia and pointed closer to central Germany itself, Nazi resistance stiffened, with the Reds punching hard for shorter gains. To the north, 200,000 German troops in Estonia and Latvia cut off from Nazi forces in East Prussia, fought bitterly to ward off Russian attempts to outflank them and compel their surrender or push them into the Baltic sea.

In the hard fighting around East Prussia, the Russ were pressing on the province frontally from the east, and on the flank from the southeast. With the Russians 75 miles away from central Germany to the south, the Nazis threw in strong tank and infantry counter-attacks in an attempt to stop the Red steam-roller.

GERMANY: Drain Manpower

With German propagandists crying for three more months time to build up their sagging armies, Reichs-Mobilizer Paul Goebbels proceeded to drain the last drop of available manpower and bolster civilian economy by extensive use of women in industry.

According to reliable Swiss reports, about 80 Nazi divisions, or roughly 1,200,000 men, will complete training and be ready for action by the end of October, while another 30 divisions, or 450,000 men from this year's draft, will not be available before 1945.

In mobilizing every available man, technical workers, railway and postal employees, movie picture people were among those called.

CIVILIAN GOODS: Permit Production

With objections of the military chiefs overcome, the War Production board permitted the output of hundreds of items of civilian goods by manufacturers with surplus facilities and labor as the fourth step in its program of gradual reconversion. Previous steps included use of such former critical material as magnesium; construction of postwar working models, and permission to order machine tools.

Under the latest step, manufacturers in position to resume civilian production will obtain priority ratings for materials if they turn out such essential goods as vacuum cleaners, electric fans, heating stoves, pails and buckets, insecticide spray guns, electric flat irons, storage batteries, farm machinery except tractors, tire jacks, gauges and pumps, alarm clocks, copper animal traps and cages, and water storage tanks for agricultural uses.

Despite the WPB order, however, Production Czar Donald Nelson warned: "For the time being, it is not anticipated that any large increases in production . . . will be possible."

DROUTH: Heavy Rains Needed

With the prolongation of the drouth and hot, burning weather, heavy rainfall was needed throughout wide areas east of the Mississippi stretching clear to the Atlantic ocean, to save corn, soybean and garden acreage and nourish seared pasturage.

While areas west of the Mississippi river and in the south benefited from adequate rainfall, drouth-stricken Illinois, Indiana and Ohio reportedly suffered a loss of 33,000,000 bushels of corn, with Ohio one of the hardest hit states, with yields of the grain supposedly off 50 per cent and the potato crop almost a total loss. Because of wilting pasturage, farmers were compelled to dip into their dwindling feed reserves to supply livestock.

In New York, only a half an inch of rainfall in July retarded growth and razed pasturage, and in Massachusetts, the agricultural commissioner declared that an inch of rain would be worth $1,000,000 to the state's farmers.

PACIFIC: Good News

With U. S. air, naval and ground forces beating down Japan's strategic outer defense system, Adm. Chester W. Nimitz had a good word for those wondering about the formidability of the enemy in the Pacific.

Said Admiral Nimitz: "I am not sure or convinced that invasion (of the Japanese homeland) will be necessary to insure a winning peace."

To the question of whether air bombardment alone might bring Japan to her knees, Admiral Nimitz replied: "It hardly seems possible, because of the great distances involved, to deliver the same bomb tonnage on Germany and German positions in occupied Europe."

"I do not believe any single form of attack will defeat Japan. It will have to be a combination of every weapon—sea blockade, air bombardment, possible surface ship bombardment. . . ."

PRINTERS REJOIN AFL: The International Typographical union has completed the process of re-affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, after four years of separation. The printers' union paid a per capita tax on 64,000 members for August. In 1939, when the split took place, the union was paying on an average of 79,200 members.

GAS: Consider Boosts

Because of the "winning battle against the black market," OPA officials reportedly considered a boost in "B" card gasoline rations to 325 miles monthly from the 470 now prevailing in the Middle West and the 325 and 400 allowed on the Atlantic and Pacific coast areas.

In considering the boost, OPA officials recognized that many "B" card holders were salesmen or other people who depended upon the automobile for their livelihood, and present rations were insufficient to allow them an adequate range of coverage. Because a large part of black market withdrawals have come from "B" card holders, OPA said, an increase in their allotment would further decrease the illegal sales.

Because cuts in pleasure driving are not considered hardships, and rations for war workers and others are sufficient, there would be no increase in "A" or "C" rations, OPA officials said.

WAR COSTS: 277 Million Daily

Uncle Sam is spending $277,000,000 daily in the prosecution of the war, or per cent more than a year ago, when expenditures totaled $257,000,000.

During the first 38 days of the fiscal year 1945, which got underway in July, war spending approximated $10,000,000,000, roughly $1,000,000 more than at the same time last year.

On August 11, the public debt stood at $210,640,000,000, an increase of $63,558,000,000 since the same date last year.

Coaxed Out

After thinking it over, this Japanese soldier emerged from hiding in dugout on Tinian island in Pacific without offering suicidal resistance, still holding cigarette with U. S. marines used in coaxing him out.

WHEAT: 1945 Acreage

To provide fully for estimated needs at normal yields, the War Food Administration announced today a record crop of 1,132,000,000 bushels out of 1944 harvests, 1,900,000 more than was planted this year and 13,500,000 more than in 1943.

Because of the improved wheat supply situation this year, War Food administration established a record record crop of 1,132,000,000 bushels out of 1944 harvests, 1,900,000 more than was planted this year and 13,500,000 more than in 1943.

CANADA: Help Trade

Under an act of parliament, the Canadian government will get directly in back of its exporters in the postwar world to assure part of the rich 3 billion dollar foreign trade that the dominion now enjoys.

Terms of the act call for the government establishment of a corporation that would be empowered to issue insurance contracts to exporters up to 100 million dollars.

In addition, the government is authorized to guarantee obligations of those countries to which shipments may be made; to make loans to such countries to assure payments to exporters; and to purchase or guarantee the securities of such countries in order to provide them with the currency with which to buy from Canada.

Grain Carryover

As the result of a 40 per cent reduction from the previous year, Canada's wheat carryover approximated 355,000,000 bushels on July 31, lowest level since 1940.

Sharp reductions also occurred in stocks of oats, which stood at 108,000,000 bushels; barley, 45,000,000 bushels, and rye, 5,500,000 bushels.

PAWNSHOPS

High wages and plenty of work has brought hoards, dull times to the nation's pawnbrokers. Few people want to borrow money now, and those who do pay off their loans quickly. That means little interest income.

The other side of the game—the sale of unneeded pledges—is also at low ebb. Most shops sold out their stock of miscellaneous merchandise in the early days of the war. Now, with plenty of cash customers, the broker has little to sell.

Mother Reunited With Yankee Son In Chaos of Rome

Wife of Former Ambassador Finds Youth Driving An Ambulance.

ROME.—Frances Wilkinson Rosso, American-born wife of Augusto Rosso, former ambassador to the United States and her 21-year-old son by a former marriage, George Bunker, an American field service ambulance driver, were reunited after Mrs. Rosso had a chance encounter with her son's roommate near Vatican City.

The mother, who with the former ambassador had been released by the Allied occupation of Rome from eight months of virtual imprisonment in her son's apartment, had been questioning every American soldier she met about her son's whereabouts.

As she passed Vatican City an American ambulance pulled up to the curb and Walter Hackett of East Hampton, L. I., leaped out and hurriedly wiped off the windshield.

At Long Last.

"I don't suppose this will do any good, but my son is an ambulance driver—have you by any chance ever heard of him?" Mrs. Rosso asked. "His name is George Bunker."

"I know him," Hackett said. "I have lived and worked with him." Hackett said he would drive to Naples immediately and "pull Bunker off a ship" and bring him back to Rome.

"It is the hand of God," said the ambassador's wife. "With thousands of troops streaming through Rome on my son's roommate just happened to stop and wipe the mud off a windshield. And some people say they don't believe in miracles."

Bunker is the son of Arthur H. Bunker, former OPA executive for the aluminum industry.

The husband of my daughter, Mrs. James Hynes of Washington, is a naval officer on duty in the Pacific and with my own son in the field service, you can imagine what the night of American troops pouring into Rome meant to me," she said.

New Life as a Recluse.
Hackett said he had canceled plans to return to the United States and had signed with the field service for another year. He will spend his leave as the Rossos' guest in the apartment where the ambassador and his wife hid from the Nazis for eight months.

"I never once set foot outside of the apartment but my wife would go out occasionally to get water or for a stroll," Rosso said.

When used to go to St. Peter's now and then, it became too crowded with Germans," his wife added. "Living the life of a recluse was a new role for me. I had to learn to cook and keep house, as it was too dangerous to keep servants."

Rosso said his wife turned into an expert laundress and an excellent cook.

"Look at me," he exclaimed. "Don't I look like a victim of the best?"

Rosso said he had been asked to assume the post of secretary general of the foreign office, which he filled under the Badoglio government before the appearance of the Nazis in Rome drove him into hiding.

Marine Unaware Baby Is Dead, So Wife Steals One

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.—Unwilling to disappoint her husband, a marine sergeant who had been in the South Pacific 27 months, Mrs. Helen Kreger, 25, said today that she had a two-year-old girl to replace her baby who died at birth, Detective Inspector Harlan Gibbs reported.

Gibbs quoted Mrs. Kreger as saying her husband was unaware that their baby had died. The sergeant said the woman told him she could not resist taking the baby when she saw her in a downtown clothing store. She was booked on a kidnapping charge.

Mrs. Rosella Lucero, mother of the baby, told police her baby was taken from the store by a woman who had offered to watch the girl while she was examining some goods. The baby was returned to Mrs. Lucero.

Chutist Rides Thermal

Wave for Half an Hour
WASHINGTON—The young paratrooper leaped from his plane, yelling "Geronimo!" like all good paratroopers, but he didn't go down. He went up.

He watched his buddies swing in diminishing pendulums toward the ground, gazed anxiously as his airplane faded into the distance as he personally floated higher and higher.

"With no more control over his movements than a wisp of thistle-down," relates the official service magazine Air Force, "the paratrooper was tossed about on the point of a breeze."

He spent half an hour watching his outfit fighting a fierce mock battle on the ground. In time, the thermal wave released the young man and he came down to join his buddies in a fresh rescue.

The magazine said the peculiar voyage took place at Fort Benning, Ga.

Lawn Chair Is Like Mother's and Dad's

HERE is a pint-size lawn chair to delight the children and their young visitors. The seat is 10½ inches high, 13 inches deep and 15 inches wide—a good size for little ones now and roomy enough to be comfortable right up through their early teens.

A hammer and saw and screwdriver are all the tools you need to make this chair as well as the larger edition that you see in the sketch. All the pieces are straight cuts of standard wood, yet both of them have seats and backs at comfortable angles. The lines and proportions are good and the backs are removable for winter storage.

NOTE—Pattern 253 gives a complete list of materials, large diagrams for cutting all the pieces of the child's chair and step-by-step directions for assembly. Pattern 253 lists materials with diagrams and directions for the adult-size chair. Patterns are 15 cents each postpaid, or both patterns for 25 cents. Order from:

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

Brother, does your better-half belong to a Bridge Club? You lucky dog. Ours does and here is what she serves us every Tuesday night for supper immediately after returning home. Of course the menu isn't the same every week, but the ingredients are:

NOTES OF AN AFTERNOON BRIDGE-

Well, hello... sure didn't think you would make it... thought I'd never get my kids settled and get here on time... seems all just got here by the skin of our teeth... same old story, no help, no nuttin'.

After spending several minutes talking recipes, cooking, how to make buttermilk turn, and numerous other things, one member bid two buttermilks when her turn to bid came... brothers in service took up a large part of the conversation. One member had to write to her husband overseas and get him to write a letter back to her daughter, 6 years old, to try to get her to mind... then a little more bridge.

Then about these new teachers. Who they are and why... will they be good teachers... and is it the teacher or is my child just plain dumb... why don't they make the kids study more at home... the regular amount of Prisoner Camp talk and by-the-way, a little more bridge.

The afternoon has gone. Husbands are hungry, we must go home... refreshments are served and among much more conversation adults are said and all have enjoyed an afternoon of bridge.

See where the modern maiden's prayer is: "Dear Lord, please bring him back safe, sound and single."

"Chick" Fiquette says he went into a Montgomery Cafe the other day and when the waiter came by, he asked:

"Do you serve shrimp?" The waiter quickly answered, "We serve anybody, I'll get to you in a minute." Things awful.

Guess you heard about the mother who didn't want her daughter to get married. She cautioned her with: "I know, I have seen the folly of it." "Yes," answered the modern daughter, "but mother, I want to see the folly of it too."

What's this we hear about negroes around Thorsby laying for white soldiers who are returning to Montgomery on Sunday afternoon and night and robbing them. As yet we have heard of no actual robbery, but we did definitely hear of a case Sunday night where two soldiers were chased by five negroes and would have been badly handled had it not been for a passing motorist who picked up the white boys. The soldiers were brought to Clanton and put on a bus for Camp. The proper authorities have been notified of the incident, we understand, and should such a thing happen again some negroes in that section are in for quite a surprise.

Yep, there's goin' to be a Horse Show. And, by-the-way, our friend, Dr. W. L. Parrish ask that remind you that the kind of a Horse Show that is being presented by our Clanton group, isn't just a lot of fine horses being tied out for everyone to 'look over.' This show lasts about four or five hours and consists of showings of 13 classes of fine horses. There will also be a class for Clanton County horses and horsemen only that should be worth going a long way to see. Make this Horse Show a MUST in your Date Book.

Hear a lot of sentiment in favor of the stores closing on Wednesday afternoons the year around. Sounds like a good idea to us and looks like the "powers that be" would make a poll of the store owners and managers and get their reaction to such an idea. Goodness knows the clerks and 'bosses' too, as for that matter, are entitled to that one half-day each week to relax and do as they like. We believe it improves the quality of the help the other five and a half days in the week.

People are funny: Last January

we received numerous notices from City Clerk Hugh Simpson, that our City taxes on personal property were due.

In due time we proceeded to the City Hall and paid our City Taxes on Personal Property. Then, it seemed, we lived in the City Limits of Clanton. When the list of Clanton voters was prepared this week at the City Hall, our name was omitted because we lived outside of the City Limits. The house still sits in the same place as when we paid our City Taxes. It isn't the amount-it's the principle of the thing.

Chas. Wade and Mrs. Mary church Bentley have changed a bit the popular saying, "Life begins at 40." With them it is, "Flying begins at 40." Mrs. Bentley, of Springfield, Tenn., and a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. E. E. Upchurch, came down here to learn to fly. She did. After 12 hours of dual flying she soloed Monday afternoon. Chas. Wade says that's pretty good, and Chas. should know. He has taught hundreds to fly.

Qualified Voters List - City of Clanton

To The Citizens of Clanton:

Later, the Council and I will have a financial statement for you, but here I would like to thank you for your fine cooperation and indulgence during our administration.

I recall that four years ago, there was much ill feeling the day of the election because certain citizens' names were not on the voting list. The law requires the Mayor to prepare or have prepared a certified list of qualified voters of the City.

Because of the difficulty in picking names of voters in Beat 4, (which includes area in and around Clanton), who are qualified to vote in the coming city election, we are publishing the names as checked by a committee and are asking that all qualified voters check this list. If your name does not appear, please further cooperate with us by calling the City Clerk at phone 51 and giving your name as it appears on the voting list in the Probate Office so that we can add it to the list to be furnished to the election officials.

I am very anxious to have everything in order for a quiet and orderly election.

Again, thanking you, I am,

C. E. STAPP, Mayor.

SUNBEAMS HAVE PICNIC

Last Thursday several members of Circles Two and Four of the Baptist Church entertained a group of the Sunbeam children. They met at the church at eleven o'clock and went in a group to a woodland in North-Clanton near Mrs. Ben Sims and had a most delightful picnic. They enjoyed games, stories and a picnic lunch that was spread on the ground in real picnic style.

Those who so graciously helped with this picnic were: Mrs. Jim Blair, Mrs. Ben Sims, Mrs. John Mullins and Mrs. J. L. Teel. They were assisted with the games by Donna Blacketter and June Tucker.

HIGHLAND

Our Sunday School was well attended last Sunday, but there are some in our community who need to be here each Sunday. Let's all do our best to get them interested in our Sunday School, because it will do them good and be a great help to our church.

Remember next Sunday and Sunday night are our regular preaching dates and let's all keep in mind the first Sunday in September—the 3rd. We will call our pastor for the coming year. We ask all who are interested to be there on that day.

Don't forget Sunday School each Sunday at 10 o'clock. Come and bring someone with you.

CARD OF THANKS

I wish to express my heartfelt thanks and appreciation to the many friends who were so kind and willing to help me during my recent illness. May the Lord's richest blessings be yours.—Mrs. J. W. Calloway.

Keep Cool With Shrimp Salad in Aspic
(See Recipes Below)

Keeping Cool

There are still warm days ahead through late summer and early fall, and plenty of opportunity for keeping cool.

Formerly it was thought that one should eat extremely lightly of just low-calorie salads with hardly enough nourishment for the body, and cold drinks. Now we recognize the necessity of using enough proteins in the diet to keep the body in good condition, and also know that a cup of hot soup will be as cooling as the coolest drink.

Naturally our proteins may be in the form of salads for we like them especially well in the summer. Here is a good one using a shrimp in aspic, both cooling and nutritious:

Lemon Aspic.

Serves 6.
2 tablespoons gelatine
¾ cup cold water
1½ cups hot water
1½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon sugar
½ cup lemon juice
1 cup cooked or canned shrimp
1 cup chopped celery
Chicory or other salad greens
Sprinkle gelatine into cold water. Add hot water, salt, sugar and lemon juice. Cool, then add shrimp and celery. Chill in ring mold. Unmold on crisp salad greens. Fill with:

*Shrimp Salad.

(Serves 6)
½ cup cooked or canned shrimp
2 tablespoons french dressing
1 cup diced celery
1 cup lettuce, cut in pieces
1 cup peas
Mayonnaise to blend

Marinate shrimp 15 minutes in french dressing. Combine with remaining ingredients. Garnish the lemon aspic with lemon quarters and shrimps.

Do you ever feel that potato salad has a flat taste? That can easily be remedied by marinating the cubed potatoes in french dressing to give them an extra flavor.

*Creamy Potato Salad.

(Serves 6)
4 cups cold, boiled potatoes, cubed
½ cup french dressing
1½ teaspoons salt
1 medium onion, minced
3 hard-cooked eggs
¾ cup diced celery
3 slices bacon, fried and crumbled
6 sliced radishes
¼ cup mayonnaise or boiled dressing

Marinate potatoes in french dressing one-half hour. Toss together with remaining ingredients and serve with cold meats, wedges of tomato and cucumber slices.

Chicken Salad.

(Serves 6)
2 cups diced chicken or veal
½ cup diced celery
½ cup sliced, toasted almonds
Salad dressing
Mix all ingredients with enough salad dressing to moisten. Serve on lettuce and watercress.

If you are looking for fruity salads, there are any number the family will like:

Fruit Ginger Ale Salad.

(Serves 6)
1 tablespoon gelatine
¾ cup cold water or fruit juice
¾ cup orange or other juice
2 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup ginger ale
1 cup fruit

Soften gelatine in cold water. Place bowl over warm water and stir until gelatine is dissolved. Add sugar, salt and ginger ale. Chill, and when mixture begins to thicken, add fruit cut in small pieces (canned pineapple, pears, apricots, cherries or fresh fruit such as oranges, apples, grapes or bananas). Two tablespoons of ginger may be added if a high ginger flavor is desired. Turn into individual molds that have been rinsed in cold water. Chill. Unmold on lettuce and serve with mayonnaise.

Best Salad.

(Serves 6)
1 tablespoon gelatine
¾ cup cold water
1 cup cooked salad dressing
1 cup cream or evaporated milk, whipped
1½ cups chicken or diced veal
¾ cup almonds, blanched and chopped
¾ cup malaga grapes, canned pineapple or oranges
½ teaspoon salt

Soften gelatine in cold water. Place in dish over boiling water and stir until gelatine is dissolved. Cool and combine with salt, salad dressing, whipped cream and evaporated milk. Fold in chicken, using white meat, almonds, and skinned grapes, seeded and cut into pieces. Turn into mold, rinsed with cold water, and chill until firm. When firm, unmold and garnish with lettuce, almonds and grapes.

Fruit desserts? Here are two with apricots and peaches:

*Peach Crumble.

(Serves 6)
8 fresh peaches, sliced
¾ cup water
1 teaspoon lemon juice
¾ cup flour
1 cup brown sugar
2 tablespoons butter
½ teaspoon salt

Arrange peaches in buttered baking dish; sprinkle with water and lemon juice. Blend sugar, flour, butter and salt together until mixture resembles rough cornmeal. Sprinkle over peaches. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) until peaches are soft and top is brown and bubbly, about 35 minutes.

Apricot Dessert.

Fill honeydew melon ring with orange sherbet and garnish with apricots halved and peeled, marinated in lemon juice and cantaloupe balls.

JACKIE GLEASON is the first new comedian to hit the networks for the coming fall season; the August 13th debut of the Jackie Gleason and Les Tremayne show establishes him on the air waves. He's no stranger to the air, of course, after starting in "Hi Neighbor" and "Laughing at Murder," and now fans know him from his 12 pictures, including "Springtime in the Rockies." Currently he's starring on the Broadway stage in "Follow the Girls," when he finishes the stint he begins his new contract with 20th Century-Fox.

Gloria De Haven, one of the stars in the new Sinatra musical, "Step Lively," was singing for Gail Curci and Frances Alda when she was 12. They advised her to study for opera, but she took to modeling instead, then began her career in the movies. Played a showgirl in her first picture, will be a chorus girl in "Dr. Red Adams," a new Dr. Gillespie that will go into production soon.

John Hodiak is on his way up, and going fast. "Lifeboat" gave him a boost, and "Marriage Is a Private Affair," with Lana Turner, gave him another. So now he's set to play the coveted male lead, opposite Greer Garson, in Metro's "Valley of Decision."

An orange isn't an orange when it's been photographed by Chico Marx, it's a collector's item. Starring on Milton Berle's "Let Yourself Go," Marx did his stunt of playing the piano with an orange; it's now being cherished by the fan who had him photograph it.

Sonja Henie's new picture for International is "It's a Pleasure"—but in preparation Miss Henie rehearses two hours a day, six days a week, with male and female ice ballets, works on her own skating specialties two hours more, then rehearses dance steps all afternoon!

Four Metro pictures on 16-mm. film are now playing the Normandy beachhead "circuit." They are "A Guy Named Joe," "Meet the People," "See Here, Private Hargrove," and "Andy Hardy's Blonde Trouble"—and were being screened shortly after the battle smoke cleared.

Dinah Shore's off on a blind date—a date with the American fighting men overseas. She finished her chores in "Belle of the Yukon," International Pictures' new Technicolor musical show, made three months' supply of records, and sailed, to return to Hollywood in October.

An empire numbering 500,000,000 people, one-fourth of all the land and people in the world, is the subject of the March of Time's latest film, "British Imperialism—1944." It's the story of what war is doing to the empire, and of how the dominions feel about the mother country today.

Joe Julian and Paul Mann, regulars on the Norman Corwin CBS series, often alternate roles. Recently, when Corwin wanted the effect of a man running up and down stairs, Julian, who was playing the lead, had on rubber heels, so actually stepped into Mann's shoes, which he borrowed for the broadcast.

Pretty fancy, that accident Danny Kaye had. For a scene in "The Wonder Man," he and Vera-Ellen did an acrobatic dance routine, leaping through the top of a paper-covered native drum and alighting on a trampoline which would bounce them out of the drum. Kaye landed off balance, and was hurtled to the stage, with one leg twisted beneath him. So now they're shooting around him till he's recovered.

ODDS AND ENDS—Diana Lynn, soon 18, plays a heavy romantic role in "Out of This World," and gets her first screen kiss from Eddie Bracken. . . . Mae Clark, star of silent films, is playing a come-back role with Paulette Goddard in "Kitty." . . . The new format of CBS' "The Doctor File" is permanent, giving Raymond Massey a chance to act. . . . Those arm bands the husky males in "The Great John L." are really women's underwear—men's arm bands just aren't made any more. . . . After seeing Marie McDonald's work in advance scenes for "Guest in the House," William Goetz borrowed her for "It's a Pleasure."

Evicted So Fast She Left Teeth Behind

CHICAGO—When Frank Tardio, 45, evicted his wife, Ruby, 34, from their home last August, he didn't even give her time to get her upper plate from the dresser drawer, she told Judge Robert J. Dunne. The judge granted her permission to retrieve the teeth from the dresser, now in storage.

Quit Battle for Big O'Dea Estate

Claimants Agree to Waive Right to Appeal.

LOS ANGELES—Six years of litigation over the $4,000,000 estate of the late Michael Francis O'Dea became a closed incident with the announcement of attorneys here that unsuccessful claimants had agreed to waive their right to appeal.

Counsel for winning litigants said the losers will be reimbursed for the share they paid for transcripts of the case, one of the longest American trials on record, with five judges successively presiding.

Originally 485 persons made claims as heirs. All but 40 had been eliminated when the jury last March awarded the estate to three first cousins in Ireland.

Claimants ruled by the jury included Lucy Pay Bales, one-time winerwurst packer who claimed to be a daughter of O'Dea by his asserted marriage to a dancer, Mary Crane.

Another claimant was Mrs. Pansy Dunham, 68, of Toronto, Ont., Canada. A will giving her half of O'Dea's estate was filed in court in Los Angeles. Attorneys gave this account of the will: At the age of 20, Mrs. Dunham, then Miss Pansy Stevens, met O'Dea while he was on a business trip to Grand Rapids, Mich.

She rejected a proposal of marriage, but he wrote a will leaving her half of his property. Three years later she married and with her husband moved to Toronto. When Mrs. Dunham saw an account of the death of O'Dea and the search for heirs, she got out the will.

The three cousins awarded the estate are Mrs. Mary Lynch McCarthy, 80, of Limerick, Mrs. Bridget Lynch, 70, of O'Brien's, and James Lynch, 78, of Six Mile Bridge, County Clare, all of Ireland.

Since the original award was made, James Lynch has died, so that his share will go to his four sons.

Young British Grab Off U. S. Army Surplus Goods

LONDON—The U. S. army's "spring cleaning" just before D-day proved a field day for British children, mainly children, said an officer in the Journal of the National Association of Local Government.

He described the volume of discarded goods as "colossal. There were wooden boxes of all sizes, lifebelts, helmets, respirators, boots and clothing of every description. As soon as word passed around of this rich hoard, members of the public smarting under our English reflation launched an offensive in strength. As each lorry tipped its load they attacked."

The article said one official in charge of a garbage dump was "brushed helplessly aside by a stream of determined four-wheelers of all kinds, manned mostly by children armed with helmets, lifebelts, etc., far into the night. Tidiness and wartime economy of food scraps and clothing could not be said to be American virtues."

Army Takes Time Out to Pick Name for a Baby

SECOND ARMY FIELD HEADQUARTERS IN TENNESSEE—What are maneuvers compared to the importance of getting the right name for a new offspring?

That's what one mother thought recently. When a daughter was born to a captain's wife in Alabama, she immediately notified the adjutant general's office at Second Army headquarters and asked that her husband, on maneuvers, be informed. She also insisted that he be asked what he thought of the name, "Mary Ann," for his daughter.

The mother explained she didn't want to name the child without the concurrence of her husband.

P.S.—The adjutant general's office obliged.

Gives Veteran's Watch To Red Fighting Man

FAYETTE, ALA.—Wagner Sims lost his life on a battlefield in France 26 years ago, but soon his watch will be carried by a Russian fighting man on another battlefield on the other side of Europe.

The gold pocket watch was received by Russian War Relief, Inc., which has collected 21,000 watches for Russian doctors, nurses and guerrilla soldiers in the last year.

This watch will, I hope, aid some brave Russian fighting man," the donor, Margaret S. Campbell of Fayette, Ala., wrote. "It is contributed in memory of a fine young American who gave his life in World War I."

Origin of Pulp Paper

When a young German paper maker, Gottfried Keller, took a wasp's nest on a walk through the woods in the 19th century, he was impressed by the nest's texture, which was similar to rag paper produced at the mill where he worked.

He showed it to a chemist friend, and the two concluded the wasps made it from spruce tree fiber. They succeeded in making paper from wood, and thus the pulp paper industry was born.

NOTICE TO NON-RESIDENT

THE STATE OF ALABAMA, CHILTON COUNTY.

Circuit Court in Equity—No. 2240.

Dora E. Hancock, Complainant, vs. Martin V. Hancock, Sr., Defendant

In this cause it is made to appear to the Register by the affidavit of Dora E. Hancock that that his place of residence and post-office address is unknown, and that such address cannot be ascertained after reasonable effort; and, further, that, in the belief of said affiant, the Defendant is of the age of twenty-one years;

It is, therefore, ordered by the Register that publication be made in the Chilton County News, a newspaper published in the County of Chilton, once a week for four consecutive weeks, requiring him, the said Martin V. Hancock, Sr., to plead, answer, or demur to the bill of complaint in this cause by the 25th day of September, 1944, or, in thirty days thereafter, a decree pro confesso may be taken against him.

GERMANS SURRENDER TO CHAPLAIN AND CLANTON ASSISTANT

Ten Germans surrendered to Captain William M. Thompson, Army Chaplain, from Richmond, Va., and his assistant Corporal Curtis Bean of Clanton, Ala., recently in the Fifth Army's lightning drive toward Rome. "We didn't capture them," said Captain Thompson, who was unarmed. "We just stood there and waited until one of our infantry officers came along and took them away from us."

"They were as much relieved as we were when an infantry officer took them off our hands," related Corporal Bean.

Cpl. Bean is the husband of Mrs. Lorene Huett Bean, Clanton.

AWARDED AIR MEDAL

Sgt. John H. Penton of Clanton, Route 3, has been awarded the Air Medal by the headquarters of Major General John K. Cannon's Twelfth Army Air Force for "Meritorious achievement."

An engineer-gunner with a veteran Marauder Group, Sergeant Penton was decorated for a mission last January when Marauders attacked and destroyed enemy aircraft and caused heavy damage to hangars and field installations at Campino Airfield, Rome, Italy.

Sgt. Frank Russell from Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala., was a visitor to Clanton over the week end.

Sgt. Johnnie F. Merchant has returned to Camp in New River, N. C., after having spent a thirty-day furlough in Maplesville, Ala., with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Merchant, and other relatives and friends. Sgt. Merchant has spent 26 months in the Southwest Pacific.

Pfc. Aubrey Teel, Radio Instructor from Madison, Wis., returned to camp Wednesday after having spent a 15-day furlough here with relatives and friends.

KILLED IN ACTION

S-Sgt. Holloway B. Pittman (Pitt), son of Mrs. P. B. Pittman of Auburn, Alabama, has been reported as killed in action July 29th, in the Southwest Pacific.

While in Clanton for several years, Pittman made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Tom McKee.

S-SGT. EMMETT DERRELL PARRISH

Veteran of the North African and Italian campaigns, S-Sgt. Emmett Derrell Parrish is the guest of his mother, Mrs. James M. Parrish, dietitian at the Selma Baptist Hospital, following his return from overseas duty. He will report to Miami, Fla., September 1st for re-assignment.

Parrish, who was employed by the government at Auburn prior to entering military service before the attack on Pearl Harbor, spent twenty-two months in combat with an Engineers unit. Wounded three times, he has been awarded the Purple Heart. He participated in important campaigns throughout North Africa, Tunisia, Sicily and in Italy, seeing action at Anzio and on to Rome and beyond before he was granted his furlough under the rotation plan.

As both a builder and a fighter, S-Sgt. Parrish underwent many exciting experiences in combat areas, and he had the distinction of having a bridge erected by his unit above Rome named "Parrish Bridge" in recognition of his service during its construction which he supervised.

SCHOOLS OPEN TUES. MORNING SEPT 5TH

The Chilton County High School opens the 1944-45 session Tuesday morning, September 5th, at 9 o'clock. There will be a brief program in the gymnasium to which the public is cordially invited. The students will then be assigned to their home rooms where they will receive their schedules of studies, book lists and other information that is necessary to getting off to a good start in school.

The students will then go through their schedules meeting all their teachers and getting the assignments for the next day. This first day's work will require about three hours. This will mean that school will be in session opening day from nine o'clock in the morning until noon.

The County Superintendent of Education will likely announce the opening and closing time for all the county schools beginning with Wednesday, September 6. Also a list of the teachers for the high school this year will be found in another part of this paper.

TEACHERS NAMED FOR COUNTY

Teachers' Institute will be held at the Chilton County High School next Monday morning, September 4th, beginning at 9 o'clock, and all county schools will open the following day, Tuesday, September 5. The schedule for the first day, Tuesday, will run from 9 o'clock to 12 o'clock—War Time—for all schools. Beginning Wednesday, September 6, and continuing for two weeks, all schools will open at 8 o'clock—War-time, and dismiss 1:30—War-time so that children can aid with cotton picking.

Buses will operate under the same rationing regulations as were in force last year. The rationing regulations do not permit spur routes that are shorter than one and one-half miles. Consecutive stops closer than two-tenths of a mile, stops on hills, and the transportation of children by a school where their grade is being taught are also prohibited.

Several teaching vacancies have not been filled in the county system. A list of teachers for the white schools is as follows:

Alabama Mills—Mrs. Gertrude P. Calloway, Mrs. Earl Henson.
Baker Jr. High—John M. Parrish, Mrs. Willie Mae Wilder, Mrs. Alma J. Burton, Miss Nora Harris, Miss Olena Mims.

Chilton County High—Patterson Hicks, J. H. Camp, Mrs. Edna G. Kinney, H. W. Yeager, Henry M. Adair, Miss Elizabeth B. Barton, Miss Lois Black, J. F. VOCATIONAL CLASSES CLOSED

The classes in "Food Conservation," under the guidance of the vocational home economics teacher of the Chilton County High School, have closed for the Summer.

Many ladies in the county have taken a great interest in the program. From some sixty homes represented in the work, pantries are full of home preserved foods and plenty of dehydrated fruits. These classes agree wholeheartedly with the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Claude Wickard, in his statement, "Food will win the war, and win the peace."

The above are pictures of representation from the various classes who came into Clanton for the "Canning Rally." The ladies are looking forward to the completion of the School Community Cannery for their fall meat canning and late vegetables. The honor roll picture represents members of classes who were present for every meeting scheduled in their community.

They are: Mesdames Bill Coggins, Concord; Luther Mims, Mt. Pleasant; E. S. Short, Vermont; J. P. Smith, Vermont; D. L. Deason, Clanton Route 4; Everette Tippett, Concord; Luitie Short, Vermont; Zelma Robinson, Clanton; Doyle McKee, Clanton.

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers

Wise Cooks Use Their Ingenuity When Points Are Low

Leftover lamb makes a pretty salad when diced and crowned prettily by a celery wreath, then green pepper and red skinned apple slices.

Menus don't have to go begging just because ration points have been restored to a great many cuts of meat. In fact, this is the time when all good cooks will put forth all the ingenuity and inspiration they can stir up.

Less expensive cuts will give every bit the same nutrition as the most expensive ones, and with long, moist heat cooking they can be made just as palatable.

If you do decide to splurge on a roast or a ham occasionally, use the leftovers up so cleverly that the family will get a real palate thrill from them. It can be done!

And with that in mind, we're going right into our recipe round-up for today. First, the less expensive cuts come in for their share of attention with this Beef En Casserole:

Beef En Casserole.
(Serves 6)
1 1/2 pounds beef (neck, flank or shank), cut into inch cubes
3 strips of bacon
1 clove garlic, peeled
1 cup boiling water
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon black pepper
2 whole cloves
1 1/2 cups diced carrots
6 peeled small onions

Flour beef cubes. Cook bacon in heavy skillet until brown but not crisp. Remove. Add garlic to bacon fat and brown beef cubes on all sides. Remove garlic. Add water and seasonings. Heat to boiling. Turn into baking dish, adding vegetables and onion (cut into inch pieces). Cover and bake in slow (350-degree) oven for 2 to 2 1/2 hours.

Veal-Ham Loaf.
(Serves 6)
1 1/2 pounds ground veal
1 cup ground ham
2 eggs
1 cup fine bread crumbs
Grated 1/4 lemon
Juice of 1/2 lemon
1 cup milk
1 tablespoon butter, melted
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper

Mix all ingredients with a fork and shape into loaf. Place in loaf pan and pour 1/2 cup tomato juice over top. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) 1 1/2 hours.

Veal Schnitzel.
(Serves 6)
2 pounds veal steak (1/4-inch thick)
Seasoning
1 cup fine crumbs
1 egg
1 tablespoon water
4 tablespoons lard or bacon drippings
1 lemon
1 tablespoon flour
Pound veal to flatten out into thin

Lynn Says
This is the fruit season: Fresh fruit will easily solve the dessert problem. Here are ways to do delightful things to fresh fruits:
Fill melon rings with mint sherbet.
Peel bananas, sprinkle with lemon juice, cover with honey and bake until tender. They're good with cream.
Marinate cantaloupe balls in grapefruit juice and serve well chilled.
Apricot ice goes with grapefruit sections, orange slices and freshly sliced apricots.
Serve applesauce hot with marshmallows folded in just before dishing up.
Apple pie is the better made with a little orange juice and rind for flavor.

Lynn Chambers' Point-Saving Menu

pieces. Season. Cut into servings. Roll in beaten egg mixed with water, then in fine crumbs. Brown in hot fat until well browned. Add 1/4 cup water. Cover and cook slowly 30 to 35 minutes. Fold over in half when ready to serve with sliced lemon, hard-cooked eggs or pimiento olives as a garnish. Sour cream may be added to the fat in the pan to make a sauce for the schnitzel.

Only a little meat is needed in the next two recipes for that meaty flavor:

Chicken-Corn Pudding.
(Serves 4 to 6)
8 slices bread
1 can whole kernel corn
1/2 cup chopped chicken
3 eggs
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1/4 teaspoon paprika
2 1/2 cups milk

Arrange alternate layers of bread slices, corn and chicken in a greased casserole. Beat eggs, add salt, pepper, paprika and milk. Pour into casserole, adding more milk if necessary to cover mixture. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven 1 hour.

Tomato-Bacon Scallops.
(Serves 5)
2 1/2 cups cooked or canned tomatoes
1 cup peas, cooked or canned
8 slices bacon
2 tablespoons onion, chopped
1 cup diced celery
2 cups soft bread crumbs
Salt and pepper

Combine tomatoes with drained peas. Fry bacon slowly until crisp. Drain on absorbent paper; crumble. Cook onion and celery in 1 tablespoon bacon fat until lightly browned. Place 1/2 of tomatoes and peas into a greased casserole; top with one half of the bacon. Add onion and celery mixture and crumbs. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Repeat layers. Bake in a hot (400-degree) oven 20 minutes.

A leg of lamb is good eating as a roast and economical if it is served as leftovers in the form of creamed lamb or salad.

Lamb Salad Bowl.
(Serves 6)
2 1/2 cups diced cold lamb
2 cups diced celery
1/2 cup chopped green pepper
6 slices red apple
1 cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon fresh, chopped mint
Pile diced lamb in center of salad bowl. Arrange diced celery in a circle around lamb; repeat, using chopped pepper. Cut apple in half; core and slice cross-wise. Place slices around edge of bowl, peel side up, and extending about 1/2 of an inch above edge of bowl. Serve with mayonnaise to which has been added chopped, fresh mint.

Noodle ring with creamed leftover lamb and peas is another good suggestion for using bits of the leftover roast. The meat is extended with peas and gravy.

Creamed Lamb and Peas.
(Serves 6)
3 cups diced, cooked lamb
1 medium onion, sliced
3 tablespoons butter
2 cups leftover gravy
1/4 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Salt and pepper
3 green pepper rings, cut in half
1/2 cup cooked peas
Sauce of pineapple, if desired
Saute onion in butter until tender, add gravy and seasonings. Add meat and peas and heat through. Serve in noodle ring and garnish with pineapple and green pepper rings.

It's Time to Send Your Presents to Servicemen; 'Christmas Mail Month' Will Be Sept. 15 to Oct. 15

Privilege Granted On Overseas Gifts During This Period

The volume of Christmas mail going overseas to men and women in the armed forces this year will reach a new high, the office of war information predicts.

Approximately 33,000 uniformed men and women in the army and navy postal services are preparing for their biggest job—that of moving an estimated 70,000,000 packages of Christmas presents (three times as many as last year) to the military men and women overseas.

Army postal officers are preparing their organization to move about twice as many Christmas parcels as were handled in 1943, when 20,000,000 holiday packages were sent abroad.

The navy mail service expects nearly four times the volume of gifts handled in 1943 through fleet post offices in New York and San Francisco. A total of 7,480,000 packages went to the fleet post offices last year, 3,480,000 of them to advanced bases or ships at sea and 4,000,000 to ships putting in at American ports.

The service postal organizations can handle this enormous volume more easily with a little assistance from friends and relatives of soldiers and sailors. In 1943, the army post office transmitted more than 20 million holiday packages and an additional 75 million to 100 million pieces of miscellaneous mail.

The navy moved approximately 3,480,000 parcels overseas last Christmas and approximately four million packages to personnel on shore stations in the United States, and more than 80 million letters and Christmas cards during the Christmas mail period last year.

The army and navy intend to make every effort to deliver every Christmas gift overseas on time and intact. But a sailor will not be cheered if the gift he receives from his mother—for example—an expensive wristwatch—proves to have been ruined because it was completely buried in a box of cookies that have crumbled in transit, the navy said.

Distances, ice, cold, sand, dampness, fleet or combat operations, and the fortunes of war are hazards that complicate the delivery of all mail overseas, even without the Christmas rush. The only factor in Christmas gift delivery over which the sender has control is the type and condition of the parcel when it leaves his hands, the army and navy emphasized.

Mail Regulations.
1. Christmas mail month will comprise the 30-day period from September 15 to October 15, 1944, for all those in the armed services overseas.

This period is for the only time during which packages may be sent to soldiers overseas without a specific written request from the soldier or without an APO cancellation.

Only one package may be sent by or on behalf of the same person or Whenever the presents arrive is Christmas to soldiers across the sea. Sometimes the army and navy postal services deliver the goods sooner than expected, as happened last year in Italy, when packages from home arrived late in November. The boys opened them up at once, since they didn't know what they'd be doing or where they'd be on Christmas Day. It's safest to mail early, however, because unforeseen delays can come along any time.

The army recommends that the package container be a box of metal, wood, or solid double-faced, corrugated fiberboard, reinforced with strong gummed paper tape or tied with strong twine or both.

Standardized boxes for mailing Christmas gifts to military personnel overseas will probably be on the market by September 1, the War Production board reported. Approximately 16,000,000 special applications for the purchase by retailers and box jobbers of these boxes have been filed with WPB.

WPB said that the standard boxes are to be manufactured of 178-pound tested corrugated paperboard, 12 by 6 1/2 by 4 inches, in regulation slotted carton style with taped manufacturers' joints. The post office department also recommended that gummed flaps be supplied with the boxes for sealing the parcels, WPB reported.

Blanks for address and return address will appear on the panels of the box, also the statement "this box to be used only for sending merchandise to a member of the armed forces outside the United States."

4. Address the package completely and legibly. Print the address so that it will not run, streak, smudge or fade. Place an additional copy of the address and return address inside the package, so that if it comes apart, or the wrapper is torn, soiled, or lost, the additional copy may be used. Do not use gummed labels for addressing.

The army and navy point out that they know what not to send overseas for Christmas, on the basis of past experience. But what to send is another thing altogether. In general, soldiers and sailors are not to send gifts that are unobtainable where they are and remind them with special significance of home.

What Not to Send.

The services advise generally against sending articles that may be obtained by sailors in ships' service stores, or by soldiers in post ex-

SAUL REJECTED

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 13:1-23.
GOLDEN TEXT—"Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king"—I Samuel 13:13.

Moral failure is a direct result of disobedience to God's law. He established the moral order in the universe. His is the only right way, and the man who does not walk in God's way is wrong no matter how successful he may seem to be at the moment.

After a brief period of success, Saul sinned by intruding into the priests office at Gilgal (I Sam. 13:10-14). This was soon followed by his disobedience in the battle with Amalek (I Sam. 15:1-21). This brought final judgment from the Lord, and Saul stood revealed as I. A Self-Willful Backslider (vv. 10, 11).

Turned back from following? God means just one thing, that he would lead to self-will. These two principles, which are mutually exclusive, rule all actions of man—it is either God's will, or self-will.

Saul, who had every opportunity to make good as Israel's first king, lost out completely, and so turned away from God that God had to turn away from him, which is the thought expressed by "repenteth" (v. 11).

II. A Lying Hypocrite (vv. 12, 13).

Knowing that he had done just the opposite, Saul puts on his best "Sunday-go-to-church" manner and professed to be very pious, and completely obedient (v. 13). One marvels at his tergiversity, but not so much so when one thinks of those in the church who put on the same kind of a "front" to cover a worldly, self-centered life.

Nothing hurts the cause of Christ more than the nifty hypocrites who deny by their lives before the community the thing for which the church stands. By this way, you are a hypocrite, you are a liar, these lines are fire to God in repentance. You are in bad company.

III. A Proved Deceiver (vv. 14, 15).

The difficulty with falsehood is that the truth comes to light. With Saul it came quickly, for the sheep which he said were dead were alive enough to bleat at just the right time. The deceit of Saul thus was proved in the very instant of his false declaration of innocence.

"Be sure your sin will find you out" (Num. 32:23) is not just a religious truth, it is God's word. "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoever confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy" (Prov. 28:13).

IV. A Proud Disobeyer (vv. 16, 19).

Now Saul had to stand before Samuel and hear the words of God's condemnation. He had to face his own life and see there the ground of the judgment of the Lord. He was reminded of the day of his humble dependence on the Lord, which had brought him exaltation to the highest place in Israel.

To be small in one's own eyes is to be great in the eyes of the Lord. It is looking for the acceptable sacrifice of a humble heart (Ps. 51:17; Isa. 57:15).

The tumult and the shouting dies;
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we can cease.
—KEPLING

V. An Argumentative Evader (vv. 20, 21).

Once set in the way of disobedience, there seems to be no limit to the bold stubbornness of man. Instead of breaking down in contrition and confession, Saul tried to face the matter down by further argument and tricky evasion.

"I have obeyed," said he, "but the people, 'Who was king?' Did the people obey Saul, or Saul the people? There is nothing honest about laying your sins over on another. How often people do it!

Notice also that Saul became very religious again. If anything had been done that seemed wrong, it was with a good purpose; they were going to "sacrifice to Jehovah."

The sacrifices and ceremonies of religion are to aid and promote obedience, not to be a substitute. Disobedience can never be made a virtue, even though attended by a thousand sacrifices" (Stanley).

VI. A Rebellious Rejecter (vv. 22, 23).

"To obey is better than sacrifice." Oh, that we might learn well that lesson which God through Samuel tried to teach to Saul. We need to recognize that giving to the church, or working for the church, is not enough if there is no obedience to God; and with us that obedience must be the recognition of Christ as saviour and Lord.

Lit service, half obedience, a willingness to make sacrifices were not acceptable in the case of Saul. Be sure they are infinitely less acceptable to God in this day when we have His Son who wants to be our Saviour and to give us the enabling grace to obey His will.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Before the end of the year, rubber & latex are producing enough man-made rubber to fill all military and essential civilian needs, in the opinion of John L. Collyer, President of B. F. Goodrich, who forecasts the output of 800,000 tons of synthetic rubber in 1944.

Neglect of the rubber plantations now under Japanese control may be a benefit in disguise, according to authorities, since postponing the tapping of rubber trees tends to improve their subsequent yields.

Normally only one per cent of the rubber consumed in the U.S. went into the manufacture of medical, surgical, dental and drug supplies, while more than 72 per cent was used by the tire industry.

Packages get rough handling all along the way, and unless they are securely wrapped and tied, they may be damaged in transit. Here is a scene in the New York postoffice, showing how busy sorters toss parcels into the hand trucks. The big pile in the rear consists of packages that are coming undamaged—the string working off, or the wrapping loose. By the time your gifts have made the long trip in a mail sack, they have been subjected to a lot of bouncing around on the railroad and boat. The last stage may be made in a jeep or airplane.

First Railroad Post Office Carried Mail to Soldiers 80 Years Ago

Eighty years ago the first permanent railroad post office was established to speed up mail for soldiers. On August 28, 1864, George B. Armstrong, then assistant postmaster of Chicago, sent his first railway post, over its way over the Chicago and North Western railway from Chicago to Clinton, Iowa. Within a few years the new system of expediting the mails spread to include the principal trunk lines of the nation. Practically every nation in the world adopted the idea eventually.

Armstrong instituted the service with approval of the postmaster general as a means of facilitating distribution of mail, particularly to men in the army. From the first, Armstrong envisioned a national system and lived to see his plan become a success, despite public doubts and ridicule when he first announced his plan.

On the first trip 80 years ago prominent Chicago newspapermen, bankers and civic leaders went along to witness the initial operation. One banker refused to be convinced of the plan's practicability, remarking that "all the mail would blow out of the car."

Although Armstrong is generally credited with the first permanent railway post office, others preceded him by a few years with similar plans. All, however, were devised to meet local emergencies and no plan operated more than a year.

We're sorry to learn of the death of Staff-Sgt. Holloway Bickerstaff Pittman. "Pitt" was our friend and we liked him a lot. He was killed in action in the Southwest Pacific Area July 29th. No details have been learned. "Pitt" had many friends in Clanton and Chilton County who will mourn his death.

The height of something or other occurred last week when a fellow came up to us on Sunday morning and wanted to know if any of the filling stations were open. We told him no. It seems that he had run out of gasoline and had to get to Birmingham. We told him that he could drive down the highway a mile or so and find a station open where he could refuel. Upon learning that he would be able to get gasoline to continue his journey he paused and asked, "Is it Gulf?"

Wonder what in the world the two young girls could have been dreaming about last Sunday afternoon when they let the management close the New Wadesonian Theatre and them locked inside. Several minutes and numerous trips up and down the street were required before Minnie Wade sent a rescuer down to release them.

The small daughter, (only five this month), was sitting in the kitchen the other afternoon eating a fresh doughnut that her mother had given her. Suddenly she said, "Mother, I sure am glad you got these doughnuts. This is what I have been wanting for years."

Had you ever considered the letter "e"?

The letter "e" is the unfortunate of the alphabetical family. It is always out of cash, forever in debt, never out of danger, and in hell all the time. For some reason the fortunes of the letter have been overlooked. So we here call attention to the fact that the letter "e" is never in war but always in peace; it is in the beginning of existence, commencement of ease and the end of trouble. Without it there would be no meat, no life, and no heaven. It is the center of honesty, makes love perfect; and without it there could be no news, editors nor devils.

—JOHN J. FISHER.

There were thirty Alabama anti-fourth termers willing to go to the Birmingham Convention and stand up and be counted. Actually there are more of them than that in Alabama, but they were so busy at home making money under the Roosevelt Administration that they could not spare the time for a trip to Birmingham.—Montgomery Journal.

GO TO SCHOOL DRIVE ANNOUNCED FOR COUNTY,
STATE AND NATION

The widespread employment of school-age youth has taken thousands of American high school children out of their classrooms and many of these children will not return to school because of the lure of high wages being earned by them. County, State and National leaders are urging all young people to consider carefully the choice between present employment and continued schooling, pointing out that even though present wages are attractive, the post-war period will bring renewed demands for training and preparation in all types of work. Dr. John W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, gives the following advice to all Americans of high school age who are not in the armed forces:

"Even now, at this moment when our gallant fighters are locked in battles around the world; even now, when our total energies at home must be focused on producing the vast materials of war; even now, we say to our boys and girls: Go to school.

"Go to school, and learn all you can from your teachers, your books, your laboratories and your schoolmates. Learn how people live together harmoniously, work together creatively, play together joyously, and think together courageously.

"Knowing such things will be of far greater value to you than any dollars and cents you earn now. Understanding such things, you will be able to take hold of the peace we win, and molding it with your young hands and hearts make it the beginning of a never-ending great adventure."

Local school officials heartily endorse the above statement. Children can quit school now and make a good living insofar as money is concerned, but education is necessary for complete and continued success and cannot be postponed. GO TO SCHOOL NOW, ALL CHILTON COUNTY CHILDREN is the advice given by local school officials.

One of the most important uses of skim milk as a food is in cheese. Cheese is easily made and is being used in the diets of many Alabama farm families. It contains about the same amount of protein as lean meat or eggs.

Farmers have been using income from the record breaking crops of the last two years to pay off the mortgage. From 1940 to 1944, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics reports a decline in the total of farm mortgages of nearly a billion dollars ($52 million) and $850,000,000 of this amount was in 1942 and 1943.

Infertile eggs keep much better than fertile ones. Nest material needs to be clean at all times. Clean hen houses and roosts help keep eggs clean.

COUNTY HAS 12 VETS OF WORLD WAR ONE IN FSA PROGRAM

Marvin Durbin, County Supervisor of the Farm Security Administration announced recently that 12 veterans of World War One are currently enrolled in the FSA program in this county. Of this number two have purchased farms of their own under terms of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, while nine are farming in the rehabilitation program.

Success of the veterans in their journey towards family type farm ownership, Mr. Durbin said, has been largely due to the interest and assistance of the County FSA Committee. The committee has advised the veterans in the choice of good farm land, sound farming practices which include and poultry, and soil conservation.

"It is this kind of help which enables a borrower to meet his obligations and eventually to attain the goal of all borrowers — farm ownership," Mr. Durbin said.

Members of the County FSA Committee are: Ollis H. Lawrence, B. C. Lenoir, and L. S. McCraw.

In Alabama, he said, a total of 113 World War One veterans have purchased farms of their own with FSA help while 566 are actively enrolled in the rehabilitation program. An additional 261 have paid their rehabilitation loans in full.

Every milking cow should have all the good roughage she can eat at all times. If the roughage supply is more than enough for the cows on hand, plan to add enough cows to use it up if possible—feeding all of it will add to the Nation's milk supply.

The 8 Point Program

1. Grow more legume hay, pasture, and grain.
2. Fertilize to increase quantity and quality of feed.
3. Feed to avoid summer milk slump.
4. Feed cows liberally during their dry period.
5. Keep as many cows as feed and labor permit.
6. Market more whole milk whenever possible.
7. Produce good-quality milk and avoid waste.

The marriage of Miss Dorothy Patterson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Still to Joseph H. Williams, son of Rev. and Mrs. G. G. Williams of Clanton, was solemnized at 5:00 p.m. Sunday afternoon, August 27th, at the bride's home.

The Rev. Cecil Little of Howard College performed the ceremony in the presence of the parents of both the bride and the groom.

The bride wore a navy blue and white crepe dress with navy and white accessories. The corsage was of white roses, white gladioli and baby breath.

Miss Lanette Williams, sister of the groom was the bride's only attendant. Her dress was black crepe, with flowers of sequens around the neck-line. Her corsage was white roses, white gladioli and baby breath. Naval Aviation Cadet J. B. Davis, Jr., cousin of the groom, was the best man.

A reception followed the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Davis, Willodean Davis, Mrs. Frank T. Woodward of Birmingham, Mrs. R. C. Burkhalter, Miss Juanita Newell, Mrs. Faye Zimmerman, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Wagoner of Clanton.

The couple left after the reception for a short wedding trip to Birmingham.

TEMPLE CHURCH

The revival at this place has just closed. Rev. A. T. Hickman preached some wonderful sermons, which were both stirring and informative.

The most impressive service was held last Friday night. It was a new kind of service for this section of the country. We have never seen anything like it before. It was a special patriotic service in honor of the soldier boys who have gone from this church and also for all the other soldier boys from this community.

The service began with a trumpet solo, "The Star-Sprangled Banner," by Andrew Hickman, followed by several patriotic songs by the choir and congregation. There was also special songs by the Sandlin Family. The message for the occasion was, "America at War," by Rev. Hickman.

A beautiful banner with a star for each boy who has gone from the church and Sunday School to the armed services of our country, was dedicated and placed in the church for the duration of the war. Special prayers were prayed for the soldiers and all Christians were exhorted to continue to pray for them until they return home. Several letters from the boys who had written back home and requested prayer were read.

Another impressive part of the service was the display of pictures of many of the boys with a note, giving the name of the boy and place of his service. Special mention was made of Isaac Thomas, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Thomas, who has already made the supreme sacrifice while his picture was being unveiled.

Then as all the congregation stood with bowed heads, breathing a silent prayer for the soldier boys, we heard the sound of the taps echoing from some place outside the building. It caused a feeling of awe.

The whole service was very impressive and was attended by large crowds.

EUROPE:

Clearing France

With swift Allied columns hacking at their hard-pressed flanks in the north, remnants of German Marshal von Kluge's Seventh army straggled across the Seine toward the borders of their homeland, while to the south, other Allied mechanized forces swept forward before weak resistance.

Having pulled the bulk of his Seventh army out of the Falaise-Argentan trap in Normandy, von Kluge confronted another immediate threat when dashing Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton raced his armored columns to the retreating Germans' rear along the Seine river and harassed their crossing.

With Patton's men slashing the enemy's flanking rearwards near the Seine, British and Canadian troops pressed against the Nazis from the north of this pocket, and all the while swarms of Allied planes roared overhead, bombing the Germans' frantic withdrawal eastward.

As the Allies by-passed Paris to concentrate on the crumbling German defenses in the north, that famed French capital fell to Patton forces after brisk skirmishing

Aided by mobile surgery and reconditioning treatment, 96 per cent of the wounded American soldiers have recovered, with about two-thirds returning to duty, the war department said. From figures compiled between June 25 and July 25, the department said 23 per cent of the men released from hospitals with serious physical limitations elected to remain in service.

Inside the city with Nazi rear-guard.

Armed patriots also were rising throughout all of southern France as Allied armies drove northward from beachhead positions along the Riviera and around Bordeaux. Meeting slight German resistance in the scenic mountain country, the U. S. and Free French columns fanned out in all directions, while big cities like Marseilles, Grenoble and Lyon came within their grasp.

The French political picture took another quick turn, with Charles de Gaulle established firmly on home soil, and the Collaborationist government of Pierre Laval in exile. Having refused to leave French soil, 88-year-old Chief of State Marshal Petain reportedly was taken prisoner by the Germans.

EASTERN FRONT:

Fighting Stiffens

With the Germans standing their ground and beginning to fight back after deep withdrawals into central Europe, the war increased in intensity on the eastern front, with the Russians still knocking hard at the door to East Prussia.

While bitter fighting raged on the East Prussian border, Nazi troops to the north cleared a corridor to their Baltic armies previously shut off by a quick Russian thrust to the Gulf of Riga.

In the flaming fight for Warsaw, Russian troops gained ground to the northeast of the city in bitter tank and infantry battles, while south of the city, the Reds brought additional forces west of the Vistula river to menace the flat, plains country leading to the border of the Silesian industrial province of Germany.

Equally stubborn fighting flared on the northern Romanian border, where the Russians drove for the rich Ploesti oil fields. Early fighting was marked by the Germans' abandonment of the big industrial city of Iasi, hub of the Nazis' successful defense of the region last spring.

MISCELLANY

BLOOD BY AIR: Transport of whole blood to combat zones by airplane has been inaugurated. For some purposes it has been found that whole blood containing red corpuscles, is more successful than blood plasma. The Red Cross office announces that 1,000 more pints of blood from donors will be needed daily as a result of the new shipments.

COTTON:
Wants Parity

Advising cotton growers to keep their product off the market to boost prices, Sen. John H. Bankhead (Ala.) declared his willingness to fight to Christmas to bring returns up to parity.

Sponsor of an amendment to the price control bill ordering increases in textile prices to reflect parity, Bankhead conferred with manufacturers, shippers and government officials on means of raising cotton returns, with consideration given loans from 95 to 97½ per cent of parity as a last resort if other methods fail.

In advocating withholding of cotton from the market, Bankhead clashed with famed Georgian Agrarian Tom Linder, who said such action would result in the government dumping its stocks to further aggravate the price situation. Countering Linder's statement, Bankhead said that with prices now depressed because of insufficient demand, farmers should put their cotton in loan until a profitable marketing program was developed.

FUEL:

Supplies Cut

With demands exceeding production, civilian stores of industrial fuel oils, heating oils and gasoline declined 32 per cent from the fall of 1941, Deputy Petroleum Administrator Ralph K. Davies reported.

Next to industrial fuel, stocks of gas showed the biggest decrease, being 63 per cent of 1941 supplies. From July 1 to August 5, Davies said, shipments exceeded production by 96,000 barrels a day, with stocks totalling 438,600 barrels as of the latter date.

Reserves of heating oils showed the smallest dip, being 88 per cent of the 1941 figure.

VETERINARIANS:

Report Progress

Approximately 100,000 dairy cows in New Jersey, New York and Wisconsin received artificial insemination in 1943. Dr. C. S. Bryan of East Lansing, Mich., told the American Veterinary Medical association convention in Chicago.

Delegates also were told of plans to provide for equal distribution of veterinarians throughout the country after the war, and of the current practice of promoting preventive medicine through proper nutrition, breeding, management and sanitation.

Speaking of artificial insemination, Dr. Bryan declared: "The advantages of this method such as extending the usefulness of outstanding sires and providing thousands of dairy herds with the services of prize bulls which would otherwise not be available to them, are obvious."

News Briefs

As a product of Japan's current deliberations on postwar problems, the Tokyo radio said, Japanese statesmen have conceived the development of a co-prosperity system based upon division of the world into three spheres of influence—East Asia, North and South America, and European—with leader nations in each one promoting neighborliness, joint defense and business.

Back from a tour of Soviet Russia, Eric Johnston, president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, declared: "In my travels I have rediscovered America. Never before did I realize the importance of our freedom, our corporate life, our right of habeas corpus, our bill of rights."

If plans materialize, the Erie railroad's 4 per cent first mortgage bonds issued in 1847 will be retired. Due in 1947, the bonds are the oldest railroad securities outstanding.

JAP RELOCATION:

Seek Return to Coast

Three American citizens of Japanese descent—one the widow of a Japanese-American soldier killed in action, and another a discharged U. S. Army—filed a writ in federal court in San Francisco, Calif., seeking the right to reestablish residence on the Pacific coast.

Although the complainants did not challenge the validity of the original exclusion order, they said that grounds for its issuance no longer existed, in view of the fact that there was no apparent danger of a Japanese invasion and the army itself has recognized this by taking such steps as cancellation of demount regulations on the west coast.

Of 112,000 Japanese-Americans evacuated from the Pacific coast, some 70,000 of loyal character scattered throughout relocation camps in the west would be affected by the decision. Another 27,000 have been relocated in jobs elsewhere in the country, while 18,000 disloyal Japanese-Americans have been segregated at Tule Lake, Calif.

LIVING COSTS

A slight rise in the cost of living took place in the National Industrial Conference board reports. For the country as a whole the increase was .06 per cent as compared with June. Sixty-three industrial cities are included in the monthly survey. In all but six the cost items advanced.

The largest rise was in Trenton, N. J., where a jump of 2.2 per cent was noted. Declines were few and small, the greatest being only .04 per cent in Spokane, Wash.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

The much-mooted question of states rights as against the over-centralization of government in Washington—which is lumped neatly into the one word "bureaucracy"—is due for a thorough airing in the coming political campaign.

The recent debate in the senate over reconversion, especially in the contest over whether the federal government should administer the unemployment payments during the change-over from war production to civilian production, is a good example.

There will be much sound and fury, much thundering in the index on this subject. Little will be found to have been accomplished on the dust settles. For in the question we behold an interesting paradox. New Dealers as well as Republicans, left-wingers as well as right-wingers, deplore the growing centralization of power in the federal government as a threat to democracy. And yet all of them, when they sit down to look at the facts, admit privately that there is little or no chance of checking this trend.

The very groups which oppose the tendency toward the creation of more federal machinery and denounce the bureaucrats the loudest, are insistent that enough of the bureaucrats who handle their special interests be spared whenever the axe threatens to fall.

It is upon this little inconsistency that President Roosevelt always hangs his rebuttal whenever Senator Byrd and other critics of his lavish government spending call for a reduction of the government payroll.

Of course, the war badly disturbed the traditional democratic institution of checks and balances and lifted private enterprise right out by the hair and sat down in its place with the brutal indifference which is associated with Mars. The federal government today finds itself doing business on a scale larger than all peacetime enterprise put together. Some of these activities are necessary to attack when normal times finally return, but the trend toward bureaucracy started even before that.

According to Alfred Bingham who has written a book called "The Practice of Idealism," which you ought to read whether you can agree with it or not, the trend toward bureaucracy is due largely to two of five revolutions which he says are going on now.

Bingham says that "revolution resulted from the pent-up pressure of delayed social change." He believes that, like water-power, it can "either sweep in a destructive flood over peaceful cities and farms," or it can be controlled and turned to beneficial uses.

'Revolt of Common Man'

Encourages Bureaucracy

The first of the revolutions he names, and one of those which has encouraged bureaucracy and increased the demands on the federal government's manpower, is the "revolt of the common man." Of course, that revolt has been going on just since the start it got at the barricades in Paris and the events which occurred between Lexington and Yorktown, but the depression of 1929 moved it ahead quite a peg in this country, to say nothing of what happened after World War I all over the world, including the birth of communism, fascism, and all their freak off-shoots.

Bingham says it was the call of the common man for social and economic security which was one of the two chief causes of the growing centralization of government. He cites as two examples, the labor group which demanded that their interests be looked after, and the farmers. (The labor department, which had been a part of the department of commerce since 1903, was created a separate unit in 1913.) Bingham says that the vast organization under the department of agriculture was the result of the insistence by farmers that the department be recognized and assisted.

The second revolution, the demands of which brought about additional federal activity, according to Bingham, was the technical revolution, another name for the industrial revolution which has made mass production and all the wonders of the machine age possible. Billion-dollar corporations required some government control, various industries, notably those producing and using the automobile and the airplane called for highway and skyway encouragement, regulation and guidance. The huge department of commerce, with its many activities conducted to aid business became a separate entity in 1903 and has grown steadily since.

And right here we might assert that the common man, and, if you will, the less common man, worker, farmer, artisan, executive or entrepreneur although he joins merrily in the chorus denouncing the bureaucrats in general, doesn't want the particular bureaucrat who is ready to help his particular interest, disturbed, if he does not actually demand the services of such a bureaucrat, he may create a situation which his competitor, or those who may become his victim, insist must be controlled by the government.

Of course, Mr. Bingham's answer to all this is that a growing expansion of governmental powers is all right, so long as it is self-government. Without that, the question left is exactly how badly the bureaucrat is really hated.

But you will find that there are bureaucrats and bureaucrats.

You will find no complaint about the civil servant who carries out the decrees of the people's duly elected representatives, provided, of course, they have been sponsored, not to say lobbied, through congress at said complainant's request.

Let us consider the following statement concerning one bureau, presumably administered, if I read my Webster right, by bureaucrats: "Federal aid in building and maintaining highways, as carried out under Republican administrations and since continued, is a sound and comparatively harmonious program..."

GOP Has Some Kind
Words for Bureaus

"Federal responsibility (regarding agriculture) should be directed to such economic stabilization practices as crop insurance, crop insurance of fair market prices..."

Who says this? The 26 Republican governors assembled in St. Louis early this month to back Mr. Dewey's presidential campaign.

Bingham says that both the "common man" and likewise, the "uncommon man," and if you want further support for Mr. Bingham's thesis that the leaders in the world of technology, the men who own the machines and supervise their operation, like some of the bureaucrats, note the statement from authentic sources that to encourage the perpetuation of some of the functions of the OPA and the WPB because it is thought they can help stabilize industry.

On the other side of the medal, again, just to preserve a nice balance, what about the GI Bill of Rights? The law put into the hands of the federal government the administration of the greatest welfare program ever framed. I take it that high, low and middle are willing to pay for the bureaucrats that run this program out of the federal treasury. It was passed unanimously by congress.

So it goes. We can build down the debate in congress over unemployment insurance and the effort to put the administration of the payments into the hands of the states, into a much more immediate and practical question than the broad principle of states rights, centralization of government or the growth of bureaucracy. It is a simple matter here of whether the administration (any administration) handing out the benefits directly, sets up the office holders who do the handing out, or whether the state governments (state political machines) assume these gracious functions. In other words, who gets the political support in return?

I'm sorry but that's the way it is.

JIM FOLSOM IN CHICAGO

(Taken from the Tell It To Grand-Ma" Column of The Montgomery Advertiser).

Editor, The Advertiser:

From reading the articles of your political writer, Atticus Mullin, I've formed the opinion that he got a lot of pleasure out of knocking and criticizing Delegate Jim Folsom at the national convention in Chicago. In one article he states that a group of four or five heckled Sparks. That this group of men was headed by Jim Folsom, whom Sparks overwhelmingly and everlastingly defeated for governor, is thoroughly familiar with that race. All know that it was fate that elected Sparks, and I am of the opinion that Jim Folsom would have defeated Sparks if the campaign had been two or three weeks longer.

In other articles, your writer mentioned and criticized language of Folsom, his height, size of feet, his political affiliation with the CIO (because he voted for Wallace), and it is a pity that he was a delegate at the convention.

Jim Folsom finished high school and had four years in college. It is bad about his height and especially his big feet; he cannot find socks that will fit him.

When Sparks extended invitation to all delegates (which was a few days after election) to dine with him and Governor Broughton at the Mansion, Jim Folsom accepted. He stated then that he was for Roosevelt, and that he was for an Alabamian, preferably Bankhead, for vice-president as long as there was a chance for a local statesman, after which he would cast his vote for Wallace. Folsom made a statement then that he was not going to be a "yes" man for Sparks. Folsom voted for Roosevelt and Bankhead and after Bankhead withdrew, he voted for Wallace as he had pledged himself to do. Folsom is for the Democratic ticket and should his services be needed, he is subject to call.

Atticus tries to leave the impression that Folsom is controlled by the CIO and that he will also fight Bankhead four years from now. Jim Folsom is not bossed by any group or man, and I know that he considers Bankhead a great statesman, and should the time come when Bankhead needs him, he will be by his side.

As a candidate for governor, I am sure Folsom would like to have the labor vote. All candidates wait this vote and will fight for same.

Before convention the CIO endorsed Roosevelt as candidate. I am sure he appreciates this endorsement. In your July 29 paper under head, "Here Is What Wallace Said That Made Southerners Mad," Atticus Mullin quotes part of Wallace's speech and states "Roosevelt stands for all this." He again brings out the fact that Jim Folsom voted for Wallace. He does not mention the fact that Folsom and 21 other Alabama delegates voted for Roosevelt.

Atticus, according to 'your own statement, Roosevelt and Wallace stand for the same principles; both were backed by the CIO. Why center your fight on Jim Folsom? Is it not your personal dislike for him?

In your article dated July 22 you state Folsom made the remark, "Boys you know we must have the Negro vote to win." This statement had no bearing on Alabama or Alabama politics. Roosevelt, Truman and all Democrats want the Northern Negro vote if they must vote. Dewey must want that vote also. Recently, he (Dewey) appointed Frances E. Rivers, a Negro, Justice of the New York City Court at a salary of $17,500 per year, the highest honor ever bestowed upon a Negro in New York.

Folsom must have some friends. In his race for delegate at large, he did not ask anyone to vote for him. During campaign he was on the Atlantic Ocean and in foreign countries. Your writer, Atticus Mullin, was against him, Sparks and his lieutenants fought him, and in spite of the above opposition, ten out of every eleven voted for him. Folsom has lived in three counties during his lifetime. Born and raised in Coffee, lived about two years in Marshall, and at the time of his race for governor, he had lived in Cullman about two and one-half years. The vote in those counties was: Coffee, Folsom 2,122, Sparks 873; Marshall, Folsom 3,011, Sparks 2,384; Cullman, Folsom 2,748, Sparks 1,696.

Recently, Folsom was elected as post commander of the Cullman post American Legion. This was unknown to him until after he was elected and a committee went to his home and had him come to the American Legion Hall.

Editor, after reading carefully your political writer's articles, don't you think he struck below the belt? It seems more like a personal grudge.

My first thoughts are of the boys on foreign soil, giving their lives and suffering. Let's all pull and work for everlasting victory, a speedy return for them, and for a Democratic victory in November.

After the boys return we can start a gubernatorial campaign and should your writer, Atticus Mullin want to represent a candidate, I feel sure Folsom will meet him in debate anywhere.

SHILOH

Since the weather was bad Sunday we did not have any service, but let's remember next Sunday and Sunday night are our regular preaching times, so let's have a large crowd to hear the interesting message our pastor, Rev. J. L. Bice, will have for us. Remember our B.T.U. social will be at Cary Mullins's Saturday night. All the members are asked to bring cookies and sandwiches to help with the refreshments.—Reporter.

What Has OPA Accomplished?

To us that sounds like a foolish question, but we are much more in contact with condition than maybe those who say, "It's not necessary to have to go to all the trouble we're forced to." Or many express themselves in a very disgusted manner—"I'll be glad when the whole mess is over and I can run my business without being told by someone else how I may or may not do."

Who wouldn't be glad for conditions to be as such? But until our fighting forces can down the enemy, who has demonstrated to us all that his idea of running things is to forever take your rights and force you to do as he wishes.

Isn't it better that we co-operate with our government on just a temporary plan that supports our aim, even though we are sometimes forced to do the necessary things to accomplish what we, after all stand and fight for (freedom), than it would be if we did not have men as law makers and government heads that have foresight and experience enough to just let things happen.

Don't you suppose that we would be quoted and referred to as the following countries:

In Mexico where there is no price control furnished, houses have gone up from $100 to $300 per month since 1940.

Inflation in the Philippines: Meat is $100 per pound; in Southwest China wristwatches cost $500. That sounds exaggerating because that's a distance off, but we can refer to conditions of the World War I, when we paid such prices as 33 cents per pound for sugar, when today the top prices are seven cents per pound and many other items in comparison. And just another thought that'll make all of the trouble and worry we've had in endeavoring to hold down inflation is to be able to show those boys who are coming back, that in appreciation for everything they've done and the great trouble, worry and sacrifice they've made. We have done one thing we feel proud of and that is they return to a land that still has fair prices and a high standard of living at a decent cost. Don't you feel that would show him the kind of home-coming he'd appreciate?

Don't you know that it would make it easier for him as well as all of us to re-establish ourselves with normal price levels than it would be to attempt to do so with everything at an unreasonable and high price condition?

So, we cannot relax in our efforts to keep prices in line to hold down the cost of living for one minute. If we were to let go of the price line now, it would be the same thing as having down the flag destined for the captured fortress, before the final victory is complete; as quoted by one of our regional executives, "We can't have our flag of victory waving on top of our economic citadel until we know that victory is complete and the peace, as well as the war, has been won."

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics figures, food prices have risen 48 percent since September, 1939, a period of 59 months. In the same period during the last war, food prices went up 78 percent.

Since controls were applied in May, 1942, they have increased 14 percent, thanks to our heroic efforts. But the point is, most of that 78 percent rise during the last war came after the Armistice had been signed.

Can we afford to let the same thing happen after this war has been declared at an end?

I'm sure you'll agree that our hardest job is ahead in holding down the price line in the face of our over-optimism that once the war is won, everything will automatically go back to normal.

We cannot let the work we have done go in vain, and I'm confident that we will not.

NOTICE OF THE FILING OF BILL OF COMPLAINT BY STATE OF ALABAMA, Complainant, vs. one 1934 Model Chevrolet Coupe, Respondent.
State of Alabama, Complainant, vs. One-1934 Model Chevrolet Coupe, Motor No. 4108330, Respondent.

In the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama, In Equity.
The Bill of Complaint of the State of Alabama, on the relation of A. B. Foshee, County Solicitor of Chilton County, Alabama, against one 1934 Model Chevrolet Coupe, Motor No. 4108330, being exhibited to me, and it appearing therefrom that on the 18th day of August, 1944, one Lester Mims did transport in said automobile certain prohibited liquors or beverages from one point to another in the State of Alabama, and that said automobile was on said date seized by a Deputy Sheriff of said County, and said Bill of Complaint prays that said automobile be declared condemned and forfeited to the State of Alabama, and for an Order of condemnation and sale thereof.

It is therefore Ordered, Adjudged, and Decreed that notice of the filing of said Bill of Complaint be given for three successive weeks in the Chilton County News, a newspaper published in the Town of Clanton, Alabama, and that all persons claiming or asserting any right, title, or interest in said automobile be required to appear and assert such claims by the 25th day of September, 1944, and that failing to do so, their said right, title, or interest will be forever barred.

Ordered and Decreed, this 19th day of August, 1944.

LEO THOMPSON FOR MAYOR

The people of Clanton who are supporting Leo Thompson for Mayor believe that he will make a success of the office. They would like to call the attention of the voting to one or two facts:

1. Today the world affairs are being carried on by young men. Never has a war been fought by men so young as those fighting today. Thompson is a young man, and therefore, has a vision of what Clanton should be 10, 20 and 50 years from now.

2. One of the major political parties of the country today is advocating the replacing of old men in office by young men who have the energy, vision, and enthusiasms for the country ahead. If this principle is good for the whole country, why not good for Clanton?

3. The best man to pick for any job that you want done is a busy man. It is a well known fact that this is the only type of man that gets things done.

4. Thompson has made a success of his own personal business and this in itself is the best recommendation for him to help direct the business of Clanton.

(Paid political adv. by a Friend of Leo Thompson).

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Johnson announce the engagement of their daughter, Sarah Mildred, to the Rev. Haywood Scott of Prattville and Pittsview, Ala. The marriage to be an event of September 9th.

CLANTON'S FAVORITE CANDIDATE

For your next City Mayor of Clanton, vote for Mr. C. Fenn Jones. He is the man capable and who has the time for handling the City affairs, and he is the best man for the job.

WAR BONDS BIG HELP TO WAR EFFORT

The War Bond program has become an integral part of everyday living in Chilton County. It not only a vital portion of our home-front effort, but is one our people have come to accept as the surest means of helping the return of Chilton County boys from the war fronts.

Praising his co-workers or the constant effort they have put into building up a strongly functioning War and organization, these observations were made here this week by J. C. Pattillo, who has headed the Chilton County War Finance Committee the last 15 months.

Pointing out that Chilton County has subscribed its quotas in every special War Loan Drive, maintaining this excellent record in the Fifth War Loan, Chairman Pattillo asserted that the will to back the men in uniform has become as firmly entrenched in the minds of Chilton County residents as Hitler-fetters to rule the world.

Commenting on the Fifth War Loan, Pattillo said, "Although we really do the job would be a tough one, the very fact that our quotas were exceeded is a lasting testimony that each succeeding War Drive will be faced accordingly."

War Loan Drives," he continued, "in their attendant features of progress are quickening the spirit of community responsibility in Chilton County. Those who buy bonds and who accept the task of selling are warriors whose future state of living will have been enriched through the part they now are playing. Chilton County is paying forward to future progress with every War Bond purchased."

Member of the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Mr. Pattillo has been a member of the county 60 years. He is a member of the Kiwanis Club and Methodist Episcopal Church.

When questioned regarding his reason for taking an active part in the War Bond Program he said he "had no more significant reason for heading the work than any other good citizen should have."

Praise was high for every individual who has participated and contributed to the program through the purchase of bonds. Also coming in for mention was M. R. Glascock, agricultural chairman, who has set up an enviable record in organizing the farmers and the county.

At the Presbyterian Church, Sunday morning and Sunday School will begin at 10:00.

Chilton County High School opened Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock for the 1944-45 season. More than five-hundred students enrolled on the first day and schedules were made out until 12 noon, when the students were dismissed to spend the afternoon buying books and other supplies to be ready for work Wednesday morning.

Until September 18th classes will be held from 8 a.m. until 1:30 p.m. after that date the hours will be 9 a.m. until 3:45 p.m.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

Mr. Lee W. Hines of Prattville, Ala., announces the engagement of his daughter, Mildred, to Mr. Wade Lansing Moss of Andalusia, and Montgomery. Mr. Moss is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Grady Moss, Sr., of Andalusia.

Miss Hines attended Alabama College and formerly held a position with the Chilton County Board of Education.

RATION CALENDAR

PROCESSED FOODS: Blue A8 through L5 (Book 4) now valid at 10 points each for use with tokens. Good indefinitely.

MEATS AND FATS: Red A8 through G5 (Book 4) now valid at 10 points each for use with tokens. Good indefinitely.

SUGAR: Sugar stamps No. 30, 31, 32 and 33 now good for five pounds each indefinitely.

CANNING SUGAR: Stamp No. 40 good for five pounds canning sugar until February 28, 1945. Apply to local boards for supplemental rations.

SHOES: Airplane stamps No. 1 and 2 (Book 3) valid indefinitely.

GASOLINE: A-12 coupons now valid in Tennessee, Mississippi and Alabama. Expire September 21. Renewals being made now. The new books will contain six coupons of each series, each coupon worth four gallons.

Rationing rules now require that every car owner write his present license number and state on all gasoline coupons as he uses them and his 1945 license number on all gasoline coupons in his possession as soon as this license is issued to him.

New basic "A" ration gasoline books are now being distributed to local War Price and Rationing Boards and should be in the hands of applicants by September 21, District OPA Director Dr. A. H. Collins has announced.

Six of the coupons in the new "A" book, numbered "13" on the face, become valid at midnight September 21 and remain valid three months. Each coupon is worth four gallons, rather than the three gallons present coupons are worth, but the motorist will use fewer coupons during the validity period. Hence, the actual amount of gasoline he is allotted remains the same.

A new form of mileage rationing record will be issued with each new "A" book to replace the inspection records used at present to record the motorist's gasoline ration history.

Acute shortages of tires will continue at least through September and further curtailment of use of commercial vehicles is essential. Dr. A. H. Collins, district OPA director, has announced.

Red Cross Room Closed Because Of Gauze Shortage

The volunteer workers on surgical dressings of Chilton County have to date shipped twelve cartons (or 86,400) finished dressings. For the time being the room will be closed because of the shortage of gauze. As soon as additional material is received each room will be notified.

At this time I would like to take the opportunity to express my sincere thanks and appreciation to each lady who so willingly gave her time and cooperation in this work.—Mrs. L. E. Diefenderfer, Chairman of Surgical Dressings of Chilton County.

STORES OPEN ALL DAY WEDNESDAY

Beginning Wednesday, September 6, Clanton stores will be open all day on Wednesday. An effort was made by a group of merchants to extend the half holiday through the rest of 1944, but opposition overruled this plan. Both Banks will continue to close each Wednesday at noon.

FRAUDULENT ABSENTEE VOTERS ON THE LOOSE IN CITY ELECTION

Reports are current that C. Fenn Jones, the would-be Mayor, in company with his swear expert, is on the go. Aunt Laura White, Mrs. P. T. Hinkle, Mrs. Mattie Jones and Mr. Guy Higgins, are reported to be victims of this combination. It is a well-known fact that Mrs. Hinkle is seriously ill at her home in Clanton, and probably will never be able to leave her bed. Such also is the condition of Mr. Guy Higgins and which fact is well known to most every citizen of Clanton. Mrs. P. T. Hinkle, Mr. Higgins and the two lovely old ladies, Mrs. Laura White and Mrs. Mattie Jones each have signed affidavits that "they will be absent from the State or from the County of their residence on the day of the election by reason of their regular business and in the performance of their regular duties." Could such affidavit be made in good faith by either of the voters mentioned? Do you suppose that Mrs. Hinkle, Mrs. White, Mrs. Jones or Mr. Higgins understood that each of them intended to be taking a solemn oath witnessed by their Maker that each of them intended to be out of Chilton County "by reason of his or her regular business and in the performance of his or her regular duties" on election day, September 18th. To be able to vote a legal absentee ballot, it would therefore be necessary that each of these persons mentioned had a regular business and that the performance of their regular duties in connection with this business required their being away from Chilton County, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon of September 18, 1944.

No provision is made for casting an absentee vote by a person ill, or from other causes who cannot attend the election in person.

Mr. Jones and his swear expert are well versed in what is necessary to constitute an absentee voter. They are master absentee vote getters, and they are out to win the election. They have no conscience about the citizens whose vote they seek in inducing such voter to obtain a fraudulent ballot. Will you reward such conduct?

Feeder Calves For Chilton 4-H Club Members

FEEDER CALVES BEING PLACED OVER COUNTY

4-H Club members of Chilton County are feeding out show calves again this year to be shown next Spring. Last year Chilton County boys and girls did well in the Birmingham and Montgomery shows, and all of the club members who had calves at the show made a very nice profit. This year, we hope that more club members will take advantage of this livestock program as it affords one of the most practical means of studying beef cattle and offers the club members an opportunity to get a nice return on their project.

The OPA now recognizes feeder calf projects as being educational, so there is no ceiling price on the calves when they are sold provided they are entered and sold as show animals.

Up to date 13 feeder calves have been placed with club members over

September Is Rally Month At Methodist Church

Clanton Methodist Church is depending on all members and friends to make September a "Banner" month in the history of the church.

This, according to Sunday School Superintendent L. J. Stewart, is to be "Rally Month" and plans have been made to double Sunday School attendance.

On Sunday, the first of October, Rally Day will be observed. The 4th Sunday in September is Promotion Day.

Superintendent Stewart issued a welcome in behalf of the Church and Sunday School to all the returning teachers and urged that they come and lend their effort to the drive.

School children need from 9 to 10 hours sleep every night. In addition, children who are undernourished need a rest period in the afternoon.

An egg a day in one meal for each older child and adult is a good rule.

ERNEST TUBB

Grand 'Ole Opry Singer Ernest Tubb Coming In Person

Ernest Tubb, Western movie star and famous song writer, will appear in person with WSM Grand 'Ole Opry Tent Show Unit No. 4, along with his famous Texas Troubadours, Paul Howard, The Poe Sisters, Rod Bradford, and many other Grand 'Ole Opry stars. Ernest Tubb is one of the most popular cowboy stars on radio today. Tubb is the writer and singer of such famous songs as, "Walking the Floor Over You," "You'll Nearly Lose Your Mind," "Try Me One More Time," "Soldier's Last Letter," and many others. Millions of homes have Ernest Tubb records.

Tubb will sing all these famous songs when he appears under the Big Tent, located at the City Well above Ellis's Tourist Camp. They are staged to be here next Friday night, September 8th.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

The children, grand children and great grand children gathered recently at the home of Mrs. W. J. Gafford to celebrate her 81st birthday. Almost everyone brought her a gift, and at the noon hour a bountiful dinner was spread under the shade trees, which every one enjoyed.

Those present were: The honoree, Mrs. W. J. Gafford, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Spigener, Mr. and Mrs. John Payton and Billie James, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Williams, Will Frank, Vera Ethel Ruth, Morris, Flora and Edith Williams; Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Chandler, Willie Pearl, Frances, Clyde Ruth, Pete, Nancy and Sara Ann Chandler; Mr. W. H. Gafford, Elsie Jean and Ruby Williams, James and Lazette Brackin and Joe Earl Moore. Late in the afternoon every one departed for their homes, wishing her many more happy birthdays.

This contest is open both to junior and senior high schools and a larger number of junior high schools are competing each year.

There is no charge to schools or students for participation.

Birmingham - Southern College will award scholarships valued at $2700 to state finalists and The News-Age-Herald will award cash prizes to all state finalists and will pay railroad fare and hotel bill for each visiting state finalist and chaperon.

CHILTON COUNTY SACRED HARP SINGING CONVENTION

The Chilton County Sacred Harp Singing Convention will meet with Mt Zion Baptist Church the third Sunday in this month—September 17. The church is located east of Clanton, near the river.

Members of this convention are all expected to be there who possibly can. Singers and lovers of old sacred music, have a special invitation to meet with us at this convention.

Come bring your sacred harp song books and spend the day singing these dear old sacred songs.—A. A. Jackson, Chairman; M. S. Myrtle Jackson, Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL P T A TO MEET SEPT 12TH

The first meeting of the high school parent-teachers association will take place in the high school building Tuesday afternoon, September 12, at 4:00 o'clock.

The president, Mrs. J. E. Gowan, has arranged a very interesting program. Miss Josie Barefield is to be the principal speaker of the afternoon. Miss Barefield is superintendent of the Julia Tutwiler Prison for women at Wetumpka, Ala. She is said to be a most interesting person and quite an authority in the field of human rehabilitation. The public is cordially invited to this first meeting to hear Miss Barefield speak.

Mrs. Lois T. Mims will present a part of the girls Glee Club with some musical numbers.

There will be a reception for the teachers in the Home Economics room immediately after this program. The president of the P.T.A. urges all the friends and patrons of the high school to attend this first meeting and get acquainted with the teachers during this little party after the program.—Mrs. J. E. Gowan, President.

JEMISON CHURCH OF CHRIST

Sunday, September 10, 1944:

2:30 p.m.—Bible Study.
3:30 p.m.—Sermon, "Rightly Dividing the Scriptures."

The failure of the religious world to obey the command of rightly dividing the word of truth is the cause of so much religious division in the world today. Meet with us and let's study this question in the light of God's revealed Word.

—HOWARD L. FOSHEE, Minister.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Germans Shorten Lines on East, West Fronts for Suicide Stand; Coal Production Tops 1943 Rate

Released by Western Newspaper Union
(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Marring liberation of Paris was internal strife, which broke out at famed Notre Dame cathedral, with Axis snipers firing on Parisian crowd, shows seeking refuge behind French tanks.

EUROPE:

Head for Reich

Giving in before the overwhelming weight of the advancing Allied armies, Nazi troops in the Paris region fell back toward the German frontier, while remnants of enemy units in southern France trickled northward to join in the evacuation of the country.

Although the Germans claimed to have withdrawn the bulk of their Seventh army eastward, the Allies exacted a heavy toll from it, with U. S. and British armored columns hacking up rearwards and fleets of bombers ripping up enemy troops making a hasty scramble for the reich border.

As the U. S. columns swept on, such historic World War I battlefields as Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Wood and Soisson fell to rampaging Doughboys after little resistance, in marked contrast to the bitter, bloody fighting which was required 25 years ago before the Allies could plant their flags over the ground.

In southern France, the Allies advanced almost at will, encountering fanatical resistance only at certain strong-points, and indicating that the Germans had pulled out the bulk of their forces from this section of the country before Lieut. Gen. Alexander Patch's Seventh army landed between Toulon and Cannes. Even so, the bag of enemy prisoners totaled well over 45,000, although many of these troops were foreigners the Nazis had impressed into service.

Enter Hungary

Even as the Nazis streamed back to their own borders in the west, their armies were sorely pressed in the east, where German divisions trapped in Rumania tried to fight themselves free, and other of their troops moved up to the Carpathian mountains to attempt to stave off the Russian advance into Hungary.

In moving into the Carpathians, the Germans fulfilled an agreement with the Hungarians to provide troops for that country's defense as the price for keeping it in the war, following Rumania's capitulation to the Allies and Bulgaria's peace bid.

For herself, Hungary sought to solidify her internal government by establishing a new cabinet, composed for the most part of military strong men, headed by Col. Gen. Vitez Geza Lakatos.

As Germany tried to hold Hungary in line, Russian troops were reported well inside the Carpathians, with the enemy energetically attempting to contain the Red drive in the rocky masses.

Nazi Predicament

With the full weight of Allied might falling down on Germany, the Nazi predicament became severely acute, with the enemy himself seemingly pulling in his troops in both the west and east for a final suicidal stand on shortened lines, hoping for a possible compromise peace.

Addressing the German people over the radio, Lieut. Gen. Kurt Dittmar, the army's press spokesman, sounded the keynote to Nazi hopes, declaring that they would be willing to cease fighting if the Allies relaxed their war aims.

Said he: "If this determination to destroy Germany) did not exist, if the world we face had been ready . . . to recognize the living rights of a great . . . hard working nation, no reason could have been seen why this misery had to fill the world . . . and will continue to fill it."

COTTON:

Future Seemed

With cotton accounting for one-fifth of the nation's cash farm income, and with southern cotton states embracing more than one-third of the country's population, attention has been focused on the future of the commodity once the record breaking demands of the war end.

Even as Sen. John H. Bankhead (Ala.) fights now for wartime parity for New York opined that partial solution of the problem may lie in price concessions, increased production, tariff adjustments, reliance on foreign credits and the extension of subsidies.

In studying the postwar cotton situation, the Guaranty Trust Company of New York opined that partial solution of the problem may lie in price concessions, increased production, tariff adjustments, reliance on foreign credits and the extension of subsidies.

Industrial research and intensive trade promotion also might contribute to strengthening cotton's market position, it was said.

SMOKES:

Brighter Prospects

With increased tobacco supplies in view and an early end to the war relieving the manpower situation, the outlook for increased cigarette production brightened.

Prospects for a 950,000,000-pound flue-cured tobacco crop for 1944-45 promised to allow manufacturers to set aside larger stocks for aging and release more matured supplies. With cutbacks in military production resulting in labor layoffs, many former cigarette plant workers are expected to return to their old jobs, easing the tight manpower situation in those establishments.

The cigarette shortage, which has peaked smokers on a day-to-day basis for many weeks, should reach its peak in September, the trade reported.

Dig Out of Hail

Hail drifts five feet high in some places, with some stones as large as golf balls, marked the severe hailstorm which struck Colorado, causing 1 1/2 million dollars damage to cities and farms. In Pueblo, merchants are shown digging out of drifts before stores.

PUBLIC HEALTH:

Fitness Sought

With selective service's rejection of 4,000,000 men revealing the low health level of the population, effort will be made to improve the situation through a nation-wide physical fitness program, which will be launched this fall in schools and colleges and later extended to industry and the general public.

Under leadership of the Joint Committee on Physical Fitness, no less than 364 national organizations are taking part in the program, with goals including: protection against preventable defects, correction of existing deficiencies, knowledge of how to live healthfully, and provision of adequate means for physical development.

In commenting on the program, Col. Leonard G. Rowley, chief of selective service's medical division and chairman of the Joint Committee on Physical Fitness, declared: "We need to develop people with stamina, energy, skill and agility, so they may have a fuller enjoyment of life."

CIO:

Probe Political Action

Called before the house campaign expenditures committee, CIO Chief Sidney Hillman revealed that the organization's political action committee spent $228,397 up to August 15, with $87,320 of the sum used in primaries and state elections.

Vigorously denying that workers were forced to kick in to the political action committee, Hillman said that the bulk of total collections of $808,715 constituted union contributions, with loans figuring prominently in the remainder of the funds. An additional $1,500,000 is being sought from workers, Hillman reported.

DRIED VEGETABLES

About 95 per cent of the dehydrated vegetable output will go to the army, navy, Red Cross and other "non-civilian" agencies, the War Relocation Administration announces. Food on an estimated allocable supply of 277,000,000 pounds of dried vegetable products, this means that 265,000,000 pounds will be sent to the military and indirect war service agencies, and that about 12,000,000 pounds will go to civilians.

Production is expected to be about 67 per cent higher than 1943.

Star Dust

STAGE SCREEN RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

SIXTEEN-YEAR-OLD ANN Blythe almost makes you shudder; she's already had so much success that you wonder what's left. Not that Ann feels that way about it; she's as excited over what's ahead as if she'd never appeared in a sensational successful play—"Watch on the Rhine," which gave a command performance in Washington—and been a supper guest at the White House. She has a place for herself in radio, beginning at the age of five. She's established on the screen; has a long-term contract with Universal—her latest picture is "The Merry Monarchs." She sang for three years with the San Carlos Opera company. Yet she feels that she must work hard to get ahead!

They do say that "Sweet and Low Down" is a semi-biographical story of Benny Goodman's life. Whether that's true or not, it gives him a chance he's never had before in films; this time he makes his debut as a dramatic actor and comedian.

Steve Cochran is stepping right along in the path traveled by Humphrey Bogart, Spencer Tracy, and other stars whose screen wickedness paid handsome dividends. A handsome six-footer, reared in Wyoming, he plays a gunman of the Broadway badlands in Samuel Goldwyn's "The Wonder Man," starring Danny Kaye. He was discovered when he played in "Without Love" on the Los Angeles stage, with Constance Bennett.

Kay Harding's first big role at Universal is the romantic lead in "The Mummy's Curse," but her first arrival on the lot had nothing to do with pictures. In those days she was the helmswoman on a delivery wagon. "The Scarlet Claw" started her on her way up.

Alexis Smith, who did so well under Edmund Goulding's direction in "The Constant Nymph," will work with him again in the re-make of "Of Human Bondage," in which she has the role of "Norah." The picture features Paul Henreid, Janis Paige and Eleanor Parker.

Victor Jory was all set to return to acting before the movie cameras when he was offed by a swashbuckling adventurer on the Sunday afternoon CBS show, "Dangerously Yours"—and liked the role so much that he's renounced movies for the year to come. He's already blossomed forth as a radio matinee idol.

Producer Lester Cowan has begun to wonder if every man in the country—and some out of it—want to see Ernie Fyle on the screen. It became known that Cowan is looking for someone to portray the popular war correspondent in "G. I. Joe," more than 2,300 letters have poured in from men who are sure they could play the role closely enough to characterize him on the screen. Ernie Fyle at present is covering the invasion of France, sharing the hardships as well as the companionship of our fighting boys there.

The company of players and technicians making "Objective, Burma" for Warner Bros. settled down to a full night schedule for battle scenes depicting the last ditch fight before evacuation of Burma. They've been on location for three months—a new record for off-the-set shooting. Errol Flynn heads the cast, which includes George Tobias, Henry Hull and James Brown in featured roles.

Dick Brown, new singing star, will tour the "Purple Heart Circuit" in the East. Brown knows the value of entertainment to wounded service men, as he spent many months recovering in army hospitals after he was injured in a plane crash in the South Pacific.

ODDS AND ENDS—Frank Sinatra auditioned dozens of girl singers before he selected Ellen Barton to be his first singing partner in his new radio program . . . Parks (Vox Pop) Johnson's daughter, Mrs. Willard, has named his little granddaughter Louise Johnson Willett . . . Gene Krupa and his band have been signed for a featured spot in "George White's Scandals of 1944" . . . In RKO's "Farewell, My Love," Claire Trevor commits no more movie murders, her score is 88 to date . . . Frances Langford got permission from Washington to carry quite a lot of extra baggage with her on that current trip with Bob Hope to the South Pacific.

"And how are you getting on at school, Jimmy?"
"Oh, fine! I'm learning words of four cylinders now!"

By All Means

"My dear, I never imagined you would marry the man you did," said Gladys.
"Neither did I," replied her friend.
"Oh, yes, but I loved his means."

LETTER FROM DEMO CHRM.
M'CORVEY

To the Mobile Press Register, Mobile, Alabama.

Dear Sir:

Replying to your several inquiries submitted to me in writing, relative to prospective action to be taken by the State Democratic Executive Committee of Alabama, my forecasts as to the General Election, etc., I must state that I can only answer your inquiries for myself, and although I have been honored by my fellow members on our State Committee with the Chairmanship of our Committee, I have no authority to speak for or bind any other member of our Committee. However, I have no hesitancy in stating what my own, personal, views are, and what action, in my opinion, our Party should take. With this understanding I will answer your several inquiries as follows:

1. As to what position the State Democratic Executive Committee will take towards Democrats who voted in our Democratic Primaries and then vote the Republican ticket in the General Election in November, in my opinion our State Executive Committee will do in the future as it has done in the past, and invite all white electors to return to our Party and become members of the Democratic Party, although I feel confident that our State Executive Committee will have as candidates in our next Democratic Primary Elections any electors who fight the nominees of our party in the General Election of 1944. May I add that for many years our Party has provided different qualifications for voters and for candidates. We invite all white electors to become members of our Party and permit them to vote, but when it comes to permitting an elector to be a candidate in our Democratic Primaries, then we require such prospective candidate to take an oath to the effect that he did not vote a Republican ticket or any ticket other than the Democratic ticket in the last General Election, and further that he did not openly and publicly oppose the election of the nominees of the Democratic Party, or any of them. I think our State Executive Committee will follow this course in the future.

2. In answer to your inquiry as to whether or not the State Democratic Executive Committee will read out of the Party any voter who participated in our Democratic Primaries and who failed to vote, at all, in the General Election, I will state that this inquiry is covered in my answer to your first question.

3. Replying to your inquiry as to whether or not I, as Chairman, fear a wide-spread bolt in the November election, I beg to advise that I do not expect any such bolt. There will, of course, be some Democrats who will not vote in the General Election in November, and a comparatively few who will "kick over the traces" and vote the Republican ticket, but I don't believe that any very substantial number of the thoughtful men and women of our State who participated in our Democratic Primary and deliberately cast a ballot on which was written a pledge to support all the nominees of that Primary, will violate this pledge with impunity. On every ballot cast in our Primary Election, and on every voting machine used in that Primary, there was plainly written this pledge:

"By casting this ballot I do pledge myself to abide by the result of this primary and to aid and support all the nominees thereof in the ensuing General Election."

Sections 350 and 352 of Title 17 of the Alabama Code makes it mandatory that this pledge be placed on each ballot cast. A great many Democrats firmly believe that there would have been little, if any, thought of Roosevelt for a fourth term except for the war conditions. Many thoughtful citizens who were never admirers of President Roosevelt, and who thought that the two-term tradition should be maintained, are voting for Mr. Roosevelt this time because they very sincerely feel that it would be a serious mistake for the American people to repudiate President Roosevelt during the pendency of the war which is being so magnificently, splendidly, effectively and successfully prosecuted, without the slightest hint from the President's most bitter enemies that he, as Commander in Chief, has been guilty of any political interference in his prosecution. I think the argument a sound one, that if the American people should repudiate Roosevelt, and if the English people should repudiate Churchill, then our enemies such as Hitler, Goebels, Goering and Himmler, and the Japanese gang of war lords in control of that country, could go before their people with some semblance of sincerity and claim that neither the American people nor the British people were behind "those war mongers Roosevelt and Churchill." Such propaganda on the part of the leaders of our enemies would undoubtedly prolong the war and cost countless thousands of additional casualties among our boys. While our enemies are now doing all that they can, and we now have them with their backs to the wall, yet, I don't think there is any doubt that they would hold out much longer, and resist more strongly, if they sincerely thought that the people of our country and the people of England were not wholeheartedly behind our leaders in the prosecution of this war. This, alone, in my opinion, makes it all important that the Democratic Party be returned to power.

In my opinion the great majority of the Democrats in Alabama and throughout the South are going to take the position that we owe our allegiance to the Democratic Party and we will faithfully support its nominees. I think only a very few are going to "take a walk." I believe that the Southern people are finally waking up to the fact that by the South presenting a united front at our National Conventions we can regain in the councils of our Party the prestige which we formerly enjoyed. We of the South undoubtedly brought about the defeat of Henry Wallace as our Vice-Presidential nominee, and no man more unfriendly to the South could possibly have been nominated than Wallace. Furthermore, at our recent Chicago Convention our Southern Delegates succeeded in having two planks placed in our platform which I consider quite a victory for our section. These planks were as follows:

"We favor Federal aid to education administered by the States without interference by the Federal Government."

We have been fearful that if the Federal aid to education was administered by the Federal Government, the first requirement would be the abolition of our segregation laws, just as the Federal Government has required the doing away with segregation laws in connection with certain Federal contracts, etc.

The other plank in our platform which should be particularly helpful to the South is the plank reading as follows:

"We favor nondiscriminatory transportation charges and declare for the early correction of inequalities in such charges."

Anyone who has studied the transportation freight structure under which the South has been struggling since the Civil War, fully appreciates the tremendous disadvantage under which Southern Industry has had to operate. I firmly believe that by the proper cooperation between our Southern Delegates we can in the future get our Party to take many more steps toward aiding our section.

Most of the thoughtful men and women of Alabama who were unwilling to support the nominees of the Democratic Primaries, unless these nominees should turn out to be candidates they were willing to support in the General Election, stayed out of our Primaries so as to be free to vote the Republican ticket or an Independent ticket without violating their pledge. No man or woman had any right or any business participating in our Democratic Primary without being bound by the conditions we imposed when inviting them to become a member of our Party. They could stay out of our Primary and then with a clear conscience vote as they pleased in the General Election.

4. In reply to your inquiry as to what constitutes the principal objection in the South to the re-election of the Democratic ticket, I will state that in my opinion the principal objection would be the manner in which the present administration has handled the racial issue. However, just read the Republican platform with its advocacy of a permanent air Employment Practice Commission, the abolition of our poll tax laws, the doing away with all of our segregation statutes, etc., and then tell me what in the name of common sense these objects think or hope they can accomplish on this racial proposition by stringing along with our Republican friends. Many Northern people, both Democrats and Republicans, advocate the doing away with our segregation laws and other regulations which we of the South know to be absolutely essential to the well-being of both races, and while these folks think that they are helping out our colored friends, yet, as a matter of fact, we all know that they are only making living conditions in the South more difficult and more unsatisfactory for both races. Ours is the only section of the world where two entirely different races have been able to live together side by side in great numbers in peace and harmony for many generations, and if we are just left alone we will continue to have nothing but the best of relations between the two races. I recently read a statement from what I considered a reliable source, that more negroes were killed in the horrible race riot in Chicago a few years ago than were killed in all of the bombings which have taken place in all of the Southern States during the three-quarters of a century since the Civil War ended, and yet some of these Northern people seem to think that they know better than the Southern people,—both white and black,—how we can best get along and live together. They are simply ill-advised, ignorant meddlers who know absolutely nothing about the problems they are trying to handle with totally unworkable theories. I wish all of them could see and realize how nicely and satisfactorily the two races get along together when they just leave us alone. No right-thinking Southern white man or white woman is going to be unfair or unjust to his colored neighbors, and all that we ask of these people in other sections of the country is to let us live in peace and harmony and to stop meddling and interfering with a proposition that they know absolutely nothing about. No matter how good their intentions may be, they are doing nothing but harm when they undertake to trample under foot the traditions and segregation practices which time has proven to be the only proper method of handling our proposition.

5. Replying to your inquiry as to whether or not the State Committee has any means of checking on how Democrats who voted in the Primary vote in the General Election, I beg to advise that no method of making such a check is afforded. In fact, we have rather severe criminal statutes controlling in such cases where an effort is made to see how an elector voted, except in the case of a contest. In event the State Executive Committee of our Party wished to punish any Democrat who voted for the Republican ticket in the General Election, the only way that a check of this kind could be made would be to require that before any suspected elector could be permitted to vote in our next Primary Election, such elector would first have to make affidavit as to whether or not he supported the Democratic ticket in the preceding General Election. As above stated, we have only required such an affidavit as to candidates and have not applied such a harsh rule to electors, as it has been our desire to keep in the Democratic Party all qualified white electors.

6. I think if the National Administration continues to meddle with our racial problem in the South that Governor Sparks is correct in taking the position that we will be caused much grief and I can conceive that matters could get to the point where there would be danger of the South abandoning its traditional allegiance to the Democratic Party. However, I don't think we have as yet come to this (Continued on page 8)

ABOUT TOWN

-By BEN

In the Summer of 1933 Mr. J. L. Penton, who works at George McCain's Mule Barn, sold a farmer a mule. Terms were arranged whereby the debt would be paid out in a year. When the mortgage became due there was a $27 balance that remained unpaid. The past week a young lady came in and offered Mr. Penton $30 for the old mortgage which he readily accepted. The mule was dead and the man who purchased it was dead. The old account had long been forgotten.

Clanton welcomes the George Jesters back. George, and Elizabeth Jester are a popular young couple and one that Clanton could ill afford to lose. Well, anyway, they are back now and we hope for good. They haven't bought yet, but we do not think that either has any idea of giving up until they do.

This Mayor's race is drawing plenty of interest. Right now it looks like a mighty close heat. That's regardless of what the wisecracks have to say about their respective candidates having it in the bag. This Mayor's race isn't in either bag y-e-t.

Jim Folsom stopped in to see us Saturday afternoon. He was on his way back to Cullman. We believe "Big" Jim gets more popular as the days go by. He is an easy mixer, makes friends and keeps them. Things being as they are, the next Governor of Alabama will have to beat "Big" Jim Folsom.

It was a kind-hearted gentleman who gave his Pullman reservation to an elderly woman, but the telegram received by his wife was rather confusing. It read: "Home soon. Just gave berth to an old lady."

Jim Rakestraw Tells Me— Bill had a bill board. Bill also had a board bill. The board bill bored Bill so he sold the bill board to pay the board bill. After Bill sold the board board to pay the board bill the board bill no longer bored Bill. —Jim didn't say if Bill got a receipt or not. Southern Aegis.

THINGS WE CAN DO WITHOUT You never know to whom you are speaking these days.

The other day a young woman entered a store and asked the clerk to be shown an item. Frankly she did not expect the clerk to have the item in stock but asked in hopes that there was a possibility it was still available. The clerk promptly replied that the store was no longer able to get that particular bit of merchandise and added, "you know there's a war going on."

The young woman winced, bit her lip and left the store. It was not long ago that she had received a telegram that stated, "I regret to inform you that your husband is missing in action." This woman knew far better than the clerk that there is a war raging, one that is heart-breaking to many people.

There is no excuse to utter the remark, "Don't you know there is a war going on." The person to whom the remark is addressed may be more fully aware of that fact than the one who blurts it out.—Tusloosa News.

Soon after the first battle of the Marne in World War I, won by troops under the command of French Marshal Joffre, a lively dispute arose as to who had been responsible for the victory.

One day an enterprising correspondent ventured to ask Joffre: "In your opinion, who was responsible for the victory?"

"I can't say who was responsible for winning the battle," replied Joffre with a twinkle in his eye, "but if the battle had been lost, I would have been blamed."

U. S. War Prisoners Seek 'Escape' in Camp Doings

Yanks Like Plays and Develop Liking for Soccer Football, but Letters From Home Greatest Source of Cheer.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

It is not often that we get direct communication from Americans in Germany, and so I am not ashamed to say that when I perused a communication from that source, I did not at first recognize what the frequently used abbreviation POW stood for.

Comparatively few Americans know the meaning of those three letters; perhaps none know what they mean to the POW himself. POW is prisoner of war. According to the latest figures I have from the war department there are now 41,234 American soldiers, sailors, marines, merchant seamen held by the enemy!

The officials of the Red Cross know exactly what the conditions are under which those prisoners move and live and have their being in Allied prison camps in Germany or in the more than 40 hospitals for Allied wounded in the Reich or occupied countries. They have regular reports from the International Red Cross representatives who visit the camp regularly. The Red Cross says in effect: "So far as we know, the Germans have treated American prisoners in accordance with the Geneva agreement."

That is all it says. But even if the Germans live up to both the spirit and the letter of the Geneva agreement, the life of the prisoner of war is not to be envied. Recently, I studied some of the newspapers issued by men in the prison camps. Some have been released for publication. Others have not. Not that those without revealed any dark secrets of suffering. Quite the contrary. They simply prove what Kipling said about men who live in barracks not growing up to be plaster saints, and some of the humor might be a little, shall we say, unsavory.

The reason for this is expressed in the word escape. There are two kinds of escape which a prisoner thinks about. One is a safe get-away through the barbed wire and past the machine guns and quick-trigger sentinels. If he is wise, he doesn't spend too much time on such cogitation. The official advice to POWs is "don't try it."

The other kind of escape is defined by Webster as, "mental distraction of reality or routine; as, literature of escape."

The somewhat highly seasoned humor of some of the jokes and cartoons in the prisoners' papers are, technically speaking, "literature of escape." If he is wise, he doesn't spend too much time on such cogitation. The official advice to POWs is "don't try it."

Yank Ingenuity Shows In Stage Productions

As always, the drama provides one of the easiest and most effective mental distractions and I am told that the time, effort and ingenuity that is put into the learning, producing, staging and costuming of plays by these men is remarkable.

"The Kriege Time" issued by the American airmen in Stalag Luft III, in Sagan, Germany, which I have before me as I write, is perhaps not typical because it was an edition especially for the home folks. But it has a story on page one headed "theater" which begins with the statement which started me off on this topic. It says, "The Kriege (local nickname for war prisoner) is assured of 'escape' in the theater." Then it explains that in order to accommodate the whole camp in an auditorium which seats only 20 per cent of the members, five performances of each play are given. And they include real drama.

The article records as recent productions that sure-fire, never-die farce, "Charlie's Aunt"; "Our Town," the popular American play, nostalgic and easy to stage because it requires no scenery; "Tobacco Road," a popular, earthy piece with a run longer than the retreat from Stalingrad; "The Man Who Came to Dinner," whose appeal perhaps lies in the fact that "the man" couldn't get away, either; and "Flegler Frolia," an original musical comedy. (Flegler is a German name.)

"Female costumes," it is explained, "are hired through German sources when possible, usually fabricated out of sheets and men's clothing."

The newspaper (a typewritten sheet) says that "scenery, furniture and stage properties have been constructed from wooden Red Cross boxes and burlap, covered with magazine paper and painted with cold water paint."

In another item, the paper comments that "the handy man is the hero of the camp."

Of course, there are sports, but limited ground space makes baseball impossible in this particular camp since a homer over the fence is irretrievable. The boys have learned to like soccer, learned from their English comrades, as a form of what they call "mass murder."

Softball is a favorite sport, and with the arrival of fencing fobs, fencing.

There are some classes, but they are not detailed with in detail. Another nostalgic diversion was described although not admitted as such, since no note of sentimentality enters the sheet. It was a baby contest, the entrants photographs supplied, presumably, by wives from home. A "Miss Stalag Luft III" was later to be selected from the pictures of wives and sweethearts.

The schedule for a typical day runs like this:

POW's Day Leisurely

But Monotonous

The day starts at 10 a. m. with roll-call (following a breakfast of coffee, bread and jam). Then calisthenics, showers for the few designated that day (they go in lots of 24), classes, library, cooking schedules (the men take turns at the culinary arts). Mail (if there is any) is distributed at noon. Last roll-call comes at four p. m., then a few turns around the perimeter of the camp, supper, bridge and poker (for cigarettes). Then "some good talk, much foolish dreaming before midnight sends the Kriege to bed with the hope ever that the new day brings peace."

Of course, in this little typewritten journal which has had to pass the German censor there is only here and there a hint of certain inner feelings toward the hosts; one note on the showing of a German film speaks of a "none too spellbound audience."

It is difficult to get an intimate view of a prisoner's life from brief notes or, indeed, from the letters the prisoners write home. But those persons who have read all the confidential reports and also many letters passed on to them by relations, generally and the description of the things they do to provide escape from the monotony of prison life.

Naturally, the question is frequently asked: "What are we doing for our prisoners in Germany?"

The thing they want most is provided for most of them—letters from home. The next are the food packages which are paid for by the army, packed by volunteers, workmen shipped by the Red Cross from their four shipping centers, two in New York, one in Philadelphia and one in St. Louis. Most of the packages, assembled like motor cars on a moving line, are packed by loving hands—that group which bears the scars of war as deeply as the combatants themselves, and described prosaically in army language as "the next of kin."

These packages go, one for each prisoner, every week.

The prisoners also can receive personal packages every 60 days. They get books and other prescribed articles.

The Red Cross has eight ships of its own which, up until recently, have been landing regularly at Marseilles, where packages have been shipped in sealed cars to Switzerland. These goods went through unmolested. Lately some of the ships have been made to Lisbon and re-shipped on smaller shuttle vessels. The disruption of traffic in Germany has recently interfered with the system. Other routes are being planned.

BRIEFS... by Baukhage

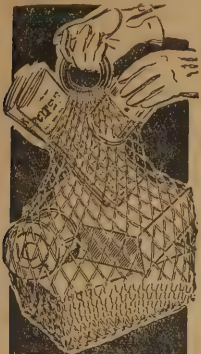

Special diet packages go to our men in German POW hospitals.

As soon as a prisoner is captured in Germany he is taken to a transit camp where a Red Cross "capture kit" is waiting. Since he usually doesn't take his baggage with him into Germany, he may find he is arriving by parachute, he gets brush, comb, razor and such necessities.

Many of the German prisoners of war captured in Normandy have volunteered to help with the harvest in Great Britain.

All major youth organizations are cooperating in a drive to raise an army of school-age milkweed and harvester in order to get milkweed seeds needed to replace kapok in life jackets for the armed forces.

Normally there are 20 per cent more tire failures during the summer months than others. Tests have shown that at a temperature of 90 degrees tires wear out twice as fast as at 60 degrees. And that at 100 degrees they wear out five times as fast as at 40 degrees.

Even with production being restored at Far East rubber plantations and our synthetic plants working at peak, authorities believe there will be a tight rubber situation for some time following the end of the war.

Gun Shy

By CLYDE B. HOUGH
McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

WHEN Hyder fumbled his rifle and dropped it, that first morning at drill, most of us recruits and some of the older heads snickered. "Silence in the ranks," thundered Sergeant Kane.

Hyder made no move to recover his rifle—just stood staring down at it in trance-like horror. "Don't be afraid of it, guy," Kane said. "It won't bite anybody but them Axis bastards."

But Hyder was afraid of a gun; all guns, as we learned later. His hands would tremble every time he touched one. So, naturally, he drew a low rating in rank-and-file judgment. His only champion was Barry, another recruit. "I know the guy. You fellows don't," Barry told us in the squad room.

"We know he's afraid of guns. He must be yellow," came the answer.

"You're wrong, all of you," Barry argued. "Hyder and I were raised in the same town, on the same block. He's no coward—just gun shy. Born that way, same as some people are born with blue eyes, others brown."

Someone said, "Bah, he's just cut the speech short. Another glanced toward the door but immediately looked away."

Hyder seemed rooted on the threshold, toward thrust forward, eyes squinting, his squat body taut, hard.

For a moment, he held his belligerent pose and then, eyes straight ahead, he walked slowly and deliberately down the aisle between the two rows of cot. He stopped before his friend. "Thanks, Barry," he said, and turned and left the room.

"Well, guts or no guts," said Sergeant Kane, "no gun-shy son will ever be any good in this man's army."

I saw a lowhead bobbing and weaving.

"Hyder could be," Barry contended. "He was a hotshot cook before the draft got him. A good one, too, and he likes the work."

"A cook, huh?" Kane mused. "That's a way for me to get him off my hands. Think I'll see the mess sarge about it."

That was back in barracks. Now this was Bataan and the jungle and the Nips. We were on outpost duty, Barry and Hyder with us. Sergeant Kane was in charge. Eight of the men rested in guy tents while four others watched from foxholes out front. Behind the tents, in a tiny clearing where we'd chopped away the creepers and the thick bush, Hyder was cooking our noonday meal.

Yes, Barry had been right. The gun-shy lad could really cook and he loved the job, too. I watched him now, bending over the stew pot, pouring in special seasoning he'd concocted from native spices.

As he stepped back from the cauldron he nodded at me and yelled, "Come and get it." But right then things happened all at once. The little monkey men swarmed out of the jungle. No noise, no warning till the bullets whistled through the mist.

"Rush for the tents and grab a Garand," I shouted at Hyder and acted on my own advice. The next few minutes were a mad whirl—shots cracking, bayonets twirling, men reeling, going down. My arms were weak from the shock of thrust and parry. Then suddenly the surging tide of Nips swerved and we stood in the clear. I glanced toward the cook pots and saw a towarded Hyder was still swiveling. We got through to him and the yellow boys scattered. Barry and Kane carried him to a tent and I looked at the red-smear weapon lying on the ground. There were eighteen dead Japs snuggled one upon another, every head bused by Hyder's favorite instrument.

In the tent Sergeant Kane was swabbing a wound in Hyder's thigh. A bayonet thrust had got him. His legs were off and there was a long slash across his ribs. The yellow boys scattered. Barry and Kane carried him to a tent and I looked at the red-smear weapon lying on the ground. There were eighteen dead Japs snuggled one upon another, every head bused by Hyder's favorite instrument.

I said, "You did wrong, buddy. According to rules, you should have ducked those Nips and joined the rest of us, back to back. How come they were after our chow?"

He protested, "They hooked the pot of stew and tried to run with it. How could I let them get away with it?"

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS
by Lynn ChambersFamilies Like Meals With a Relish
(See Recipes Below)

Bit of Spice

"I've saved many a meal just by serving it with a good relish," home-makers often tell me.

This is the season to put up those small, precious jars of sweetness and spice to go with meat-thrifty meals.

There needn't be many if your sugar rations are low, but do fit a few of them in your canning budget and classify them as morale builders.

Pickles, chutneys, catsups, conserves and relishes add that bit of something special to the meal. They're easy to put up because the sugar, spices and vinegar in them act as preservatives.

First on the list is a tasty blueberry relish that goes with meat-flavored meats like lamb or veal.

Blueberry Relish.

- 4 cups blueberries (prepared)
- 7 cups sugar
- 1/2 cup vinegar
- 1/2 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare blueberries, crush thoroughly or grind 1 1/2 quarts fully ripe, cultivated blueberries. Add 1/2 to 1 teaspoon cinnamon, cloves, allspice or any desired combination of spices.

Measure sugar, prepared blueberries and vinegar into a large kettle. Mix well and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Remove from fire and stir in bottled fruit pectin. Skim; pour quickly. Paraffin hot relish at once.

Chili sauce has carried a high point value since rationing came into effect. It would be a good idea to put it up at home so as to save points for other canned food.

Chili Sauce.

- 1 gallon tomatoes
- 2 cups onions
- 2 cups sweet red pepper
- 1 pod hot red pepper
- 1 cup sugar
- 3 tablespoons salt
- 1 tablespoon mustard seed
- 1 tablespoon celery seed
- 3 tablespoons mixed spices
- 2 1/2 cups vinegar

Skim tomatoes before chopping. Chop all vegetables before mixing.

The mixed spices in a bag. Mix all ingredients except spice bag and vinegar. Add spice bag after mixture has boiled 30 minutes. Cook until very thick, then add vinegar and boil until there seems to be no more "free" liquid. Taste and add more seasoning, if necessary. Pour, while boiling hot, into hot, sterile jars and seal at once.

Tomato Ketchup.

- 1 peck tomatoes
- 3 sweet red peppers
- 1 pod hot red pepper
- 4 tablespoons salt
- 2 cups sugar
- 1 tablespoon celery seed
- 2 teaspoons mustard seed
- 1 tablespoon whole allspice
- 2 sticks cinnamon
- 3 cups vinegar

Chop tomatoes before mixing. The mixed spices in a bag. Mix all ingredients except spice bag and vinegar. Add spice bag after mixture has boiled 30 minutes. Cook until very thick, then add vinegar and boil until there seems to be no more "free" liquid. Taste and add more seasoning, if necessary. Pour, while boiling hot, into hot, sterile jars and seal at once.

Lynn Says.

Pickles are Crisper: If you put up your pickles this way:

1. Use a pure cider vinegar. Be sure that you get a good product, neither old nor adulterated.

2. Follow every direction, every measurement, and do every step carefully. Cucumber pickles may be made either by a long or short process, but the longer process yields a better pickle.

3. When slicing several kinds of fruit or vegetable for pickling, have all of them about the same thickness.

4. Too much spice destroys both flavor and color. Use the ingredients in tested recipes only.

Bread and Butter Pickles.

- 3 quarts sliced cucumbers
- 3 onions
- 1/2 cup salt
- 2 cups vinegar
- 1 cup water
- 3 cups brown sugar
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon ginger
- 2 tablespoons mustard seed
- 1 teaspoon turmeric
- 1/2 teaspoon celery seed
- 1 pod hot red pepper
- 1 piece horseradish

Wash and chop tomatoes and peppers. Simmer until soft. Press through a fine sieve. Cook rapidly until reduced to about one-half. Add sugar, salt and spices (tied in bag) and boil until thick. Add vinegar about 5 minutes before removing from fire. Pour into hot, sterile jars and seal at once.

Two of the most popular types of pickles get a place in today's column.

You'll like putting up both for variety's sake:

Bread and Butter Pickles.

- 3 quarts sliced cucumbers
- 3 onions
- 1/2 cup salt
- 2 cups vinegar
- 1 cup water
- 3 cups brown sugar
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon ginger
- 2 tablespoons mustard seed
- 1 teaspoon turmeric
- 1/2 teaspoon celery seed
- 1 pod hot red pepper
- 1 piece horseradish

Dill Pickles.

- 35 to 40 fresh cucumbers
- 2 tablespoons mixed spices
- 1/2 pound dill
- 2 cups salt
- 2 gallons water
- 2 cups vinegar

Wash and dry cucumbers. Put a layer of dill and 1/2 of the spices in a stone jar. Add the cucumbers.

Put the remaining spices and dill on top of the cucumbers. Boil salt, water and vinegar 2 minutes. Cool to room temperature and pour over cucumbers. Cover with a plate weighted down to hold the cucumbers in the brine. Keep at an even temperature (80 to 85 degrees). Remove skum each day. The pickles are ready for canning when they are crisp, uniform in color and well-flavored with dill. This usually requires 2 to 4 weeks. Pack the cured pickles into hot jars, cover with hot brine and seal at once.

If the pickles are to be stored a long time, process them in water bath for 15 minutes at a simmering temperature.

If you like fruity pickles, you'll like this one:

Peach Pickles.

- 1 gallon peaches
- 7 cups sugar
- 1 piece ginger root
- 2 sticks cinnamon
- 1 tablespoon whole allspice
- 1 teaspoon whole cloves
- 2 cups water
- 3 cups vinegar

Clingstone peaches are best for pickling, although freestone may be used. Pare hardripe fruit. Leave whole. Boil 3 cups sugar and spices (tied in a bag) and vinegar for 3 minutes. Add 10 to 12 peaches at a time. Simmer until they are tender. Let stand in syrup 12 to 24 hours. Pack peaches into hot jars. Add remaining sugar to syrup and cook to desired thickness. Pour over peaches. Process 5 minutes in hot water bath.

It's Quite Simple to Expand That Old Wash Stand to Fit Large Space

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

IT IS easy enough to make a small serving table out of an old wash stand but, when there is a large wall space crying for an imposing piece of furniture and nothing but a small wash stand on hand, the problem is something else again. Here you see the solution.

The lower sketch shows how the carpenter work was done. Note the pieces across the bottom of the stand to cover the irregular line, also the hinged arms so that the skirt may open out.

MORE ABOUT O. P. A. (Sixth installment by Marvin W. Marcus, Local Price Clerk, War Price and Ration Board).

WAR COST AND PRICES

The average American family thinks of prices only in terms of its cost of living.

It doesn't realize that the government today is buying 46 per cent or over of all goods produced. . . . that excessive prices greatly increase war costs and thereby raising the cost of battleships, tanks and all other equipment of war.

These excess war costs resulting from high prices pile up national debt. They hit us all. We have to pay higher taxes.

What Would the War Have Cost To Date Without Price Control? World War I cost $32,000,000,000 of which $18,500,000,000 was a necessary cost. Seventy-two per cent, or $13,500,000,000, was added to necessary cost by inflationary price increases.

Let's compare inflationary pressure of World War I and of the present war. Then everyone can decide for himself how much the cost of this war would have increased, but for O.P.A. PRICE CONTROL.

Let's compare these pressures. . . . which make prices soar unless they are held under control.

1st. War cost for World War I, $32,000,000,000 (the end). World War II, $136,000,000,000 (through 1943) and still growing at the rate of $7,500,000,000 a month.

2nd. Public buying power in 1918, $58,000,000,000 (after taxes). . . . World War II, year 1944, $124,000,000,000. This is the money that the American people have available to spend in any way they see fit after taxes are paid.

3rd. Per cent of goods going to war. World War I—for civilians 75 per cent, for war 25 per cent. World War II, for civilians, 64 per cent, for war 46 per cent.

4th. Buying power vs goods, 1944. $124,000,000,000 buying power after taxes. . . . goods and services for civilian use $90,000,000,000; the rest of $34,000,000,000 gone to war.

5th. Actual currency outstanding (some in banks, some in our pockets and some in mattresses)—World War I, at start of war $3,400,000,000, after 52 months of war $15,800,000,000. World War II, at start of war, $7,200,000,000; after 52 months this war, $19,900,000,000.

6th. Checking accounts in banks—World War I, June 30, 1914, $10,082,000,000; June 30, 1918, $14,345,000,000. World War II, June 30, 1943, $27,355,000,000; June 30, 1943, $56,059,000,000. (About $1,600,000,000 of this sum is covered by currency, held by banks and is included in currency outstanding.)

Having compared the pressures which tend to send prices soaring, it will be interesting to compare what actually happened to prices of goods entering largely into the cost of war. The facts will be shown in next week's installment.

REVIEWS & PREVIEWS

themselves, and to the rest of humanity.

Great problems—like should we disarm Germany? Should we disarm completely the conquered nations? Should we remain in permanent alliance with Britain and Russia? And others—will be before us. We cannot give hasty judgment. A snap answer to these questions is worse than no answer at all.

To questions like these, our servicemen would like to get a chance to help answer—because they do not want stupid judgment and selfish interests to waste all their energy, time and blood. They want all decisions rendered to be based upon knowledge and truth.

That is a big order. But we have, as a nation, come of age. It is time that we have begun to act like a big nation in peace as well as in war.

Definite plans for the education of the average man need to be undertaken. This is no exaggeration. We are woefully uneducated in relation to the social and political problems of other peoples. How can we, as perhaps the most influential power at the peace table, do the most and best for the security of the future if the men at the peace table do not expect to be backed up to the last by the people at home? I am inclined to think that all of our statesmen are a bit afraid of the specter of Woodrow Wilson's defeat looming up once more.

More than ever before, public opinion in America will be important. It must be informed public opinion.

This planned education must be honest. It cannot be fraught with prejudices and selfish interests as has so much of our radio and movie—and formal, too—education.

This education must include not just a small group of people. It must reach most of the people. The time is short. It must be begun individually by each and every community. The local boards of education must not be asleep this time. They need to use their facilities for the benefit of those graduated, as well as for those who have not graduated.

The Senior classes of our high schools and colleges for the next two years will contain men and women who will—whether they will it or not—become leaders in great communities and in small ones. But they will be leaders. And they must be unbigoted leaders.

The responsibility of how well they succeed falls upon our educational system. I once heard Dr. Ben Wood, one of America's leading geographers, tell an audience that he and his colleagues were responsible for America's dismal failure in understanding world geography. If our postwar world fails this time, the men and women behind our educational system can feel far more responsible than ever before.

These are only ideas. The plans need to be formulated soon, before we meet a new kind of "too late and too little."

themselves, and to the rest of humanity.

Great problems—like should we disarm Germany? Should we disarm completely the conquered nations? Should we remain in permanent alliance with Britain and Russia? And others—will be before us. We cannot give hasty judgment. A snap answer to these questions is worse than no answer at all.

To questions like these, our servicemen would like to get a chance to help answer—because they do not want stupid judgment and selfish interests to waste all their energy, time and blood. They want all decisions rendered to be based upon knowledge and truth.

That is a big order. But we have, as a nation, come of age. It is time that we have begun to act like a big nation in peace as well as in war.

Definite plans for the education of the average man need to be undertaken. This is no exaggeration. We are woefully uneducated in relation to the social and political problems of other peoples. How can we, as perhaps the most influential power at the peace table, do the most and best for the security of the future if the men at the peace table do not expect to be backed up to the last by the people at home? I am inclined to think that all of our statesmen are a bit afraid of the specter of Woodrow Wilson's defeat looming up once more.

More than ever before, public opinion in America will be important. It must be informed public opinion.

This planned education must be honest. It cannot be fraught with prejudices and selfish interests as has so much of our radio and movie—and formal, too—education.

This education must include not just a small group of people. It must reach most of the people. The time is short. It must be begun individually by each and every community. The local boards of education must not be asleep this time. They need to use their facilities for the benefit of those graduated, as well as for those who have not graduated.

The Senior classes of our high schools and colleges for the next two years will contain men and women who will—whether they will it or not—become leaders in great communities and in small ones. But they will be leaders. And they must be unbigoted leaders.

The responsibility of how well they succeed falls upon our educational system. I once heard Dr. Ben Wood, one of America's leading geographers, tell an audience that he and his colleagues were responsible for America's dismal failure in understanding world geography. If our postwar world fails this time, the men and women behind our educational system can feel far more responsible than ever before.

These are only ideas. The plans need to be formulated soon, before we meet a new kind of "too late and too little."

MCCORVEY ADDRESSES DEMOCRATS

I believe that with a better understanding of conditions in our section, the Democrats in other sections will begin to realize that in their efforts to do away with our segregation laws they are doing nothing but harm, and are not being helpful to anyone. As the situation appears to me, those of us who entertain the views which we hold as to the absolute necessity of our segregation statutes would have nowhere to go if we wished to abandon the Democratic Party. We could certainly hope for no relief along these lines from the Republican Party. Even a glance at the very radical racial platform adopted by the Republican Party shows conclusively that we have nothing to expect from that source. I have never thought that I could get anywhere trying "to reform the other fellow's party," but am firmly convinced that I can accomplish far more trying to reform my own party, where I certainly would have much more weight and influence than if I went over into the enemy's camp and tried to tell them how to run things. I don't think that the third party agitation we get anywhere. For many years we have had third parties to flash on the political scene from time to time, but I don't think any of them survived more than one election. Personally, I believe strongly in the two-party system which gives a sufficient check to prevent wholesale abuses. We certainly would not wish to follow in the foot-steps of some of our Republics to the South, where they have six or eight different parties. Such a situation brings about untold unrest and lack of stability in Government, and in my opinion the thing for the people of the South to do is to stand by the Democratic Party, give it our whole-hearted support and allegiance, go to our Democratic National Conventions and unite in a manner that we have ever united before, and insist upon and demand that redress which we feel we are entitled to from our own Party. There is no doubt in my mind but that Alabama will go overwhelmingly Democratic in November. With all of the fight which was made on Roosevelt by the Willie people in 1940, here in Mobile County the Democratic ticket swept Mobile County by a vote of 11,477 for Roosevelt to 1,890 for Willie, a majority of more than six to one for the Democratic ticket. The State as a whole did almost as well by the Democratic Party, the vote throughout the entire State being 250,726 for Roosevelt against 42,184 for Willie.

Of course, much has been done by our Party that I do not approve of, but I believe in doing my fighting within my Party, and not without it. I very earnestly and very sincerely believe that if the Southern people will unite and present a solid front at our National Conventions, as I had hoped they would do at our last Convention, we can bring about a greatly changed situation in the treatment accorded to us by our National Administration. We can certainly expect nothing from the Republican Party in return for our having voted against them for three-quarters of a century, whereas the Democratic Party owes us an everlasting debt of gratitude as we have been the back-bone of that party for several generations and have really prevented it, on several occasions, from passing into oblivion. With united effort, I feel confident we can remedy many of the matters which are now giving us trouble.

Respectfully submitted, GESSNER T. MCCORVEY, Chairman State Democratic Executive Committee of Alabama.

To The Voters OF CLANTON

To All the People of Clanton:

On Monday next, you will go to the polls to vote for a new Mayor, and a board of five councilmen. These officials, together with those selected by the council, will govern and act as your servants for the next four years. As a candidate for Mayor, I take this opportunity to make a final appeal to you for your vote and influence. I have made no promises whatever as to whom would be employed by the City or recommended to me by the council for employment, and I promise that the council will make the best selection available.

I wish to thank the many friends who have worked so tirelessly and earnestly in my behalf, and I urge that you not let up until victory is ours. It will be impossible to get around to see every voter, and there must be some whom I will be unable to contact. To those, I take this means to urge you to go to the polls and vote for me next Monday. I assure you that your vote will be appreciated, and I will make every effort to justify your confidence in me.

I am now thirty-six years of age and have been a resident of Clanton since 1926; eighteen years, as you know, I have been engaged in business in our City and all of my adult life has been in your midst. My life must be an open book to you, and I invite the closest scrutiny. In making my decision to run for the office of Mayor I made a thorough investigation as to the duties and responsibilities attached to it, the financial conditions of our City, its past, present and future possibilities. I am fully aware of the duties and responsibilities of the office of Mayor, and in my humble way and with the cooperation of the council to be selected at this time, I pledge that the job will be handled with dispatch and efficiency.

Something has been said in the campaign that I would not have the necessary time to attend to the duties of Mayor's office. I assure you that I have ample time to take care of this office in a most satisfactory manner. I would not have asked for this office if I was not sure that I could put the necessary time to the job.

In recent years parental and juvenile delinquency have become one of our major problems, not only as a nation, but right here in our City. I find that the people of Clanton are aware of this fact and are looking to our City officials to take aggressive action to improve this condition. As a family man I realize the conditions confronting our City, and that something must be done about this. Public play-grounds, swimming pool and other places of amusement are usually provided by the municipal authorities for our children, and our officials have been somewhat backward in this respect. With the cooperation of the council, I pledge you our best efforts to remedy this.

In checking the records, I find that about fifteen years ago, the people of Clanton voted public pool rooms OUT. The facts show that during the former administration of Mr. Jones, pool rooms were permitted to operate in Clanton without your vote or approval. As I recall there were about five in operation at one time during his administration and probably five at the time he surrendered the office to Mr. Stapp. I am personally against public pool rooms, due to the bad element commonly connected with the same, and will see that the law which the people of Clanton voted in is enforced until such time they voice their opinion differently.

I do not ask for the office of Mayor for political or financial gain to myself. I only want it so that I may better serve the City of Clanton in these critical and changing times. It is apparent that our City has some wonderful opportunities before it. To take the fullest advantages of some of these opportunities it will become necessary that the City of Clanton, and the Mayor and the council cooperated with our County officials, and State officials, and our Federal officials to the end that whatever may be for the common good of all the people may be provided.

In closing, I wish to state that many rumors have been circulated with reference to my opponent and myself, and probably members of the council standing for re-election. As for myself, my life is an open book and I call on you to bear witness; as for my opponent, the records speak for itself. He has been among you some forty-five years and has served you as Mayor, the office he now seeks. You have a right to look to the record and presume that the same policies followed during former terms will prevail.

I ask only for clean and honest votes. I have sought no votes whereby, so voting it involved the integrity of a voter. We have had no paid hands.

We pledge you that your administration will be on a fair, honest and clean basis. We will have nothing to do with anything other than this.

I ask your vote on my reputation and my record as a fellow citizen of Clanton.

Sincerely,

F. LEO THOMPSON.

TO THE CITIZENS OF CLANTON

Recently I expressed my appreciation of your cooperation and indulgence during my term as Mayor of Clanton. I also promised to give you another financial statement. I feel that in fairness to the members of the Council who are asking for re-election that I should make the following report to you at this time.

An audit of the City books as of September 30, 1940, showed the following financial condition:

RESOURCES

Cash on hand in Bank	$1,223.01
Accounts Receivable, Meter
Sales	191.00
Uncollected Ad Valorem
Taxes	1,133.13
Uncollected Water
Accounts	1,206.80
Salaries Advanced To
Employees	55.00
TOTAL	$3,808.94

An audit of the City's books as of August 31st 1944, showed the following financial condition:

RESOURCES

Cash on hand in Bank	$6,215.41
Accounts Receivable,
Meter Sales	35.00
Uncollected Ad Valorem
Taxes	None
Uncollected Water
Accounts	231.72
Salaries Advanced to
Employees	None
TOTAL	$6,482.13

The itemized bonded indebtedness as of September 30th, 1940, was as follows:

Water Works, General Obligations	$25,000.00
School, General Obligations	5,000.00
Refunding Street to Sidewalk	15,000.00
Municipal Improvements, General Obligations	20,000.00

The itemized bonded indebtedness as of August 31st, 1944, was as follows:

Water Works, General Obligations	$25,000.00
School, General Obligations	5,000.00
Refunding Street and Sidewalk	None
Municipal Improvement, General Obligations	18,500.00
Water Works Improvement, General Obligations	11,000.00
Public Improvement (Ord. 103)	10,000.00
Municipal Sanitary Sewerage	13,000.00
TOTAL	$82,500.00

You will note some improvement in resources as well as a net improvement of $41,603.17 in Liabilities as of August 31st, 1944, over September 30th, 1940.

Along with the unpaid accounts shown above, the Police Court Records showed many unpaid fines and costs accounts. The audit as of September 30, 1940, showed fine and cost accounts collected that year totaled $471.55, whereas, the audits for 1941, 1942 and 1943, showed receipts from fine and cost accounts for the three years totaled $4,789.00, or an average of $1,596.33 per year. Up to September 11, this year, the fine and cost accounts received a total of $837.50. We think that through increased fines and forced collection of accounts, we have materially reduced the liquor traffic in Clanton.

We will give you another report later referring to certain other improvements.

Signed:

C. E. STAPP, Mayor of Clanton.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D., Of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for September 17

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Religious Education; used by permission.

THE KINGDOM STRONGLY ESTABLISHED

LESSON TEXT—II Samuel 2:47; 5:1-10. GOLDEN TEXT—They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be moved, but abideth forever.—Psalm 125:1.

Position and power are important to a king, but of even greater importance is the winning of the hearts of his people. Only as he has them with him can he build a great nation.

David was the Lord's anointed. The kingdom was his. But God expected him to make the necessary effort and use his own abilities to bring it into a place of honor and usefulness. God gives us all we have, but He does not shower it down on us; we must go out and possess it.

Note in the three verses that precede our lesson (vv. 1-3) that David moved forward only after prayer and divine guidance. Little wonder that he succeeded.

I. The Southern Tribes Declare Their Loyalty (2:47).

The nation was divided into two parts, Judah in the south and Israel in the north. To bring them together again called for consummate skill. David had it.

When Saul had died, David showed his respect and genuine loyalty to the king by his actions and by his song of lament which we find in II Samuel 1. Then by the Lord's leading he went to Hebron, the national capital of Judah, and there awaited the will of the people.

His declaration for David was not long in coming. They knew and respected him. He had shown himself to be their friend (I Sam. 30:26) and now they made him king. It was the first step and a long one in the right direction.

II. The King Makes Friends by Being Friendly (2:5-7).

The men of Jabesh-gilead, hearing that the Philistines had killed Saul, went for his body and gave it suitable burial. This gave David occasion to show his fine spirit of appreciation, which naturally warmed the hearts of all those who had loved and followed Saul. It was excellent strategy, but at the same time it was the natural expression of a good heart.

He that would have friends must show himself friendly (Prov. 18:24). And why not? The friendly and open-hearted kindness of some Christians does more to win others to Christ than the brilliant discourses of some exclusive Christian workers. Most of the Lord's work is done by ordinary people with warm hearts. Is there any reason why we cannot all be winsome and attractive in Christ?

III. The Northern Tribes Recognize Their King (5:1-10).

A period of seven years elapsed before this took place. The house of Saul was not willing to yield its supposed rights to the throne, and there was fighting and struggle. In it all David showed himself to be upright and considerate.

There is value in gradual development and in the struggle for the right. Had David found immediate success one wonders whether he would have gained the strength he needed for the future.

Then came the day when Israel, the tribes of the north country, of their own accord chose to put themselves under David. Note that it was because of their regard for him (v. 1, 2) that they came to him (v. 3). That was great.

A united people! How important that is in the affairs of the nations. Nothing is more disturbing or a greater hindrance than internal friction. We ought to deal quickly and decisively with any group or force in the life of our nation which is clearly divisive or disloyal.

Think, then, how important it is that God's people in the Christian Church stand together in undivided loyalty to Christ, our King, and in loving devotion to one another.

IV. The King Established a National Capital (5:8-10).

Jerusalem, which was to be the "city of David," and which figures so prominently not only in history but in prophecy, had to be wrested from the hands of the heathen Jebusites, and be established as the sacred city and the capital of the Jewish nation.

Note that the kind and considerate king was not a weakling. He knew how to fight and to win. Verse 8 is difficult to interpret, but evidently does not mean that David was cruel. The Jebusites taunted him by saying that their blind and crippled could hold the wall against David's men. They doubtless put their best soldiers on the wall, and David said to his men, "Let us take these cripples."

We see in verses 9 and 10 that David was not only a fighter, but also a builder. He began then the development of Jerusalem, the great city of which we are yet to hear wondrous things.

Star Dust STAGE-SCREEN-RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE Released by Western Newspaper Union.

BY THIS time, if you're a Charlie McCarthy fan, you've met Effie. Edger Bergen's newest dummy, Effie is the result of the combined efforts of a number of people. Bergen submitted some Effie recordings to a dozen or more Disney-Schlesinger cartoonists, and the final result is a composite of the best features of all their drawings.

Dairo, a well-known portrait artist, made up her face. Bergen, who has had a female dummy under consideration for some time as a foil for Charlie, hopes we, the public, will like Effie.

Allen Jenkins, character comedian who left Hollywood more than a year ago and has since traveled 57,000 miles entertaining the armed forces, will return to the movies in "The Wonder Man," the Samuel Goldwyn comedy starring Danny Kaye. Now in North Africa with a USO camp show, Jenkins cabled acceptance of a gangster role similar to the one he did for Goldwyn in "Ball of Fire."

John Neshbitt, who broadcasts his "Passing Parade" over CBS three nights a week, has just finished a Metro "Passing Parade" movie short, "Moments that Made History." It highlights discoveries of the stethoscope, sulfanilamide and the vulcanization of rubber.

Dean Jagger, who served as chaplain on the Blue network's "Blind Date" recently, was spending his last evening in this country. He flew to England the next day to begin work on a picture for the British government, which is designed to promote good will between England and the United States; when completed, the film will be released in this country.

Ensign Jay Robinson, U. S. N., who won the $500 cash award in a nation-wide contest for the best American conception of Salome, used no model for the portrait—so now Director Marvyn Leroy is trying to find somebody who looks like it to play the Salome role in "The Robe." It will be more prominent in the RKO picture than it was in the widely read book.

It looks as if Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy would have to appear together in pictures and on the air forever. Their second costarring appearance on the air, in the first of this year's DeMille theater programs, was the result of an avalanche of mail requesting it.

The August Daytime Network Reporters reports that "When a Girl Marries" leads the list of "Top Ten" weekday programs. "Ma Perkins" is second, and "Our Gal, Sunday" third. Then come "Big Sister," "Romance of Helen Trent," "Life Can Be Beautiful," "Sister Dalis," "Young Widdie Brown," "Kate Smith Speaks," and "Breakfast at Sardi's."

M-G-M is going to launch King Vidor's "An American Romance" in style befitting the elaborate production. On October 27, according to present plans, the picture will have initial showings in each of the state capitals and the national capital. Vidor says that he's been thinking about this picture for 18 years, ever since he made "The Big Parade"—typifying the spirit of America.

Those battered shoes which Ed Wynn wears to his broadcasts have borne him through 42 years of stage, screen and radio stardom, so of course he got them out for his new "Happy Island" radio program. Originally purchased for $3.50, Wynn figures that they've cost him $5,000 for upkeep, but he refuses to part with them—the rationing situation is his latest excuse.

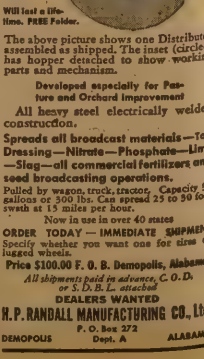

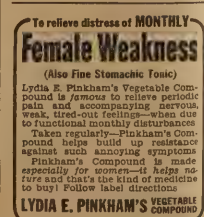

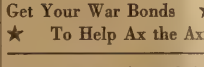

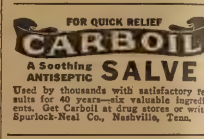

ODDS AND ENDS—"The Shadow," one of radio's most chilling dramas, returns to the air via Mutual September 24. . . . The new band leader for Metro's "Screen Fests" is . . . Marguerite Chapman has the lead opposite Paul Muni in "Counter-Attack." Muni will play a Russian guerrilla. . . . Dorothy Lamour let her hair return to its natural dark brown shade for her role of a pensive girl in "A Medal for Benny." . . . Nearly ten years ago Fred MacMurray made his first Paramount picture, the "Gilded Lily," with Claudette Colbert; his latest costar, "Practically Yours," is her latest under contract to Paramount.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Sorting the contributions to the nation's scrap rubber drive has been a tremendous job. There are more than 75 types of rubber scrap, but most reclaimed rubber tonnage is derived from cars.

Rubber plantations covered over eight million acres at the outbreak of the war and had a potential production capacity of 1,600,000 long tons a year, according to rubber experts. Our synthetic rubber plants, some of which have already exceeded rated capacities, are expected to turn out over 1,000,000 long tons a year when operating at peak.

For more information on rubber, write to the Rubber Research Council, 1000 N. 1st St., Phoenix, Ariz.

MRS. ANNIE REBECCA LENOIR

Mrs. Annie Rebecca Keener Lenoir passed away at 7:30 on the morning of September 3th, 1944. Mrs. Lenoir was one of the old pioneers who lived to reach the age of 75 years. After a few months of illness she passed on at the old homestead—Mt. Carmel.

She is survived by 12 children—eight sons, four daughters—Mrs. Tyler Harrison of Stanton, Ala., Mrs. Curtis Wallace of Raleigh, N. C., Mrs. Clint Keener of Maplesville, Ala., Mrs. Vaughn Sims of Birmingham, Ala.; Houston, Arlie, Pleas, Lester, Gracie and Earnest, all of Maplesville, Ala., Clyde of White City, and Glover of Birmingham.

Mrs. Lenoir has 31 grand children and 13 great grand children. She is survived by four brothers—Mr. Bob and Buck Keener of Stanton, Ala., Mr. Harry and Abe Keener of Plantersville, Ala.

She was married to Willie Clayton Lenoir March 11th, 1890. He passed on June 26th, 1926.

Mrs. Lenoir was a friend to all, both young and old. She will be missed deeply in our community. She always wore a smile and was always willing to comfort and help anyone in need. We know she can't be with us in person, now, but through a haze of glory we see her bright smiles. We know that she, has gone to her Home in Heaven, and is resting there in peace and glory.

The funeral services were held at Mt. Carmel Baptist Church at 3:00 o'clock on the 7th of September, Rev. J. D. Hopper conducted the service. Prayer was led by Rev. C. P. Haggard, pastor of the church. Rev. Hyman Atchison and his choir led song service.

Pallbearers were the grandsons: Willie Harrison, Jimmie Harrison,

Clarence Harrison, Dewey Harrison, Grover J. Lenoir and James Lenoir. The flower girls were grand daughters: Mrs. Ralph Wallace, Mrs. L. M. Chandler, Mrs. Woody Kliner, Mrs. Bartley Giles, Miss Dorothy Lenoir, Miss Ruth Lenoir.

Spigener Funeral Home was in charge.

Let us not weep for she is sleeping peacefully in Heaven, not to be forgotten by her loved ones.—The Children.

A CHARITABLE DEED

Mr. Sam Mitchell passed around a subscription list in behalf of Mr. Ed Cooper and secured an admirable amount to take him to the hospital. Mr. Cooper is back and shows marks of improvement.

He wishes to express to each of his friends who have contributed to his needs and to Mr. Mitchell his sincere thanks and appreciation. Deeds of this kind are called the deeds of the righteous in the Bible. May we do more.—A Friend.

SHILOH

Our services were well attended, both Sunday and Sunday night. The pastor delivered us two inspiring messages, which was enjoyed by all present.

Remember next Sunday night is the time to elect new officers for our B. T. U., so let's all be there.

Moral Echoes

At our camp the fish had been caught and dressed and were ready for the frying pan. Then the cook took possession and rubbed salt into every piece. A hungry little boy saw the delay and asked, "Uncle Tom, why don't you pour the salt on the fish and start frying?" Then Uncle Tom looked at him over his glasses and said, "Sonny boy, salt must get into the fish before it will be good." A good cook puts the seasoning into the food while it is cooking, and not on top of it after it is cooked. Being able to quote Scripture is no sign of piety. Unless the Bible is worked into the living of the Christian and becomes a part on the inside, there can be but little piety. Put the Scripture on the inside.

The pilot climbed into his plane in Kansas City and remarked, "We will make a fast trip today to Chicago for we have a tail wind blowing." The captain of the ship rounded the Southern point of Florida and remarked, "We will make good speed to New York as we will be traveling in the Gulf stream most of the way." In like manner the Christian will make good speed when he is caught in the currents that push him along the right way of life. Have you not felt yourself moving with speed as you were caught in the currents going your way? After all the real value of your soul is determined by the way you can battle on against the currents.

The skylark heard the tingle, tingle of a bell below and dropped down to inquire. There he found a man with a bucket of worms crying out, "Will trade a worm for a skylark feather." The skylark loved worms and he jerked out a feather from his wing and traded for a worm. It was so good and for days that little skylark met the man and traded a feather from it's wing for a worm. Then one day the skylark found that it had traded too many feathers for worms, and now it could not fly. Soon it's body and bones were found in the rubbish. Esau sold his birth-right for a mess of pottage. Do you not know a young man, a young woman, who is making a bad trade by accepting the offers of sin? It is poor business to trade feathers for worms.

It is not safe to buy land or to lend money and accept land as security without first investigating the Title of the land. Often there are unpaid mortgages and judgments or other liens, affecting the Title, which an Abstract would set out. Therefore, when buying land or lending money thereon, it is important that an Abstract of Title be furnished. A few dollars spent for an Abstract is cheaper than going ahead and having a law suit a little later on.

Do These Things for Better Light

AS THE days grow shorter your use of electric lights will increase. Children will soon have school "home work" to do—enough light for them should be a "must".

Light is cheap—sight is precious. For good lighting do these things:

1. Be sure that lamps and their reflectors are free from dust and film. The usefulness of electric light is greatly reduced by even a small film of dust.

2. Fill empty sockets with bulbs of proper size. Use shades or bowls to eliminate glare.

3. Place lamps at point of use; that is, where studying, reading and sewing are done.

4. Should you need additional portable lamps, buy those with the I. E. S. tag, which means that the lamp has been correctly designed, and that the design is approved by the Illuminating Engineering Society.

5. If you feel that you need advice regarding the best lighting arrangement for your home, call or come by our office. We'll gladly have one of our home lighting advisors visit you. There is no charge for this service.

HOW THEY ARE AND WHERE THEY ARE

Mr. Sgt. George A. Nix of Thoraby, Ala., is a member of a unit which has received a commendation from Brigadier General Jesse C. Auton, Wing Commander, for its contribution in aiding an Eighth Air Force Fighter Group to become operational in eleven days after arrival on the station.

The group set a new Eighth Fighter Command record when it was able to engage in combat in less time than it had taken any other fighter group to prepare for operational flying.

Mr. Sgt. Nix entered the Army in June, 1943. At present he is engineering line chief in a fighter squadron at this station.

Mr. Warren J. Millard, brother of Mr. M. L. Millard, of Clanton, Ala., has been the right to wear Wings and Bombs of the United States Army Paratroopers. He has completed four weeks of jump training during which he made five jumps from a plane in flight, the last a tactical jump at night involving a combat problem on landing.

Pfc. Cecil M. Headley, who is a member of the Infantry Replacement Training Center, at Camp Blanding, Fla., has been promoted to the rank of Corporal.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Fozza S. Headley, Clanton Route 3.

Sgt. Robert J. (Wash) Jones who is stationed in New York, has been spending a few days here with family and relatives.

M. M. I-C Thomas E. Moore, who has been overseas for the past 22 months participating in the North Africa, Sicily and Italy campaign, also in France during the invasion, has been spending a 30-day leave in Lawley, Ala., with relatives. His wife, Mrs. Leila Belle Moore, who has been employed with the Ford Motor Company in Detroit for the past year, accompanied him here.

He will return to Quanset, R. I., after his leave.

WITH NINTH AIR FORCE

MARAUDER GROUP

Like many other heroes in this war, Pfc. Thomas R. Williams, Jr., 26, of Maplesville, Ala., has an important job on his hands these days.

His is the vital role of preparing the Ninth Air Force Marauder "Sleepy Time Gal III" for devastating raids against Hitler's Europe.

Pfc. Williams is assistant crew chief of a ground crew with the Silver Streaks Marauder Group which is commanded by Col. Reginald Vance, of San Antonio, Texas. The bomber's combat crew depend on Pfc. Williams and other ground crewmen for their plane's mechanical condition before mission take-offs.

Pfc. Williams is the son of Thomas R. Williams, Sr., and Mrs. Jessie Williams Gillespie of Maplesville, Ala. He attended Maplesville High School before enlisting in the Army in October, 1939.

FOLK & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

—By BEN.

The wife and I took a flying vacation last week end pop-calling on old friends over Central and North-Central Alabama. One of our most enjoyable stops was at the Southern Democrat, piloted by Rice Howard, at Oneonta. Rice, like all of us, had more than he could possibly do, but was doing the best he could with very little help. However, Rice is more fortunate than most of us with the labor problem.

Last week the Kiwanis Club appointed a committee to find a patriotic citizen of our town who would bear the responsibility of War Chest Chairman. Judge Victor Heard is running for re-election in the November election and is going to be too busy to devote his time to it this year. Let it be said here, however, that Victor Heard really did a fine job last year as Chairman of the Alabama War Chest. Getting back to our story: Donald Blacketter, Reddie Taylor and Luther Little were the committee chosen. On Friday Donald went over to Maplesville and had a tooth pulled. Upon his return he was informed that the other two members of the committee wanted him to meet them at the Big Four Hardware Company. Donald hastened up there and the committee went into session. Luther told them that he had decided on the man for the job. Reddie said that he had decided on the man for the job. That's when Donald stuck his neck out. He told the committee that if they had decided on a man and agreed upon a man that their choice was O. K. with him. Whereupon both informed Donald that he was the man they had chosen and therefore would be the next County Chairman of the Alabama War Chest. Just having had a tooth pulled, Donald couldn't even argue with them. Just another case of talking when he should have been listening.

Found some old friends, May and Emory Lowery, in deep trouble at Oneonta where we spent the night Friday night. May's daddy is owner of the Blount County Messenger and their printer and operator had walked out Thursday (paper day) without notice and caught a bus. They were trying to get a paper out and neither knew the slightest thing about one. We all pitched in and at two o'clock Saturday morning the last paper was crammed into a mail bag and sent to the P.O. This newspaper work is a job when you know what you are doing.

We don't think that our State officials should brag about having millions of dollars in the State Treasury, of the taxpayers money, and yet, the school County Superintendents can't get teachers to teach our children because they won't offer them a fair salary or even a living wage for their services. We do not pay our taxes for the money to be hoarded in the State Treasury. We should only be taxed an amount to take care of our government. We believe the school situation as to teachers is worse than ever before. Then why don't some of our State officials do something. Surely they know the situation that prevails all over the State. If the money is there and cannot be touched because it is ear-marked for other departments, and a surplus accumulates like that, then there is something wrong with the Legislature that made the law. Either that or the "powers that be" don't want to do anything about it. Whatever the trouble may be. The taxpayers should demand that something be done about it.

We're going to let you in on something that we know for sure. We know who is going to be elected Mayor next Monday in our City Election. This is not a rough guess but has been arrived at after long and serious study. Whether or not you want to agree with our decision, in the end you will have to admit that we were right and hit the nail square on the head. This has been one of the most heated races for Mayor in many a moon, according to the "old timers" and as the days draw nearer interest increases. From where we sit it looks like the lines are drawn pretty near even. Anyway here we go, we're going to predict right now—it'll either be Fenn Jones or Leo Thompson.

MONTGOMERY TROUT

Up in the Goat Hill city last week we enjoyed (?) a dinner in a one-famous now-not-so-good, restaurant. On the menu it said tenderloin of trout with tartar sauce. The fish reminded us of the old yarn:

The man ordered a fish dinner and when it was served by the waiter he looked at the fish and started mumbling.

"I beg pardon, sir," said the waiter, "did you speak to me?"

"No," he replied, "I was talking to this fish."

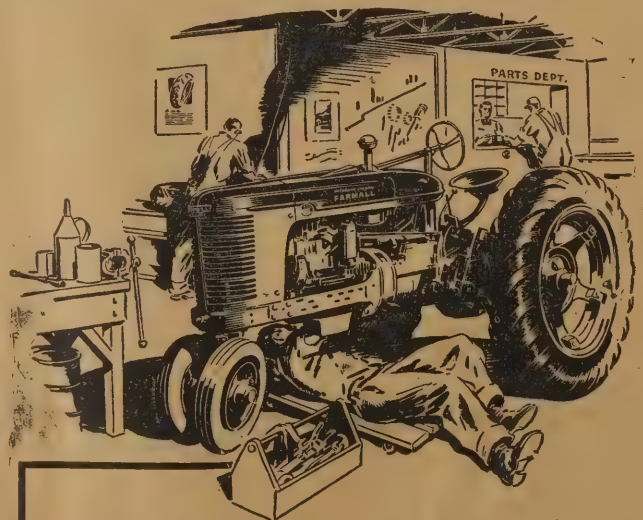

"Ahem, sir, did you say talking to the fish?"

"Sure I was talking to the fish. Would you like to know our conversation?"

The waiter thought he would indulge the gentleman and he replied that he would, whereupon the man said:

"I asked this fish how he was getting along and he replied that he didn't feel so good. Then I asked him how things were down at the river and he replied, 'I don't know. . . I haven't been there in a couple of weeks!'"

Lunch Boxes Can Be Versatile (See Recipes Below)

Lunch Box Tips

Vacation times are over! Invigorated and tanned by the sun, children, office workers and defense plant employees are returning to their regular duties.

It's important that a healthful schedule be followed after returning to work so that the benefits of vacations are not despoiled immediately. That means, for one thing, a sensible lunch to carry both children and adults energetically through the day. Lunches, whether they're eaten in the quiet of home, at the school desk or in a plant cafeteria, should contain a third of the day's food and nutritional requirements. Here's the plan:

- 2 or more good sandwiches
- 2 or 3 pint of milk
- Salad or stuffed eggs, carrot strips or celery
- Dessert—pudding, cake or sweet
- Surprises—dates, nuts, candy, etc.

Before we get into suggestions to amplify the plan, let's first set up a list of equipment which is good to have on hand for the makings of lunch. When the lunch is an everyday matter, and there are more than one to make, perhaps, it's a good idea to get a corner of the cupboard with equipment ready so as to save time in making.

A bread board with a sharp knife for cutting bread, and another unit or spatula to make the spreading of butter and fillings easy is a must. Then you need waxed paper for wrapping, string or rubber bands for tying in some cases, paper napkins, paper cups or jelly glasses with tightly fitting covers for salads, puddings, etc., straws for drinking, forks and spoons, individual salt and pepper cellars to tuck in the lunch box itself.

In a corner of the refrigerator itself, you can keep butter for spreading (to be taken out night before so as to be soft for spreading in the morning), fruits and vegetables, salads, puddings, and jars of sandwich filling.

This latter can be made at any time during the day and stored for use. Make enough to last for several days.

Now, we're ready for the business of the lunch itself. Sandwiches are first on the list. Everyone knows how to make sandwiches, but are they the kind you like to eat? Use this score card for them:

- 1. Is the bread fresh and moist?
- 2. Is there a variety of bread from day to day?
- 3. Is the filling palatable and Cooking Quickies: Whipping cream won't whip? Pour it into a bowl and set in another bowl filled with cracked ice. Then beat and watch it whip.

Use liquid from canned or cooked vegetables with which to flavor soups, gravies and casseroles.

Make one crust pie instead of two crust ones. It saves time and pastry.

Save dabs of butter from butter plates. Use them for flavoring vegetables in cooking.

Don't over-buy because foods are a bargain. Buy only those you can use.

Grind bits of leftover meat, mix with softened butter or mayonnaise, pickle relish, celery and a dash of catsup. Store in jars and set in refrigerator until sandwich time.

Last Game Takes All

By E. M. PARKINSON
McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

AS Clara Rivers parked her car before the Northville Farmers' Bank, William Hudson thrust his long face inside the window. "Car's gettin' kinda run-down, ain't it, Clara?"

Clara laughed, a plump, middle-aged spinster's pleasant laugh. "I'm not squandering money on new ones. I learned a lesson, William, when my father died and I got that mean note from one of the bank directors, threatenin' to foreclose on my farm. Lucky I found Pa's money in time. Only that letter rankles. I keep wonderin' who done it."

"When I find out, they'll answer to me!" William's voice dropped. "Ye know how I feel about ye, Clara. Any time ye say the word—"

"Sh! Someone's comin'!"

William nodded contemptuously. "Dumbest businessman in the state."

Big, good-natured Bruce Bigelow ambled over, grinning. "Mornin', Clara. Mornin', William. Well, William, you sure outsmarted me last week. Heard you sold my hog for twice what you paid me."

"Well, ye begged me to buy." "Dumb," Bruce chuckled. "That's me!" he turned to Clara. "Clara, I picked up a nice box of chickens. Could I bring it over tonight?"

Clara flushed. "Well, Will and me—"

"Sure!" William broke in. "I'd enjoy eatin' chocolates while I beat ye at smarr, Bruce. Or this here old ladies' game, anagrams. Hear ye've taken it up lately."

He went off and Bruce looked at Clara ruefully. "Clara, you ain't gonna marry William?"

Clara snapped. "If so, I wouldn't starve. I admire a smart man, Bruce."

"I know, Clara, but maybe I got reasons for appearin' so dumb!"

"Then you better prove it, Bruce. You got just tonight."

All the way home Clara fumed. She was so angry at Bruce that she'd almost have taken William Hudson, if it weren't for her awful uneasiness about the clock. She took to his hiding place back of the old Seth Thomas clock and read it for the thousandth time. It was typed in capitals on the bank's stationery, and signed only DREW A. MASS.

At ten that evening Clara could have cried. Bruce had lost every game. "You boys play this final one without me," she said, looking straight into Bruce's eyes. "Last game takes all."

The first plays went badly for Bruce. He held one word; BEAR. He drew A and made MA. "Take your BEAR to make MASS," William said.

Bruce drew and passed. "This is embarrassing!"

William's eyes narrowed. "Take your BEAR to put with MASS and make EMBARRASS!"

Clara gasped. "But—"

"Hush!" Bruce said. "No kitbitzin'!" He acquired two words, RITE and STRING.

"Take that RITE to make ENTIRE," William said.

Bruce drew and passed. "Nice game, eh, Clara? Interestin'!"

William leered. "Take your STRING to put with ENTIRE and make INTERESTING."

Clara was furious. "Bruce, that ain't —"

"No help!" Bruce said. Then, "Take your EAR to make BEAR. Losing a word upset William. 'Come on,' Bruce teased. 'Don't take from now to February.'"

"Thanks," William sneered. "I'll take your BEAR to put with BUY and make FEBRUARY."

Clara burst out, "That ain't the way to spell —"

"Never mind," Bruce said sternly. William had nineteen words. "Twenty words out," Bruce sighed. "Last game takes all. I'd sure like to win. It's — urgent!"

"Urgent, eh? I'll jest take your CUR to put with my HINT and make URCHIN! Hate to win so easy, Bruce."

Bruce leaped across the table, admiringly. "You got a lot of big words, Will. Pushin' 'em around, addin' a little here and there, you could make a little sentence."

Suddenly, before Clara's eyes lay a familiar message: VERY URGENT YOU PAY UP WITH INTEREST BY FEBRUARY OR SOMETHING EMBARRASSING WILL HAPPEN.

"Remind you of anything, Clara?" Bruce asked.

Clara went to the clock and returned to spread a worn paper on the table. "What's that, Clara?" William asked hoarsely.

"Just the note you sent me, Will, when Pa died."

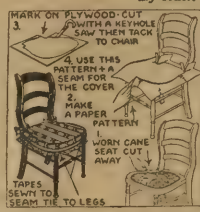

William's face purpled. "Look here! This ain't proof—"

"Tis," Bruce said quietly. "I tried out every other bank director, before witnesses. None of 'em got just this way of spelling these words. Maybe you'd like to resign, Will, without lettin' the town know why." He turned to Clara. "Sorry about losin', Clara."

Clara smiled meltingly. "You won the last game, Bruce. Last game takes all—including me!"

That Old Chair Can Be Reclaimed With New Seat and Coat of Enamel

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

NEW cane seats are expensive because the work is done by hand. Endless time is required also for scraping off layers of paint to get down to the grain of the wood in doing over many pieces of furniture. The chair shown here did not seem to be worth this labor. It was reclaimed with a seat from a scrap of plywood, blue paint and seat cover of blue and white ticking edged with white material raveled to make narrow fringe.

The chipped white enamel that was on the chair was rubbed with coarse sand and then with fine sandpaper until smooth. The new seat came next; then flat paint which was allowed to dry 24 hours before applying enamel. Next, the seat cover was made with a straight board around the front and across the back terminating in ties at the back corners.

NOTE—This chair remodeling idea is from BOOK 10 which also contains directions for making an adorable padded boudoir chair from an old kitchen chair; a high-back upholstered chair from odds and ends of wood, a little padding and some chintz. GROUND GRIP TIRES

Give EXTRA TRACTION because THEY CLEAN BETTER!

HAVE you been hearing or reading claims about tractor tire cleaning lately? As a farmer, you are entitled to know the facts. And here they are:

Remember that the Firestone Ground Grip Tread is patented. Its extra-long, triple-braced traction bars do not have "broken center" traction leaks, no trash-catching stubs or buttons. The wide spaces between the bars clean easily, even in soft soil, because there are no corners or pockets for mud to stick or hide. No wonder Firestone Ground Grips clean so much better in ALL soil conditions!

And don't forget that Firestone Ground Grip Tires give you up to 215 extra inches of traction bar length per tractor. That means extra pulling power—and the more pulling power you get, the more time and money you save!

From these facts, it's easy to see why more farm tractors are equipped with Firestone Ground Grip Tires than with any other make. Farmers naturally want the tires that pull better longer—the tires made by Firestone, the pioneer and pacemaker.

Listen to the Voice of Firestone every Monday evening, over N.B.C.

W. A. REYNOLDS WRITES IN FAVOR OF LEO THOMPSON

September 13th, 1944. I am glad that I live in a country that we have the right to go to the polls and cast our vote without fear or restraint for our choice of the candidate running. We have a young man offering his services for Mayor of this town who passes every trait and quality it would take to make a good mayor. He is fitted and is fully competent, as you know he has been a resident here for eighteen years and began business here with a small capital and has developed a business that speaks for itself. He is a real prohibitionist and stands against pool rooms or anything that is detrimental to our good little town of Clanton, and if you want a Mayor that you can depend on to perform his duties and lead this town to higher ideals and good business, you can't go wrong next Monday to cast your vote for Leo Thompson and all the Aldermen running with him. —W. A. REYNOLDS.

HIGH SCHOOL P.T. A. MEETS

The first meeting of the High School Parent-Teachers for the new year was called to order by the President, Mrs. J. E. Gowan, last Tuesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock.

Rev. Hickman of the Temple Church gave the devotional and led in the opening prayer. Mrs. Raymond Mims presented a group of her Glee Club Girls in several vocal numbers and if they gave us a sample of what they are going to do this year, then we certainly have a treat in store for us. The voices were lovely.

A brief business session followed, directed by Mrs. Gowan. Reports were made and old and new business discussed. A committee was appointed to begin work on a Halloween Party.

Mr. Hicks then introduced the guest speaker for the afternoon. She was Miss Josie Barefield, who is Superintendent of the Julia Tutwiler Prison at Wetumpka. Miss Barefield gave a most interesting talk on the project they are trying to work out in rehabilitating those young delinquents who are sent to the prison.

Miss Barefield's two sisters, Mrs. Paul Page of Mobile, and Mrs. Joe Earl Gowan of Marbury, were also guests of the meeting.

At the conclusion of Miss Barefield's talk, everyone was invited to the Home Economics Building. They were entertained by the Home Economics Girls and were given an opportunity to get acquainted with all the teachers.

There were ninety members and visitors who enjoyed this first meeting of the P.T. A.

Soil conservation districts covering approximately 628 million acres have been established in 45 states. The districts contain nearly 3 million farms. Biggest state acreage is in Texas (95 million acres), followed by Utah (35 million acres), Alabama and Oklahoma (32 million acres), and New Mexico (31 million).

in the art of getting absentee ballots than I am.

This article infers or rather states that certain of the Councilmen, if elected, will not work with me harmoniously for the good of our city. I had heard that this rumor was around, and I went first to Mr. Grady Hefflin, in the Peoples Savings Bank. I went next to Mr. Otto Jones in the First National Bank. I next saw Mr. Reddie Taylor at his place of business and then I saw Mr. John Derasum and Mr. Jim Wade at the City Hall, and I talked to these five men, and put the matter directly to them, in the case of my election as Mayor about our working together, for the good of Clanton, and of these men assured me that they would do this, and I believe one expressed the idea that if there was a fuss, that I would have to raise it, that he would not. Therefore, I have the assurance of these five men that there will be perfect harmony in the city affairs if I am elected Mayor. Certainly, these five men, nor either of them, would undertake to dictate to the people of Clanton whom they would have to elect Mayor. After all, it is up to the people of Clanton to elect a Mayor and not the Council, and I do not think the people should be forced to vote for a candidate who was not their own free will and choice. America has not yet reached that point.

I was Mayor for six years. There were Councilmen then that I did not vote for, but has any voter ever heard that there was not harmony or cooperation among the Council and Mayor while I was serving?

WATER OVER THE DAM

I have already reminded the people of Clanton what progress that was made during the six years that I was Mayor. Due credit goes to the Councilmen who were serving with me, as well as to the work of Judge J. Lee Smith, who was Mayor before me, and to him as Probate Judge and the Commissioners of the County, and I will not take the time to repeat what I said, but the people know that much progress was made during that time, and it will be my desire, if elected, to continue progress of that kind during the time that I served you as Mayor.

While we completed several projects in my administration, we had made plans drawn for a swimming pool and recreation ground, but these were interrupted by your vote four years ago, and if I am re-elected, it will be my purpose to complete these and give to the young people and children of our town, a swimming pool and recreation ground. I can hardly see though how the present Council are in a position to criticize me when I do not believe that one single improvement or addition to the City of Clanton has been made in their administration, and I do not think that it is right to charge me with the failure to secure an armory or any other project where it was the duty of the City Council, and certainly I am not to be charged with the failure of the present Council to secure projects for our city in the past four years, when I have had no official connection with the city.

I regret that this unsigned article appeared, and I don't think an unsigned article should have much, if any bearing, however it was apparently put out by the Campaign Committee of Mr. Thompson. The article, I assume, was paid for by Mr. Thompson, and I felt that he had broken his promise to me not to indulge in any "mud slinging," and that in defense of myself and my record that I should make some reply. I felt further that it would have been much better had they printed this article and given me ample opportunity to reply instead of waiting all these weeks of the campaign and publishing it in the last issue, and almost at the last hour.

I have lived in Clanton 42 years, and so far as I know will die here, and during this time I have contributed to the building of practically every church or school house in Clanton where I was solicited, or had an opportunity to contribute and I gave $600.00 to the erection of the Baptist Church, and $800.00 to the erection of the Methodist church and $400.00 to the erection of the Presbyterian church and corresponding amounts to other churches in Clanton, besides I have made from time to time contributions for the support of the ministers of one or more of the churches of Clanton.

The campaign committee for Mr. Thompson has raked my official and business past for forty-two years and their findings appear in this article. Mr. Thompson has no official political record as he has never held a public office, but he has been engaged in business here, and I think an occurrence has happened with his business life that the people are entitled to know, if they do not already do so. A Mayor is to be the Mayor of all the people, the working man as well as the business man, and while he has the right to select wages and hours for which people shall work under him, but it is my opinion that when he goes beyond that and attempts to influence other business men not to re-employ those who refuse to serve him at his meager pay that he is expressing an animosity and a feeling against the working class of Clanton, particularly those who might be less fortunate in securing the best jobs, and I submit that this disqualifies him to be the Mayor of Clanton, because most of the people in our little City are working people, and, he could not, under those conditions, be a friend to the working man.

I am sorry mud-slinging was resorted to by his campaign committee in the last hour, and I appreciate the two editors in being fair to me and in allowing me the opportunity to answer this article.

I ask you to go to the polls next Monday and vote your best conviction for the man who will serve you for the next four years, and whatever your choice may be, I will be a citizen of Clanton, and will continue to live here and will not slacken my efforts to do all I can as your Mayor, or as a private citizen, working always to the best interest and progress of our City.

VOTE FOR C. FENN JONES

To the Citizens of Clanton:

Monday, September 18th, is election day. We urge each of you to go to the polls and support the best man for the job, as Mayor for your town. Support the man who is best qualified for the job and has had more experience, and is one who has the time to give that the office requires. Mr. Jones is the man who has all the qualifications for the job, as you know he has had six years experience in this office. You certainly would not like to support a man who cannot give you any of his time and who has not had any experience in the city affairs. No doubt, you have seen in the paper where Mr. Jones's opponent has made some unpleasant remarks about Mr. Jones. You will always find the weakest candidate finds fault with his opponent; even in our State Senatorial election, unpleasant remarks were made about the opponent and you know what happened to him.

We ask you again to support Mr. Jones, as he is the best qualified man for the job.

We will appreciate your support.

(Paid pol. adv. by Friends of Mr. C. Fenn Jones)

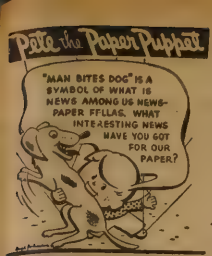

What's the Rush?

IT'S THE TELEPHONE RUSH. Every night thousands of service men and women dash to the nearest telephones to talk with families and friends at home. Most of the Long Distance calls from camps and naval stations are crowded into a few short hours.

Many circuits are likely to be crowded at that time and it helps a lot when you keep the lines clear from 7 to 10 for service men and women.

C. C. H. S. OPENS FOOTBALL SEASON HERE SEPT. 28TH.

C. C. H. S. TIGERS JOURNEY TO SELMA FRIDAY NIGHT OF THIS WEEK

Due to the fact that Auburn and Howard College are playing their annual foot ball game in Montgomery Friday night September 29, the opening game of the local high school has been moved up to Thursday night September 28.

Prattville will open the season on the home field for the local boys. Word comes out of Prattville that it has its biggest team in years and the Clanton boys are in for a work-out if the advanced dope is correct.

Prattville goes to Wetumpka Friday night of this week while the Clanton team opens the season in Selma. Both teams will meet strong opposition as Selma and Wetumpka had good teams last year, and both are coming back strong this season. The game here Thursday night Sept. 28, will begin promptly at 8:30 o'clock.

Problems And Responsibilities Of Retail Merchants

(Eighth in a series. Written by Marvin Marcus, Price Clerk, local War Price and Price Board).

The writer has in his several month of daily contact with the local merchants of this county, had quite a bit of experience as to what some of the merchants problems consist of, and it makes me feel as if some of the customers of these merchants could stand by and listen to many of the unreasonable requests and actions that are shown, it might cause us to be a little more considerate.

We know well that we as human beings are sometimes unaware of how difficult we unintentionally create trouble for the other fellow, for example, I'll give one that I've noticed a good many times. You know we have a good many food stores in our county that are self serve or semi self serve stores, and going up to the check-out counter and finding several that have made their purchase and find their way blocked or being delayed by a very fine and likeable lady who has just had her purchases checked and informed as to the amount and number of points and you see her begin to fumble or plunder into that (could you call it purse?) or bag, it would take an inventory crew a considerable length of time to list the different articles it contained, looking of course, for her ration book and hear her say in the mean time she didn't know there was points on so and so and after delaying you and many others who are waiting to be checked out she'll say oh my goodness, I've left my ration book at home I'll just have to owe you these points and I'll hand them to you when I come back, not realizing that the merchant has to have these points to replenish his stock and what predicament it places him in having that occur to him many times a week. Not mentioning the violation of the Federal Laws and if he insists on this fine lady leaving the groceries until she gets the points, oh, my goodness, she shows the disposition of being any thing but the sweet, pleasant lady she is at first and in many cases she doesn't forget to let the merchant know what she thinks of him.

Thank you, Raymond Popwell, conswain.

comes so disgusting it causes us all to get away from the real benefit of rationing.

Trouble? Yes, it's a lot of trouble but we ourselves are responsible for a lot of it by not trying to find out our part in making it easier on ourselves by keeping up with the regulations and the point changes that are published in all newspapers daily.

So, let's read the papers and notices that your OPA put out from time to time as to changes that are made and we all will better understand.

How unfortunate it has been that the government did not have time to conduct an educational program so we all could know more about OPA and the necessity of having price control.

Yet if such time had been taken prices would have been so far out of control it would have been impossible to have accomplished our aim in keeping down inflation.

Next weeks article will be more about the things we are not doing to make price control easier.

South Pacific.
August 26, 1944

Dear Firemen:
I just want to write you a few lines to show my appreciation to the splendid job you done in putting our house under control.

The citizens of Clanton as well as all my family owe the firemen a debt of gratitude for the good service they have done.

I don't know all of you but I want to thank each and every one of you I would like to thank you personally but I have a long time to stay out here in the South Pacific before I will be able to come home. I hope to see all of you in the near future.

Thank you, Raymond Popwell, conswain.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Columns Drive Into Reich
For Assault on Siegfried Line;
Bumper Grain Harvest Forecast

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The opinions expressed in these columns are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Following encounter with Nazi troops, U. S. patrol moves cautiously through Briancan in southeastern France in shadow of snow-capped Alps.

EUROPE:

Press Foe

While the German radio told its people that they must "fight on and on, come what may," strong spearheads from Lieut.-Gen. Courtney Hodges' First American army thrust inside of the Reich to bear down on the vaunted Siegfried line.

As General Hodges' forces smashed into Germany against stiffening opposition, Lieut.-Gen. George S. Patton's Third American army waged a bloody battle in the Metz and Nancy sector to the south, where bridgeheads were thrown across the Moselle river in the face of murderous enemy artillery fire.

In the third American sector below Nancy, Lieut.-Gen. Alexander Patch's Seventh army drew up its strength before the famed Belfort Gap, the open plain between the French Vosges mountains and the Swiss border leading into southwestern Germany.

While U. S. troops drew upon the Siegfried line, with its jagged tank traps and concrete fortifications set 50 miles deep, the British Second army punched over the Belgian border into Holland, where strong German forces slowed the sensational advance which had carried all along the channel coast area.

U. S. Bravery

As the big battle for Germany raged, there was no end to stories of American bravery.

There was the story, for instance, of Lieut. Raymond Bitney of Bloomer, Wis., in charge of a company sent to cover the evacuation of wounded from across one of the Moselle river bridgeheads.

While exposing themselves to enemy machine-guns and mortars, Lieutenant Bitney's men kept up a running fire to divert the enemy's

As Allied forces hammered into a tottering Germany, and strong American air and naval forces were bringing the war closer to Japan, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill met in another historic conference in Quebec, Canada, with their military advisers. Although the European situation was to command their attention, emphasis was to be placed upon plans for dealing the Japanese a knockout blow, it was reported.

attention from the efforts being made to transfer the wounded across the water by boat.

Hit in the neck himself, Lieutenant Bitney worked his way back to headquarters to inquire why vehicles were unavailable for transporting the wounded back of the lines after evacuation from the bridgehead. At headquarters, he insisted on returning to battle, and with back bandaged, trudged off again to the front.

Russ Massed

With their lines harassed in the west, the Germans found no relief in the east, where the Russians kept them on the go at both ends of the long front.

As the battle for Warsaw continued to rage with the Germans employing strong armored formations to curtail Red troops hammering out yardage to the northeast, other Russian armies massed for a drive against East Prussia, where the enemy was established in the wooded lake country.

In the Balkans, the Germans were now pressed to ward off a Russian smash through the mountains into the Hungarian plains, and to hold open a path through Yugoslavia for the evacuation of their Aegean and Greek garrisons periled by the collapse of Romania and Bulgaria.

CONSPIRATORS DIE:
Intrigue

Execution of six prominent economic, diplomatic, political and police officials of Germany for implication in the recent attempt on Adolf Hitler's life indicates the complicated maneuvering necessary to seize control of a state and keep it functioning.

Previously, Field Marshal Von Witzleben and seven other army officers had been executed for their part in the plot.

NOVEMBER 7:
As Maine Goes?

Although the nation has not always gone the way Maine went, political forecasters were trying to read some significance into that state's Republican landslide in the recent general election.

Besides winning the governorship by more than 75,000 votes compared with a 49,000 margin of two years ago, the GOP swept through the state's three congressional districts by better than 2 to 1.

Interesting feature of the congressional elections was the fact that all three of the Democratic candidates were endorsed by a subsidiary of the CIO's vaunted political action committee. Because Maine is not predominantly industrial, however, the political action committee's rebuff cannot be considered as a yardstick of its general strength.

MEXICO:

Teach Illiterates

With about half of Mexico's total population illiterate, that country has undertaken an ambitious program to have every educated person teach at least one illiterate non-Indian how to read and write simple Spanish.

Inaugurated by Progressive Pres. Avila Camacho, the program embraces instruction from elementary primers, illustrating "dog," "cat," "cow," etc., with the pupil's successful completion of the course recorded with local and federal government authorities.

In the case of educated people unable to undertake the instruction of illiterates, they may be permitted to hire teachers to perform the work, with amateurs expected to be largely employed because there will not be enough professionals to get around.

For the time being, no effort will be made to teach illiterate Indians, it was reported.

Expensive Care

Care of 15 Pekinese dogs will entitle Mrs. Mae McGuire of Ontario, Canada (above), to life interest in $100,000 trust fund set up in will filed by Mrs. Mae McGuire Shaw, owner of the dogs. In case Mrs. McGuire refuses, money will revert to estate.

WOOD:

New Uses

Latest of the scientific wonders is wood "steak," now on Swedish menus, and one of the many new uses found for wood which may spur the lumber industry in the postwar world.

In dish up a wood "steak," in a country where a steak may be a fried and breaded preparation, Swedes make it from a protein yeast obtained from a chemical decomposition of wood through addition of elements of water. In preparing their famous aquavit liquor, the Swedes also use alcohol derived through the same process, it was reported.

Other scientific advances contributing to greater wood utilization include the production of black plastic from sawdust; strengthening of timber through impregnation, heat and pressure; lamination of plywood to stand up under severe stress, and sandwicheing of one type of timber over another.

WAR PRODUCTION:

Cutoffs Minor

With only 49,200 employees affected by recent cancellations of $21,493,000 in war orders from June 15 to August 31, it is apparent that no substantial unemployment problem will develop until the defeat of Germany releases an estimated 4,000,000 workers.

At the present time, more than 9,500,000 persons are employed in the munitions industries, and production for the armed forces is running at a rate of $5,000,000 monthly.

Because many of the cutoffs were made in production that was only in the planning stage, and affected plants able to shift released workers to other war output, the full effect of the cancellations will not be felt before four months.

HOME LOAN:

Assets Increase

With mortgage outlets restricted by construction curtailment, member savings and loan associations of the Federal Home Loan Bank system showed an increase in holdings of government securities to $739,000,000 in 1943 from $260,000,000 in 1942. In all, the associations' assets rose to $5,538,000,000, a 10 per cent boost over the previous year, when an increase of 4.7 per cent was recorded.

Throttles Wife;
Lacks Nerve to Complete PactLondon's 'Old Bailey' Hears
Strange Story of an Unusual Murder.

LONDON. — The story of a woman going calmly to her death, making no struggle when a man placed his fingers around her throat and choked her until she was dead, was revealed in Old Bailey, famous English court where the murderers of London are tried.

Margaret Sarah Hayward, 33, married and mother of two children, was found dead in a room in Windsor house, Redhill street, N. W., London. She had been strangled. When police came to the room they found no evidence of a struggle. There was no other wound which might indicate that the woman had been stunned by a blow before being choked. Yet the woman was dead and marks on her throat proved how she came to her death. Then the mystery was solved by the slayer himself. He made no attempt to hide the crime, but insisted that Mrs. Hayward had agreed to die with him. After killing her, he said, he had been unable to carry out his part of the agreement.

As he stood in the dock in Old Bailey, he made no defense.

Father Hears Sentence. He was identified by police as Herbert Robert John Macavoy, 28, and a painter by trade. Two men who sat in the dock and testified that Mrs. Hayward had passed, were his father, wearing the uniform of the royal marines, and a man in the uniform of the British navy, husband of the slain woman.

Counsel for Macavoy said his client made no attempt to deny what he had done, and was anxious to let people know the truth: that, in fact, it was a suicide pact. "It is one of those cases," said counsel, "where counsel is not able to be of much assistance to the defense. I could only wish that the facts against him were not as plain as they appear to be. He does not deny that he destroyed his woman's life, but he wants to make it plain that he also intended to destroy his own life."

Macavoy spent the night of the murder with Mrs. Hayward, counsel for the prosecution said. In his opinion, he went to his employer and told him that he had killed a woman.

A detective arrested Macavoy, who, in a taxicab on the way to the police station, said: "I know what you want me for. My poor Margie!"

Later he added: "She is dead. I did it with my own hands. What a mess I am in!"

Woman Leaves Note. The police later found a notebook in which was written, in the dead woman's handwriting, the following statement:

"Let there be no tears for the action we are about to take. For my part I have no regrets. I have known no greater happiness than the last nine months with Marge. As I look back I am a little ashamed to think how much I have hurt her by thoughtless and selfish actions. That is the main reason for my taking this step. I can have no real happiness without her."

"Now we can be together without any question of anybody. Please let there be no harsh words spoken by any one. Let those who would bear evil thoughts think of their own pasts, and ponder before they speak. I love Marge honestly, earnestly, deeply, devotedly. To Vic (the murdered woman's husband) I can only express my regrets when I have overcome his sorrow, and I hope he will not become bitter to the memory of Marge. Marge will write this for me to show it is as she wants it."

Immediately underneath this note Macavoy had written: "My own darling Marge. Pray God I have courage to do my share."

Russ Tots Bled to Death

For German Blood Bank

LONDON, ENGLAND. The Moscow radio said that every child above the age of eight in the recently liberated Rogachev-Bobruisk district was carried away in March and April to German "blood donor camps" where "the fascist chancellors pumped blood for transfusion to wounded German officers and men."

Thousands of the youngsters perished from loss of blood, Moscow said.

"Many of the older children tried to run away," it added. "When the train slowed down they jumped out, but the Germans opened fire."

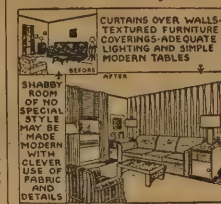

Grew Too Much Wheat,

Is Sued by Government

BALTIMORE, MD. — A Maryland farmer grew too much wheat three years ago—the United States government says—and consequently the defendant in a federal suit for a judgment for a claim of $62.99 and interest. Harry Munshower was said to have raised and marketed an excess of 12½ bushels of wheat over what he had been allowed in the wheat marketing program. The complaint stated the suit was brought to enforce marketing penalties of the agricultural adjustment act of 1938.

The Use of Fabric and Thread in Decorating Homes of Tomorrow

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

If you are dreaming about redecorating after the war—and who is not—put this in your note book. There will be a more lavish use of fabric in home decoration than ever before. There will be many new types of textiles and many new weaves. Fabrics will be designed to wear longer and to stay clean longer. A feeling of spaciousness will be obtained by blotting out some walls with curtains. Irregular or badly proportioned spaces will be brought into harmony by covering parts of them; and small windows will be made to seem high and wide by covering the wall around them.

The homemaker who can sew a straight seam will save many a dollar for she may have curtains of any length, width or fullness merely by stitching straightwidths together. And here is a decorator's tip for her—allow a hundred and fifty per cent fullness if French pleats are to be used at the tops of curtains; and set the machine for a long stitch for speed. Clip selvages every few inches to avoid puckered seams and hems.

NOTE—You do not have to wait for your home of tomorrow to have the attractive coffee table shown in this sketch. It is easy to make from straight cuts of lumber. A map, a favorite print or a piece of hand work may be placed under the glass top to give a decorative effect. Ask for pattern No. 254 and enclose 15 cents. Address:

Your Tax Obligations

Official Notice to Citizens

Clip and Post This Tax Chart in Your Place of Business

AD VALOREM

(Chief Support of Local Government)

Assessment—All property, real and personal, owned as of October 1 shall be listed under oath by the taxpayer with the County Tax Assessor's office in the owner's name between October 1 and December 31 each year and at fair market value. Every citizen is legally obligated to make his return on personal as well as real property under oath.

On January 1, a Tax Assessor's special fee of 50c for failure to assess before December 31 attaches as penalty, and on the third Monday of January, a 10% penalty attaches to the subsequent assessment.

All property brought into the State after the first day of October and before the assessor has completed his assessments (third Monday in February) is subject to taxation the same as if it had been held or owned in the State on the first day of October.

Evaluations are reviewed and final figures set by action of County Boards of Equalization. Taxpayer may appeal from the Board and to Courts. Homestead exemption up to $2000 value and not to exceed 160 acres may be claimed against state tax of 65c per $100. Any exemption to be effective must be properly claimed and listed on return.

Payment of Tax—Property taxes are paid on 60% of valuation fixed for preceding tax year. Payment must be made between October 1 and December 31 inclusive. Interest and penalties begin on January 1. Escaped taxes may be collected for five-year period, plus current year, with heavy penalties.

SALES AND USE TAX

(Chief Support of Schools. Also adds Health, Farm Extension, Home Extension, Welfare and Old Age Assistance)

Levy—A 2% sales or use license tax is levied on the gross amount of retail sales of tangible personal property by Alabama businesses and on the use, storage, or consumption of purchases from outside the State or those not covered by the sales feature of this law. Exemptions are: wholesale sales to a licensed vendor for resale (not for use); tobacco, liquor, and motor fuels already taxed; seed for planting, fertilizer, sales direct from farmer, and certain materials and machines used by manufacturers in producing property for sale, interstate commerce, and sales to government.

Payment—Sales tax accrues each month (may be paid quarterly when less than $10 for each month). A report of gross sales and exemptions claimed must be in the hands of the State by the 20th of the succeeding month. 3% is allowed for prompt reporting. Use tax reports are made quarterly. Penalties and interest are assessed by law for tardy reporting.

Particularly heavy penalties are assessed for failure or fraud in reporting. The law requires that business men shall keep sufficient books and records to show clearly their gross sales, exempt transactions, and correct tax due. All purchases of taxable property must be kept for examination. Violations of reporting and record-keeping provisions are criminal and not civil matters. Tax, plus penalties and interest, is collectible for five years in retrospect.

The law requires merchants to pass the tax to the consumer. The retailer is a state agent in collecting the tax and is paid for prompt and exact performance of this service. Exactly 2% on sales should be collected. Precise change in coin or tokens is due the consumer. The State supplies an adequate volume of tokens to make accurate collection possible.

INCOME TAX

(For State Debt Payment)

Levy—Individuals having a net income of $1500 or more if single and $3000 or over if married (joint income) must file a return. Every partnership, regardless of amount of income, must report. Every estate or trust responsible for a net income of $1500 or more from on going in the same direction, causing damage no end, and no telling how many casualties. There is a law about driving on the highways after dark with lights and this law should be enforced.

Far be from us to put a damper on that gay spirit, but had you thought that it's time to buy another automobile tag. The Probate Office at the Courthouse has just your size, price and color. We're sure you will find one there that will just tickle you pink.

Those Martin boys at Jemison are certainly doing their bit toward winning the war. Sons of the late Albert Martin and Donnie Wilkins Martin, of the four sons, three are in service and one is in war work. Glenn Martin is somewhere in the South Pacific. Melvin, the third son, is in France. Vaughn is in the U. S. Marines and is stationed in the East. Bill, who resides on the old-home place above Jemison, is in war work at Childersburg, where he isn't raising or harvesting a crop. The Martins are typical of hundreds of families in Chilton County who are going all-out toward winning the war.

You know, our friend Horsley White is likely to bob up anywhere, at anytime. Beginning yesterday (Monday) we saw him behind the grilled window at the postoffice. They have been needing extra help there quite a while and we know of no more competent to fill the place than Horsley White. Here's wishing him well in his new place. The postoffice was fortunate in securing his services.

And while we're about it, let's wish the best of success in his administration as Mayor of Clanton, to Leo Thompson, or is it "hiz zonner" Leo Thompson? Everyone should get behind our young Mayor elect and aid him in every way toward making the next four year administration one of cooperation and progress.

One more and that's all—Let's take our hats off to Mr. C. Fenn Jones on his clean campaign and his good sportsmanship throughout. We are sure he will be one of Mr. Thompson's staunchest friends and most valuable advisors.

an estate must make a return. Every corporation must file.

Due Date—Returns must be in the State offices by March 15 after close of calendar years. Returns for fiscal years must be filed within 2 1/2 months after end of fiscal year's operation.

LICENSES

(For support of State, County, and City Governments)

State and County licenses (with a few exceptions) are payable at probate offices between October 1 and November 1. Penalties attach for delinquency.

Chain Stores—Under the Chain Store Act licenses on establishments selling merchandise become due January 1, and delinquent March 1.

Auto Licenses—Passenger car licenses are based on weight of vehicle; trucks on manufacturer's rated capacity; buses on number of seats. Proceeds are used for retirement of highway bonds, highway building and maintenance.

Licenses to carry on businesses or professions in Alabama must be obtained before such operations begin. Nearly all activities for profit are covered by some license. In addition to County and State, cities collect licenses for the privilege of operating within their boundaries. Licenses are more than revenue laws, for they serve as a control upon undesirable activities and an official listing of approved operations.

OTHER TAXES

A limited number of citizens are interested in the payment of: corporation permit fee and franchise taxes, financial institution excise tax, motor fuel taxes, mileage taxes on trucks and buses, tonnage tax on iron and coal, gross receipts on certain utilities, tobacco tax, playing card tax, carbonic acid tax (bottlers), etc. It is made to operate any business until tax responsibilities are understood.

Donald Nelson Remolded By Government Service

Thinks Public Officials' Responsibilities Greater Than Businessmen's; Believes Expansion Necessary to U. S.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

As Donald Nelson, head of the War Production board, slips his ten in Chungking, what is he thinking about?

He knows that most of Washington thinks he is through. He knows that some people think that if he is, business, big and little, has lost a friend at court.

He recalls that, before he could walk up the ramp of his plane to take off on this hazy mission to Ceylon, the President had casually remarked at a press and radio conference that the WPB chief would not necessarily take up his former duties when he returned.

He knew then that in all probability congress would pass the demobilization-reconversion bill which, although it does not name the WPB specifically, nevertheless does give power to a new agency which would make Mr. Nelson's organization a mere appendage.

He knew, too, that many of his colleagues who remain on the board, or hold other positions which will affect American economies in the next months, if not years, hold views contrary to his. Privately he calls them "contractionists," while he calls himself an "expansionist." A battle between these two categories is going on now. Mr. Nelson's fate may influence the outcome.

Because the results of this struggle may affect America's economy vitally in the next few years I think it is rather important to consider Mr. Nelson's own attitude; an attitude which has gradually developed since he has been in Washington.

I believe Nelson wants to stay in government. I believe, as do a small percentage of persons who are interested in his fate, that he will be two ways when they step into public life. There are the ones who, when the buzzer isn't answered immediately, or when the order is criticized or its wisdom or even its integrity questioned, explode in haughty anger. And there are the ones who learn to take it and go right ahead and find a way to get things done, with the chips and quips falling where they may, including into their own breakfast coffee.

Nelson is in the latter class. He not only can take it but he has grown to like it. In fact, he has decided, unless his friends read him wrong indeed, that he wants to be a public servant. That he believes he can get more satisfaction out of public life than out of private life. That doesn't mean that he will simply let himself be kicked upstairs into a sinecure. He will demand a job that he believes is a real one in which he can truly serve.

And now we come to the second thing which has influenced Nelson's attitude, and it, like the first, brought about something like a conversion in the man. Just as he became convinced that a public career offered the best opportunity of service, so Nelson became converted to expansionism in general and to the importance of small business in particular and this is one of the causes of friction in the WPB today—a notable result of which was the resignation of Charles E. Wilson.

In the course of his experience in Washington, Nelson became convinced that maximum productivity of industry is essential to prosperity, and more recently, that the protection of small business in the coming readjustment period is essential to maximum production. He felt that if big business were to succeed and the capitalistic system of free enterprise were to be preserved, little business must be expanded.

Specifically, Mr. Nelson believes, according to his often-expressed opinion, that the more little businesses there are, selling the things that a firm like Sears Roebuck sells, the more things Sears Roebuck will sell.

PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY GREATLY INCREASES

And now we come to some of the strange statistics about business, big and little. The most striking of all to me is this: retail trade, in spite of all the difficulties in its path, had an increase of dollar values in sales, of more than 50 per cent in 1943 over 1939—department of commerce statistics show $49,042,000 for 1939—$63,288,000 for 1943. That is expansion under difficulties.

And here is another: the department of labor figures reveal that from 1939 to 1943 the average yearly employment showed a decrease of only one-tenth of per cent.

In the field of agriculture, although the farm production has nearly doubled, the farm population has decreased nearly 40 per cent—more expansion.

What do these figures mean? That the productive capacity has been increased tremendously, not only in the war industries but in consumer goods, and the expansionist believes that what has been done can be done again, provided that obstacles are removed.

In addition to this revelation of the nation's highest productive capacity, remember that there are 11 or 12 million men in the armed forces, 11 million more in civilian industry than before the war and 3 million in government.

The 11 million in private industry must keep their jobs, and jobs in business, big and small, must be found for those discharged from the armed services, plus some released from government work.

To achieve this, according to Nelson, the country must go expansionist, must find every means of expanding production.

The contractionist, he says, although he naturally plans, hopes and works for expansion in his own business, does not always see the importance of expansion in all businesses, especially in those which compete with him.

If Donald Nelson has the opportunity he is willing to go ahead doing his part to help expand industry, big and little. It remains to be seen whether leads the road from China.

DONALD NELSON

offered as good a job, or a better one, than he had. What the "contractionist-expansionist" controversy means to the country's business, I'll take up in a minute, but first I'd like to say a little more about Nelson.

I have gleaned my notions from no key-hole peeping, no riding of Mr. Nelson's files, but from those who know him well, plus some of my own observations.

There are two reasons why I believe Mr. Nelson wants to stay in government.

One is partly psychological and has to do with what has happened to Nelson's own attitude toward government, which his closest friends have watched develop. The other has to do with this idea of "expansionism," a definition of which entails a number of facts and figures, some of which may startle you as they did me when I saw them assembled for the first time and had them carefully checked and double-checked. They reveal strikingly what the economic problem is which this country is facing and which so far it seems ill-prepared to meet.

Nelson came here from big business—Sears Roebuck is pretty big. He was used to pressing buttons and giving orders like most big businessmen. This particular function is a poor buffer against the slings and arrows of which Washington has more than a quiverful.

FINDS WAYS TO GET THINGS DONE

The British government has relaxed its rigid blackout rules.

The people of Sweden, preparing to celebrate the victory of the Allies along the axis, have flooded the "largest fireworks manufacturing company" in Stockholm with orders for fiery portraits of Prime Minister Churchill, Marshal Joseph Stalin, and President Roosevelt.

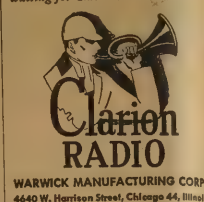

The results of research conducted during 25 years by the University of Illinois in heating, ventilating, cooling, insulating, building materials, mechanical equipment of buildings, sewage disposal, plumbing, sanitation, home management, household art, house planning and construction and rural architecture is to be gathered and expanded to meet the post-war small-home problem.

"ONE THING I KNOW I AM GOING TO BUY AFTER THE WAR IS A CLARION RADIO."

And it's a wise decision she's made, because all the engineering and manufacturing skill that has helped us do a good war job will be applied to the production of fine radios for civilian use.

A great line of table and portable models, farm sets and combinations will be available right after the war. It'll be worth while waiting for Clarion!

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Tests have shown that a single skid may take 100 miles off the life of a tire. The loss will be greater with tires made of synthetic rubber.

B. F. Goodrich official ballistics tests before natural rubber is again available in quantity the industry will so improve the quality of synthetic rubber that it will be equal to the former for many uses.

It's important to put your spare in service when making periodic tire swiches. In that way the wear is distributed over five tires instead of four.

Meal Contrasts In Color, Texture Help Appetite

Cheese Souffle Sandwiches team up with ripe olives to give good flavor and color contrast to those quickie lunches.

How is your contrast IQ in meals? Do you serve whitefish, potatoes and cauliflower all at the same meal and expect the family to eat it? Do you put beef and bread pudding and expect them to find the meal palatable?

Yes, the foods are all highly nutritious and may be well prepared, but there's an important element in meal planning missing in these suggestions. It is contrast. There's a lack of contrast in flavor, color and texture in these food combinations, and without that meals will often go unnoted.

Real interest in foods is an interest in the way they look and how they feel in the mouth. If the meal is colorful, the family is immediately attracted. There is also a desire for different textures. That's why the family wants something crispy in a salad when they have a soft food like stew, Spanish rice or spaghetti.

People are very fond of macaroni and corn or potatoes and parsnips, but they don't care for them at the same meal. If you're having macaroni, try serving it with something green like green beans, peas, broccoli or asparagus and watch the family go for it. The table will be more colorful, too, and we eat with our eyes, too, you know.

Now, how would you like this combination? Mock drumsticks, lima beans and carrots. There's no sameness about texture or color there.

Mock Drumsticks.

(Serves 6)
1½ pounds veal, beef or pork steaks, cut thin
2 cups cornflakes
1 egg
2 tablespoons milk
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon pepper
¾ cup water

Cut meat into strips and roll around skewers in the shape of a drumstick.

Roll cornflakes into fine crumbs. Cover drumsticks with crumbs, then dip in slightly beaten egg. The table will be more colorful, too, and we eat with our eyes, too, you know.

Here's an easy dinner as good to the eye as to the palate:
Cream of Tomato Soup
Lamb Roll
Baked Squash
Hashed Brown Potatoes
Cole Slaw

Apple Sauce
Chocolate Cookies

Boned Breast of Lamb

(Serves 6)
¾ pound bulk pork sausage
2 tablespoons lard
1 small onion, diced
2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
1 cup tomatoes
Have lamb breast boned, spread with sausage meat and tied into a roll. Brown on all sides in hot fat. Season with salt and pepper. Add all other ingredients. Cover closely and cook very slowly until done, about 1½ hours. Add more liquid, if needed.

Colorful vegetables in this menu are all cooked with the meat:

Braised Liver with Vegetables
Mashed Potatoes
Orange-Watercress Salad
Rye Bread
Butter
Butterscotch Sundae

Braised Liver with Vegetables. (Serves 6)
1½ pounds sliced liver
Flour
2 tablespoons bacon drippings
6 carrots
2 green peppers
6 small onions
Salt and pepper
¾ cup water

Dredge liver with flour. Brown in hot drippings. Clean and dice vegetables. Arrange in piles on slices of liver. Season. Add water. Cover and cook slowly until liver and vegetables are done. Beef liver will take about 45 minutes. Pork, lamb and veal (or calves') liver will take about 30 minutes.

Now, for a luncheon dish that has unusual flavor and contrast. First, here's the menu I'd suggest:

Grapefruit Broth or Grapefruit Juice
Cheese Souffle Sandwich
Jellied Fruit Salad
Beverage
Date Bars

A double boiler will help the cook produce perfect souffle sandwiches: Cheese Souffle Sandwich.

(Serves 6)
6 slices white bread
¾ pound processed cheddar cheese
Dash of pepper
Dash of paprika
3 eggs
Ripe olives

Toast the bread (crusts trimmed) on both sides. Melt the cheese in the top of a double boiler. Add pepper and paprika to egg yolks. Beat until thick, then fold this mixture into egg whites which have been beaten until stiff but not dry. Pile on toast and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) until puffy and golden brown. Place on a chop plate and garnish with ripe olives.

For the fruit salad suggestion, you may have cherry flavored gelatin with melon balls and dark grapes; lemon flavored gelatin with pineapple, white grapes, nutmeats, and cherries.

water from the brimming bowl to the tub. Then it suddenly dawned on her. "Why, I'll have to keep this up until Henry comes home tonight and turns off the valve in the basement!" she exclaimed in a shocked voice. She couldn't leave even long enough to call for help, because the whole place would be flooded if she did. Mrs. Bigelow dashed a painful of water into the tub.

"Then I can't possibly get down to the radio station in time to collect the money!" she stormed at her outraged reflection in the medicine chest mirror. She bailed again and glared at her watch. Eleven-fifty. Five minutes to finish dressing, and fifteen more to get to the radio station. Add fifteen minutes for the return trip . . . in that time the entire second floor and half the first would be washed away!

It was agonizing. Her feverish lading gained a good three inches of clear porcelain bowl over the swirling water and she rushed out of the room. If she could only reach the basement in time! But, she couldn't. For at the landing she was stopped by the sound of splashing water. Frantically she skipped up the stairs and resumed her task. Eleven-fifty-nine. Her arms worked no more furiously than her mind. Someone would pay for this, and his initials were H. B. I. If she could see him now, just for a minute. . . .

She would have seen him wince. For Hensical at the office, took an envelope from his pocket and grimaced when he saw the memorandum on the back. He had forgotten that, too. But this other remembrance he gave sigh, which was close to a groan, and pulled out the letter. It bore a week-old date.

"Dear Mr. Bigelow:" it read, "According to our records, your bill has not been paid in seven months and you have disregarded our previous notices of delinquency. While this is undoubtedly an oversight on your part, we must serve final notice that unless your account is brought up to date, water service to your home will be discontinued promptly at twelve o'clock noon on the first day of next month." It was signed, "Municipal Water Bureau."

Henry slowly raised his eyes and sneaked a troubled glance at the calendar on the office wall. The first. Then at the clock. Precisely twelve-thirty. He closed his mournful eyes and rested his aching head in his hands. The water had been shut off at his home for the last half-hour. He wondered what his wife was doing right about now.

AT THE office, Henry Bigelow blinked as a sudden thought jolted his attention from his letter. Laying aside his pen he tumbled around in his coat pocket, his thin face flooded with unhappiness. "It slipped my mind completely . . ."

And at home Mrs. Bigelow vainly tugged at the handle of the gushing cold water faucet in the bathroom wash bowl. If that wasn't just like Henry! "I told him all along that some day this tap would stick for good!" she muttered through tightly clenched teeth.

"And probably he forgot it just as promptly," his scowling wife gasped. But there was $50 at stake. Mrs. Bigelow applied herself with renewed vigor in a frenzied attempt to halt the flow and, for her efforts, was rewarded with the tap handle which came free neatly and cleanly, permitting the water to gush forth utterly without restraint. "Oh!" she wailed.

She glanced at her wrist watch which she had removed and placed on the window sill before washing her face. Eleven-forty. Bigelow stamped her foot in exasperation. Only a few minutes before her name had been read over the radio by the Fifty-Dollar-Man. Unless she called in person at the station at 11, she would forfeit the fifty dollars which was awarded on the first day of every month to the lucky listener whose name was announced. But what about the water which threatened to overflow the stopped-up bowl at any minute?

Happily, forgetful Mr. Bigelow had neglected to remove from the bathroom the pan in which he had heated his shaving water that morning. Mrs. Bigelow snatched it up and started bailing, transferring

Her arms worked no more furiously than her mind. Someone would pay for this, and his initials were H. B. I. If she could see him now, just for a minute. . . .

She would have seen him wince. For Hensical at the office, took an envelope from his pocket and grimaced when he saw the memorandum on the back. He had forgotten that, too. But this other remembrance he gave sigh, which was close to a groan, and pulled out the letter. It bore a week-old date.

"Dear Mr. Bigelow:" it read, "According to our records, your bill has not been paid in seven months and you have disregarded our previous notices of delinquency. While this is undoubtedly an oversight on your part, we must serve final notice that unless your account is brought up to date, water service to your home will be discontinued promptly at twelve o'clock noon on the first day of next month." It was signed, "Municipal Water Bureau."

Henry slowly raised his eyes and sneaked a troubled glance at the calendar on the office wall. The first. Then at the clock. Precisely twelve-thirty. He closed his mournful eyes and rested his aching head in his hands. The water had been shut off at his home for the last half-hour. He wondered what his wife was doing right about now.

water from the brimming bowl to the tub. Then it suddenly dawned on her. "Why, I'll have to keep this up until Henry comes home tonight and turns off the valve in the basement!" she exclaimed in a shocked voice. She couldn't leave even long enough to call for help, because the whole place would be flooded if she did. Mrs. Bigelow dashed a painful of water into the tub.

"Then I can't possibly get down to the radio station in time to collect the money!" she stormed at her outraged reflection in the medicine chest mirror. She bailed again and glared at her watch. Eleven-fifty. Five minutes to finish dressing, and fifteen more to get to the radio station. Add fifteen minutes for the return trip . . . in that time the entire second floor and half the first would be washed away!

It was agonizing. Her feverish lading gained a good three inches of clear porcelain bowl over the swirling water and she rushed out of the room. If she could only reach the basement in time! But, she couldn't. For at the landing she was stopped by the sound of splashing water. Frantically she skipped up the stairs and resumed her task. Eleven-fifty-nine. Her arms worked no more furiously than her mind. Someone would pay for this, and his initials were H. B. I. If she could see him now, just for a minute. . . .

Star Dust STAGE-SCREEN-RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THOUGH the world wasn't aware of it, there's been a crisis in Hollywood—because of old age, the original chimpanzee, who played Cheta, Tarzan's mate, couldn't work, and a new Cheta had to be found for "Tarzan and the Amazons." Kurt Neumann, director of the picture, searched far and wide, finally found the new ape right in Hollywood. The perennial Tarzan, Johnny Weissmuller, liked the new Cheta at once, and Cheta reciprocated. Now the problem is—how will Cheta get along with Brenda Joyce, Tarzan's new mate?

Betty Hutton received her first letter from an American soldier in a German prison camp only to discover that he was a boy she went to school with in Battle Creek, Mich.

He said he hadn't seen any new movies as he'd been out of circulation for the past 14 months, but asked her to send him an autographed photograph, as pin-up pictures were allowed in the camp where he was imprisoned.

Alan Marshall, borrowed from David Selznick by RKO to star with Dorothy McGuire and Herbert Marshall in "The Enchanted Cottage," has had to give up the role because of what his doctor diagnoses as nervous exhaustion. Marshall has combined bond tours, army camp appearances and war activities with months of studio work on two long productions.

So nobly has Ted Malone acquitted himself on his Monday, Wednesday and Friday night human interest broadcasts from the invasion fronts, on NBC, that his sponsor signed him to a five-year contract. His postwar efforts will be on the Alexander Woolcott style.

Bettejaene Greer is making her film debut simultaneously in two RKO features, the musical "Pan-Americana" and "Two O'Clock Courage." This calls for considerable bicycling between stages, so she doesn't have to take time out for exercise, at least!

The War Production board has approved "Paper Troopers," written by Mutual network composers Sunny Skylar and Henry Sylvers, as the official marching song of the waste paper drive. Skylar, you know, is the composer of "Besame Mucho" and "Amor"; Sylvers is a noted musical conductor who is on the Jane Cowl show and "Cisno Kid" as well as on the Mutual show he does with Skylar.

Ray Acuff, his Smoky Mountain Boys and little Rachel, stars of NBC's "Grand Ole Opry," have been selected by the army to take part in a special movie which will include many top-flight stars of stage, screen and radio, and be shown in army camps all over the world.

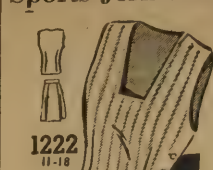

"The Great Gildersleeve" is probably the only stooge who's risen to having his own radio program and also starring in the movies. He surrounded Fibber McGee and Molly in various stooge roles until in 1941 his avalanche of fan mail inspired a sponsor to build a show around the character Hal Peary had built up a fellow with big hair, but simple, warm-hearted and jolly.

At the age of five and a half, Dickie Jones, of "The Aldrich Family," had his own radio program on a local station in Texas. Today, at 17, he's played more than half a dozen major films—in fact, he had his first film layoff in more than 10 years in 1942, when he broke a leg while playing the lead opposite Shirley Temple in "Miss Annie Rooney," then broke it again in "The Major and the Minor."

ODDS AND ENDS—Auntie back when, Jim "Hercules" Hines and Annette and Ann "Joyce Jordan" Shepherd were typical American boy and girl in their first big radio program, out of Chicago—now they're together again in "Big Sister," a record for Betty Davis by running 14 weeks at a Broadway theatre. . . . Arturo de Cordova has played with only five feminine stars—but they're Ingrid Bergman, Laine Rainer, Joan Fontaine, Betty Hutton and Dorothy Lamour!

MILDRED JOHNSON IS BRIDE OF REV. HAYWOOD SCOTT

The marriage of Miss Mildred Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Johnson, to Rev. Haywood Scott of Prattville and Pittsview, Ala., was solemnized Saturday evening, September 9th, at Walnut Creek Methodist Church.

Rev. Kelley Scott, a brother of the groom, officiated. A program of nuptial music was presented by Mrs. A. L. Lumpkin, pianist, and Mrs. Lois Thompson Mims, vocalist. The altar was decorated with a background of ferns and white gladiolus and candle-labra, with white tapers.

Mr. Ray Enfinger and Mr. Clay Moates served as ushers. Mrs. Clement Easterling, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. Her dress was of blue silk, featuring a sweetheart neckline, bracelet-length sleeves and full skirt. She carried an arm bouquet of pink carnations, with pink ribbon streamers. The little flower girls were: Misses Sarah Nell Patterson and Patricia Ann Traywick. They wore pink and blue net dresses and carried baskets of rose petals. Master Johnnie Leon Johnson was ring bearer.

The lovely bride entered with her father by whom she was given in marriage. They were met at the altar by the bridegroom and his brother, Mr. Lonnie Scott, who was best man.

The bride's gown was of white silk chiffon, made with close-fitting bodice, long sleeves and full skirt, dropping and falling into a short train. Her finger-tip length illusion tulle veil caught to a coronet of pearls. She carried a bouquet of Stephanotis and baby gardenias.

The bride's mother wore an ensemble of navy blue and a corsage of pink rosebuds. The bridegroom's mother wore navy blue and a corsage of gardenias.

Rev. Scott and his bride left for a short wedding trip, after which they will reside in Pittsview, Ala.

MISS HOLLADAYE BECOMES BRIDE OF SGT. WHITEHEAD

On Saturday evening, August 19th, at eight-thirty o'clock, Miss Patricia Jean (Pat) Holladay, became the bride of Gregory William Whitehead III Sergeant United States Army, of Los Angeles, Calif. and Fort Jackson, S. C., in a home wedding, marked by simplicity and beauty.

Prior to the ceremony, Mrs. William T. Chupp, presided at the piano and rendered "Intermezzo" and "Liebesträume." The bridal chorus from Loehrin was used for the processional and Mendelssohn's Wedding March for the recessional.

The vows were spoken before an improvised altar of green and white and white gladioli and ferns were attractively used in standard floor baskets. Seven branched candleabra flanked each side of the altar and burning tapers were attractively used throughout the rooms.

Proceeding the ceremony Miss Becky Godshall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Heelond Godshall, and Miss Katherine Holladay, sister of the bride, sang "I Love You Truly."

The bride was attended by Miss Elizabeth Lawson, who was attired in a sheer rose frock of crepe and she carried a nosegay of pastel-colored flowers.

Sgt. Whitehead and his best man, Sgt. Milton Zetter, of Fort Jackson, S. C., met the bride at the altar and vows were spoken before Rev. Lewis M. Rice, who used the impressive ring ritual.

The bride was lovely in an advanced Shepards wool suit of beige and with navy accessories. Her flowers were red rosebuds.

She is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe M. Holladay and has made a large circle of friends since coming to Union to make her home with her parents several months ago from North Carolina. She is a young woman of pleasing personality and numbers her friends by her acquaintances.

Sgt. Whitehead has recently returned from overseas duty and wears the Purple Heart and the campaign ribbons of two major battles. He is the son of Mrs. Gregory Wm. Whitehead II, and of the late Mr. Whitehead II, of Richmond, Calif., and at present is stationed at Fort Jackson, S. C.

Immediately following the ceremony, Mrs. Heelond Godshall and Mrs. Ezell Willard entertained the wedding party and a few intimate friends at dinner.

The dining room carried out the bridal motif of green and white and

New Telephone Books Distributed

Distribution of a new telephone directory was completed here September 23. A total of 510 copies were delivered to local homes and offices, according to District Manager T. E. Harris, of Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Mr. Harris pointed out that the new book is bound with a green cover to make it easily distinguishable from the old gray covered directory. The new book should be used on all calls in the future to decrease the possibility of subscribers getting wrong numbers.

If the old directory is not taken up at the time of the new one's delivery, it should be turned in with other waste paper.

Because of the wartime paper shortage, use of paper for printing telephone directories has been restricted, Mr. Harris said. He asked that telephone users take the best possible care of their directories pointing out that only enough copies to fill essential needs had been printed.

If any subscriber does not receive his copy of the new directory, he should notify the telephone business office and a copy will be sent promptly.

Old Age Pension Association To Meet Here Saturday

Members of the Alabama Old-Age Association and Old-Age Living Plan Association, now functioning as the Old Age Pension Association, will convene here next Saturday. Morning and afternoon sessions will be held, with dinner served free at noon.

The association, at a meeting in Gadsden, Aug. 30, adopted the magazine "Eventide" as its official publication.

George Beasley is president of the Association.

CONGRESSMAN PETE JARMAN A VISITOR

Last Saturday afternoon Congressman and Mrs. Pete Jarmen were visitors to Clanton. Their visit was short but Congressman Jarmen promised a longer stay before his duties took him back to Washington. He says he is anxious to shake hands with many of his good friends here.

POPULAR SPRINGS NEWS

Dear Editor: Will you give us a few lines in your paper this week.

First I want to say on last Sunday our preaching day. We didn't have such a large crowd but Sunday night we had a large crowd. Bro. Cook brought us a good message. We enjoyed the Sunday School and a good devotional service Sunday night.

We are mighty proud of Bro. Cook as our pastor. We had some visitors with us from Maple Springs and some from Refuge. We are all ways glad to have anyone to visit us from other churches. We will always give anyone a hearty welcome anytime. Our preaching days are the second and fourth Sundays. Don't forget it. Come and be with us next Sunday. It is a day set apart for us to make out our letter to the Association. We hope we will have a large crowd and everybody come, praying that we have a good time with the Lord. We are thankful when we look around and see the good crops. The cotton looks like snow on the mountain. We know that the Lord is blessing us with all of these good things. Every body come and bring someone with you. On the Fourth Sunday in October if it be the Lord's will we are going to start a revival. Brother Cook and Brother Marce from Sylacauga will do the preaching. Brother Marce is a loud speaker. We hope to have a good old-time revival. You know we get out of the meeting just what we put into it. Also let's pray for our soldier boys. We hope to see them coming home soon. May the Lord bless us all.—W. F. Gilliland.

Ammunition Available For Alabama Farmers

From now through December 31, 1944, a manufacturer, supplier, or dealer may sell and deliver to any person for protection of crops and livestock, or for hunting, or both, upon receipt of a certificate, not more than: 150 rounds of .22 caliber rim fire cartridges; 40 rounds of center fire rifle ammunition; or 50 rounds of the kind ordinarily packaged fifty to the box, such as .25-20, .32-20, .22 Hornet, .38-40, and .44-40.

100 rounds of shotgun shells of any gauge.

It is the intent to let farmers and ranchers get this special quota of ammunition during the rest of 1944 but not to get more than that.

Delta Kappa Gamma Meets

On Thursday afternoon, Sept. 14, the Alpha Beta Chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma held its first meeting for the year 1944-45 at the home of Mrs. Edna Kinney in Clanton.

After a short business meeting the following program was rendered: "History of Delta Kappa Gamma" by Mrs. Laura Little and "Do's and Don'ts for Delta Kappa Gamma Members" by Miss Miriam Harvey.

Following the program delicious refreshments were served by Mrs. Edna Kinney and Mrs. Miriam Gerald, hostesses for the occasion.

RED CROSS ROOM NEEDS THE LADIES

Mrs. L. E. Diefenderfer who is in charge of the surgical dressing division of the local Red Cross Chapter stated Tuesday that they were in desperate need of ladies to aid in that important work.

According to Mrs. Diefenderfer, it matters not, when you serve, but please come and do your part. The Room is open morning and evening.

Chilton County Sacred Harp Convention

The fall session of the Sacred Harp Convention was held at Mt. Zion Church the third Sunday in Sept. The crowd was not so large but we had a real good singing.

Opening songs were sung by the chairman A. A. Jackson and prayer by J. W. Hayes.

Directors for the day were: J. H. Gaines, Mrs. Grady Jones, Mrs. J. H. Gaines, J. W. Hayes, Ellie Shirley, W. L. Jackson, W. L. Sanders, M. C. Jackson and A. A. Jackson.

A song was sung in memory of the Author of the Sacred Harp, Prof. B. F. White, by the Chairman, Mr. A. A. Jackson. Several special selections were sung in honor of our boys who are in service.

Officers were elected for the coming year as follows: A. A. Jackson, Chairman; W. L. Sanders, Vice-Chairman; Myrtle Jackson Secretary.

The Convention wishes to give thanks to Mt. Zion Church and community for the splendid support they rendered the convention. May the Lord bless each of you.—Myrtle Jackson, Secretary.

HILL-DEASON

The marriage of Miss Frances Geraldine Hill to Mr. Harvey A. Deason took place Sept. 10 at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Hill of Haynes, Alabama. The couple will make their home in Clanton.

IN MEMORIAM GILLILAND

In loving memory of our dear husband, father and son, McKinley Gilliland, who passed away three years ago September 26, 1941.

What would we give to clasp his hand, his happy face to touch. To hear his voice to see him smile. We think of him in silence. No eyes can see us weep but many silent tears are shed while others are asleep.

Mrs. Lucile Gilliland and Boys, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Gilliland.

Enterprise School News

Enterprise School began Sept. 5, 1944 with the following teachers: Miss Pierce, Miss Donovan, Mrs. Edwards, Mrs. Haywood, Mrs. Broadhead, Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Thompson and Mr. White, principal.

After one week Mrs. Thompson resigned and Mrs. Haywood was transferred to the eighth grade.

Miss Juanita Newell took the place of the fourth grade teacher.

The first week of school the ninth grade had charge of the Chapel program and presented two short plays.

The second week of school the eighth grade had charge and presented a play, "Father's Diplomacy."

On Friday Sept. 22, the Home Ec. girls under the supervision of Mrs. Moore the Home Ec. teacher, the cooking class prepared a delicious salad plate and served the members of the faculty.

The eighth grade English class voted to present Enterprise School news each week as part of our English program for the year.—Evelyn Johnson, Reporter.

A Letter To The Editor From L. H. Reynolds

Dear Sir:

We are glad the city election is over and whether we got our choice or not it is every citizen's duty to support the new administration and assist them in any way that we can to make a success.

I want to make a few remarks in reference to the Cotton Mill which was located near Clanton about 17 years ago. I think I was one of the first of the citizens here to subscribe for $500.00 stock in this mill, which I have never requested and I feel that this was one of the most valuable acts of my life for the citizens of this community and I wish I had the opportunity to repeat this transaction now and get another Cotton Mill near Clanton.

This Mill furnishes employment for about 280 people and the payroll is around $7,000 a week. They pay about $2,100.00 to the State and County and $500.00 to the City of Clanton in taxes per year. I don't know of any other business in our town that furnishes employment for as many people and pays as much taxes in Clanton as the Cotton Mill does.

I don't know of as rough and bumpy a piece of road in dry weather as the road from the top of the hill at Mr. Walker's house which passes through the Cotton Mill Village right by their factory and enters Highway 31 at Willis Tourist Camp, and the mud-diest piece of road in the County. It looks as if some of our people in Clanton are willing for them to walk and drive over the dusty, bumpy roads in the summer and wade through the mud in the winter to spend $36,000 per year in Clanton without giving them any help on their roads or in their public enterprises.

I have known the officials of this Cotton Mill for the last 20 odd years and I have always found them reasonable and willing to do their part.

Mr. Marvin Bates, as I remember, was the first person from the Cotton Mill to ask for an office in the town of Clanton and he was defeated for City Councilman and I am sure he was as well qualified for the position and as patriotic as anyone that was elected in the last election. He has 5 boys in the service of their country fighting for us and our liberties.

We want other enterprises located at Clanton and I hope the public will not get the impression that all we want with public enterprises is what we can get out of them without giving them any return for their taxes.

I am glad that this Mill has been operated on such fair terms that they have gotten along with their employees and that they have not had the trouble other mills have had in other places and I hope this good feeling between the Mill and it's employees will continue, and someday I hope to see the largest Cotton Mill in the state in Clanton.

With best wishes for our town and surrounding community, I am,

Respectfully yours,
L. H. REYNOLDS.

Infant Dies

Infant George Wensal Braswell, age 7 months died at it's home, Craig Field, Selma, Alabama, Sept. 21. The body was brought to Clanton and prepared for burial by Spigener Funeral Home. Services were held at 4:30 p.m. Friday from Liberty Hill Church, conducted by the Rev. G. G. Williams. Interment was made in church cemetery. The infant was survived by parents Lt. and Mrs. H. C. Braswell, grand parents Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Foshee of Clanton and grandmother, Mrs. Annie F. Braswell, Sharpsburg, N. C.

During the season when fireplaces are in use, fire screens will keep sparks or embers off rugs and floor, and help protect clothing.

Hunting days are here. The loaded gun should be kept out of reach of children.

JOHNSON - DeGRANDCHAMP

Mr. and Mrs. Norwood Johnson of Thorby announce the marriage of their daughter Catherine to Richard J. DeGrandchamp of Detroit, Mich., on August 26th.

The ceremony was performed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Thompson in Detroit by Mr. J. G. Wylie in the presence of a few friends and relatives.

The bride is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson and graduated from Thorby Institute in the Class of 1942. She was very lovely in a light blue dressmaker suit with Navy blue accessories and wore a corsage of pink rosebuds and baby breath. Mr. DeGrandchamp is the eldest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. E. J. DeGrandchamp of Detroit and holds a position with the Cadillac Motor Co., where Mrs. DeGrandchamp is also employed.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the Thompsons and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives of the bride and groom. They received a number of nice gifts. After a short honeymoon to Cleveland by boat this popular couple returned to Detroit to make their home for the duration.

M. J. BATES THANKS VOTERS

I wish to express to the voters of Clanton my sincere thanks for their support in the past City Election. To those who voted for my opponent, I hold no ill will. I intend to line-up behind the new Mayor and the Councilmen and do all that is within my power to make their administration a success. I am sure the election was carried out in as honest and orderly a manner as it is possible to hold an election. No one should hesitate for a minute to aid the Mayor and Council in every way possible for a bigger, better Clanton. I herewith dedicate myself to this end.—M. J. Bates.

THOMAS FRANKLIN HAWKINS

Thomas Franklin Hawkins, age 79, died Thursday morning September 21 at his home 4 miles South of Clanton. Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon at Poplar Springs Church. Rev. P. P. Burnett conducted the services, assisted by Rev. J. D. Hughes and W. F. Gilliland. Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Mary Etta Bailey Hawkins, one son, W. D. Methodist Church Rally Day At First

Plans are complete for the big Rally Day at the First Methodist Church next Sunday, October 1. The program will start at 10 o'clock but classes are asked to assemble at 9:45 for the regular opening exercises.

The pastor and the Sunday School Superintendent urge all to attend this Rally and help bring the members back to Sunday School and Church Services. Especially so that the boys who are offering their lives daily for our "Freedom of Worship" will not feel that they have been doing so in vain, and the homefront has neglected their churches. Attend the Rally at the First Methodist Church next Sunday and bring a friend with you.

Isabella FFA Holds First Regular Meeting

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

German Resistance Stiffens as Allies Assault Siegfried Line; Hog Ceilings Extended to June

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union.)

Crouching along walls of battered buildings, Doughboys close in on Brest, France. Toward rear, two can be seen setting up machine guns.

EUROPE: Flanking Attack

With German resistance stiffening along the Siegfried line from Belgium to Switzerland, the gravity of Allied attacks swung to Holland, where the British Second Army linking up with the Allies' First Army converged at the head of the Rhine river for a drive into the rich industrial Ruhr valley.

Drifting eastward into Holland, thousands of U. S., British, Polish and Dutch paratroopers landed far to the rear of German forces holding up the Allied advance along the Belgian border, and the enemy was compelled to counterattack vigorously to escape the complete entrapment of his forces.

By landing at the Rhine's head near the towns of Arnhem and Nijmegen, the Allies swung to the north of the German bastion of Kleve, reportedly the terminus of the Siegfried line, and thus set the stage for a drive around the vaulted fortification system into the Ruhr valley.

While the Allies sprung their mighty air-borne offensive in Holland, the U. S. First, Third and Seventh armies bucking the Siegfried line from the Belgian border to Switzerland encountered increasingly stiff resistance from a fanatical defense.

As the land drives slowed, the Americans brought up large concentrations of heavy artillery to blast "stubborn German positions, with the First Army's big guns trained on Duren, gateway to the big industrial city of Cologne, and Prum, west of Coblenz.

Braving robot attacks and heavy tank and artillery fire, Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton's doughy Third Army lashed against strong German forces west of the rich coal and industrial Saar region.

Tough Nut

While the Nazis fought "... with complete contempt for death" in Italy, as the Allied command put it, an essential factor in their rugged defense of the vital "Gothic line" guarding the rich industrial Po valley was the skillful fortification system established by Field Marshal Kesselring.

Every village on the battlefield was converted into a little fort, with the houses reinforced with concrete and steel. Deep shelters were dug out of the steep mountain slopes and artillery was concentrated at all of the chief passes through which the Allies might attempt to bang. Fortifications were set up in such a way so as to expose any advancing force to flanking fire.

Despite these rugged defenses, however, the Allied Fifth and Eighth armies, made up of Americans, British, Canadians, Polish and British troops, inched their way forward.

Mass Weight

German lines sagged as the Russians threw in 500,000 troops in an effort to drive to the Baltic sea and cut off Nazi armies in Latvia and Estonia from German forces operating in the East Prussian and Warsaw regions to the south.

In shifting the weight of their attack to the north as German lines stiffened about East Prussia and Warsaw, the Reds were following their historic policy of fully utilizing their superior manpower against a numerically inferior enemy.

DISABLED VETS

Morbid curiosity and thoughtlessness on the part of civilians can greatly hinder—and sometimes destroy—the efforts of disabled soldiers to readjust themselves to normal civilian life. Surgeon General Norman T. Kirk of the army declared:

"Modern surgery is skillfully restoring these men," General Kirk said. "Prostheses are furnished to every man who has lost an arm or leg and the men are taught how to use them."

HOGS:

Hog Ceilings

While hog receipts continued light prior to the heavy seasonal fall run, the War Food administration announced that present ceilings of $14.75 per hundredweight for 240 pounds or less and $14 per hundredweight for all over 240 pounds would not be reduced before next June 30.

However, WFA said that support prices will be trimmed to $12.50 per hundredweight for 180 to 270 pounds beginning October 1, with the door still open for possible action in other quarters.

In seeking price adjustment, it was said, WFA was contemplating a "cushion" on all hog marketing, under which packers would have to pay an average of $13.75 for all good and choice hogs to qualify for subsidies.

PACIFIC:

Bitter Foe

Fighting against a foe as fanatical as any encountered on the Pacific islands, U. S. marines and doughboys pushed ahead their occupation of the vital Palau islands, 600 miles to the east of the Philippines.

As the battle progressed, no less than 5,543 Japanese soldiers were killed in the campaign. The U. S. amphibious force commanded by Vice Adm. T. S. Wilkinson, USN, and aided by swarms of aircraft.

Victory in the Palau had the effect of neutralizing the big Japanese base of Truk in the Carolines and jeopardizing the enemy's shipping lines and the homeland proper.

As the U. S. forces banged ahead through tropical Palau, other American troops secured their foothold in the Moluccas, 300 miles from the southern Philippines.

SURPLUS GOODS:

Provide for Disposal

Despite strong objections to the legislation's provision for a three-man board rather than a single authority to administer disposal of surplus war property, the President received congress' bill for the sale of surplus goods.

The bill would permit the sale of surplus goods, valued at approximately 100 billion dollars. Representing a compromise between the senate and house, the bill passed despite last minute opposition centered against the elimination of a provision that all money derived from the sale of surplus war goods to be used to retire the public debt.

As the bill finally went to the White House after much congressional wrangling, it forbids discrimination against small business in the sale of surpluses; gives former owners priority in the purchase of real estate bought by the government for war purposes, and compels the three-man board to report to congress on proposed disposition of big government owned war plants to private interests.

Meantime, congress gave final consideration to a reconversion bill, which would set up a central office to coordinate the work of all government agencies on the switch back to peace, and, if necessary, lend states money for postwar unemployment compensation.

MISCELLANY

BOLDINGS: Aside from holdings of lamb and mutton, which approximated 15,220,000 pounds, meat stores showed a decided drop on September 1. Stocks of pork totaled 489,496,000 pounds, smallest since December 1, 1943. At 244,040,000 pounds, lamb stocks were lowest since February 1.

IRONS:

Expect Shipments

The 2,000,000 electric irons to be produced under government authorization in 1944 will make their appearance on retail counters about the middle of October, trade circles said, with prices approximating those of 1942.

Only limited supplies will be available, tradesmen said, with manufacturers, jobbers and distributors allocating the irons to stores under formulas based on prewar purchases.

Manufactured in areas where production will not interfere with war work, the electric irons will sell from $5.95 to $17.50.

PEACE PRICES:

1942 Levels

Declaring that "... we cannot build a full production economy on 'high prices,' OPA administrator Chester Bowles said that the government intends to hold reconversion prices to the 1942 level wherever possible.

However, Bowles said, new ceilings may be necessary for automobiles and parts, refrigerators, washing machines, sewing machines, vacuum cleaners and other appliances, radios, phonographs, pianos, heating and cooling equipment, clocks and watches.

Of the items on the list which may demand new prices, fewer than a dozen account for 85 per cent of the total volume of dollar sales, Bowles said, while the remaining 15 per cent are made up of small articles of the "egg-beater" class.

Last Words

"Dear wife and family: I write you these few lines at 6:35 p. m. I am O. K. My head hurts but some of the men are down. I have asked the Lord Christ to have mercy on our souls."

Thus did Foreman George Emery, 42, open his fateful letter to loved ones, written while he and 65 other companions entrapped in a flaming mine near Bellaria, Ohio, waited vainly for rescue. Smudged with coal dust, the letter was discovered on Emery's body after he was recovered.

"... We are very cold because we took our clothes to stop the holes in the barricade..."

At 8:15 p. m., he wrote: "... I have just said the Lord's divine blessing on us who are trapped here..."

"... Most of the boys are laying around and they are very cold. My head just pumps. My heart tries to get out of my shirt at times..."

"... The boys are all back to back to keep warm..."

"10:40 p. m. I can see the smoke in this place. The men are restless. They are talking about death. That is a bad sign. I am starting to vomit myself..."

"... I am lying down. Too sick to explore. My light still burns. (Floyd) Aberger is laying next to me back to back. He is a very brave man."

Aberger is asleep now. Naming myself, Bill Blondy (his 17-year-old daughter)." Adm. Wilkinson

MODEL CO-OP:

Project Liquidated

Sale of 1,500 acres of the 2,771 acre Deshee farm near Vincennes, Ind., following earlier liquidation of the project, cost $35,000 recently to create new ones. The agencies represented on the board are: labor, federal security, war manpower, selective service, the war department, navy department, war production administration.

This board has general supervision of all activities affecting the returned veteran or the discharged war worker and it consults with congress on matters which would produce the process of readjustment.

Specifically this is a large order for it involves getting jobs, getting the right job for the right man; training for jobs, training the right man for the right job and assuring an expert and sympathetic handling of the process, from the human as well as the economic standpoint. It also deals with all the multitudinous benefits and rights of the Bill of Rights already dealt with at length in these columns.

The man on whom most of the responsibility for carrying out the administration's work has fallen so far is C. W. DeLoach, executive secretary of the policy board.

Following the theory of utilization of existing agencies, the board immediately turned to the three government agencies which were already engaged in the financing similar to those or including those which the R. & R has to do; namely, selective service with its 6,500 offices in all parts of the country through which virtually everyone who enters the armed services had to pass; the United States Employment service, with its 1,500 full time offices which have been the main channels carrying the war workers to their jobs, and finally the Veterans administration with its hundred of offices with a personnel experienced in handling ex-soldiers' claims since the end of World War I.

Committees were appointed in the various states composed of representatives of these agencies, whose function was to assist in the creation of the information centers. In many states these committees have been able to report that the organization of these smaller groups is now adequate to handle the present lead; in other states the completion of the organization is underway. Mr. Bailey tells me that he feels that a national framework has been constructed upon which the complete organization can be raised as demobilization begins and war industries are cut down.

This is the organization which has been functioning under the executive order. It is taken for granted that it will be continued in function if not in exact form, and of course provided with adequate funds for its operation by current or future legislation. But the point is that in the interim action has been taken, without working for the legislative bodies to deliberate and adumbrate while the readjustment program merely waited.

Administration Eager To Make Good Showing

Since the Democratic administration is open to sharp criticism for its failure to make good on its program, considerable effort will be made to show results. Pressure applied to congress to hurry the legislation was exerted, too, with the hope that perhaps the administration was in a position since the original measure offered by the administration was considerably altered, first in the senate and later in the house.

When the President was asked for comment on Governor Dewey's charge that the New Deal was afraid of the peace because it was uncertain that the economic problems would be satisfactorily solved, the President merely said we could say that he smiled broadly.

Meanwhile, some members of the administration not sure whether smiles were in order have been busy in the field attempting to find out just what has been accomplished toward opening the way to full employment, which is generally admitted to be the one sure answer to the danger of economic depression after the war.

Plan for Local Offices To Aid Demobilization

Vets' and Civilians' Problems Would Be Tackled In Own Communities; Reemployment Is Major Goal.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

These days it is popular to criticize Democratic methods for their lack of speed. The legislative mills do grind slowly as we have noted, with many of the measures delaying readjustment to the peace to come. But in the case of the first steps toward preparing for demobilization have brought up such hearty disagreements, it so happens that, quite unobserved by most observers, the machinery has been grinding steadily ahead just the same.

This was achieved by executive order, and, on the surface at least, it appears that work has been done while congress was disagreeing. Since February 24, when the executive order creating it was issued, the Retraining and Reemployment administration has established more than 8,000 information centers which will be the contact point with discharged veterans and war workers.

By current or future legislation, the program can be expanded to take care of the peak demands when demobilization starts in earnest.

These information centers are the vital points of contact between government agencies and the civilian or veteran who is starting on the road back to peacetime existence.

The philosophy back of this whole readjustment plan is based on the idea that a man or woman can best be served by his own friends and neighbors. The government, local or federal, helps, but the local community whose own prosperity depends on the prosperity and happiness of its members is the best of guides, philosophers and friends.

The Retraining and Reemployment administration is the child of the Baruch-Hancock report, which is a lengthy document. It is the result of a long study and presented as a suggestion for appropriate legislation. Since the lawmakers were slow in their law-making, the President issued his executive order under his war power.

He put the new administration under the office of War Mobilization, its head, Mr. Byrnes, named General Hines, head of the Veterans administration, as Administrator of the Retraining and Reemployment act.

New Agency Works With Other U. S. Bodies

Under General Hines was created a policy board made up of representatives of the various government agencies whose functions fit into the picture, the purpose being to make use of existing government agencies insofar as possible rather than to create new ones. The agencies represented on the board are: labor, federal security, war manpower, selective service, the war department, navy department, war production administration.

Committees were appointed in the various states composed of representatives of these agencies, whose function was to assist in the creation of the information centers. In many states these committees have been able to report that the organization of these smaller groups is now adequate to handle the present lead; in other states the completion of the organization is underway. Mr. Bailey tells me that he feels that a national framework has been constructed upon which the complete organization can be raised as demobilization begins and war industries are cut down.

This is the organization which has been functioning under the executive order. It is taken for granted that it will be continued in function if not in exact form, and of course provided with adequate funds for its operation by current or future legislation. But the point is that in the interim action has been taken, without working for the legislative bodies to deliberate and adumbrate while the readjustment program merely waited.

Administration Eager To Make Good Showing

Since the Democratic administration is open to sharp criticism for its failure to make good on its program, considerable effort will be made to show results. Pressure applied to congress to hurry the legislation was exerted, too, with the hope that perhaps the administration was in a position since the original measure offered by the administration was considerably altered, first in the senate and later in the house.

When the President was asked for comment on Governor Dewey's charge that the New Deal was afraid of the peace because it was uncertain that the economic problems would be satisfactorily solved, the President merely said we could say that he smiled broadly.

GOD IS MY CO-PILOT

Col. Robert L. Scoff
WNU RELEASE

The story thus far: Robert Scott, a self-made West Point graduate, wins his wings at Kelly Field, Texas. He is sent to Panama, where his real pursuit training begins in a P-125. When the war comes closer he has been instructor for several years, and fears he will not see combat flying. At the outbreak of war he pleads with many Generals asking for a chance to fight, and at last the opportunity comes. He says good-bye to his wife and child and leaves for Florida, where he picks up his flying fortress. After some flying instruction from a superior pilot, he flies the big ship 15,000 miles to India. Here he becomes a ferry pilot flying supplies into Burma, but he does not like this job.

CHAPTER IX

We kept low to the flat country now, so that it wouldn't be silhouetted against the sky. Moreover we tried under the cover of the clouds to drop of the ship to blend in, making us harder to see. I thought many times that we couldn't get lower; but we kept going down until I know if the wheels had been extended we would have been taxiing.

I guess we were both a little bit nervous as we peered ahead for a little dot that would mean a Jap. Fly specks on the windshield—and we got lots of them hovering as we flew. We were scared so many times. I could feel the palms of my hands sweating as the tension increased.

Finally, straight ahead, I saw a large column of smoke and thought it was Shwebo. The Japs must already have bombed that too. We kept right on going, expecting any minute to see about eighteen Zeros on our tail. Bombs had started these fires, and where Jap bombers were, fighters could be far away. The smoke plume grew larger and blacker as we came nearer, until we could see the glow of the fires and the flames of the burning town. We had automatically concluded that the burning town was Shwebo, for without more than a glance to check the map we headed for the Southeast corner of the town, where the field was supposed to be.

Then I saw them, high overhead—three planes. But I almost sighed in relief, for they were only Jap bombers—no fighters yet. We kept on low, trying to find the town, while more bombs blasted the town. After searching for several minutes we realized that we were looking into the smoke of the wrong town, for far to the south we saw another smoke column, and I ever flicking my attention by a canal to the West, we agreed that this town was Kinn and that Shwebo was ten miles South. Shwebo was burning too, and, as we learned later, had been burned only minutes before we arrived. Jap fighters had accompanied the bombers. So once again some hand of Providence had intervened—had kept us from the Kinn for Shwebo and waste a little time circling.

Colonel Haynes saw the field at Shwebo and pulled the big transport around like a fighter, slipping in and sitting her down like a feathered bird. We taxied over the field, and I stayed to guard the Douglas while he went to see General Stilwell. You could hear the war officers and the soldiers yelling and seeing them throwing their helmets in the air. Jack Belden of Life magazine told me later that he had never expected an American ship to get through, and that the white star on the fuselage of the Army Air Force was identified, they had even sung "God Bless America." But to us right then, America seemed a very, very long way off.

While the Colonel Haynes went for General Stilwell, I stationed myself around the ship, and we watched the sky with Tommy guns. There was a dead feeling in the air—the smell of smoke and of human flesh from the burning town. I expected any moment to see Jap Zeros diving on the transport. There we stood with our veritable popguns, waiting for Jap cannon. Just a few minutes later a jeep drove up and C. V. Haynes jumped out, saying that most of the staff was on the way behind him but that General Stilwell wasn't going. At the moment of surprise, he added that the General would be coming, but that he refused to be evacuated by air. Well, for the life of me I couldn't see what fate would befall him, for the British Army had gone to the North, and the Chinese were also on the way out. Perhaps the General knew things that I didn't know. But I remember that Colonel Haynes and I waited for him during the minutes while we waited for the staff to get aboard. We wanted to take General Stilwell out if we had the use force; after all, he was the Commanding General of all American forces in China, Burma, and India, and we knew he was to have a very slim chance of walking out to India through Burma.

I guess if we had captured General Stilwell, we would have been a great deal better off. I guess we would have been a great deal better off. I guess we would have been a great deal better off.

'Didn't Like Mother,' So He Strangled Her
NEW YORK.—John Peter Safranek, 18, was charged with homicide after he admitted strangling his mother because he "didn't like her." Police said the youth told them he committed the crime Sunday night when his mother, Mrs. Dora Safranek, awoke to find him taking $2 from her purse for "movie money."

Dead Man Becomes Very Spry Corpse
Suit Over Insurance Policy Brings Odd Story.

SMITHLAND, KY.—The story of a dead man who became a very lively corpse, with ensuing surprises, was told in Smithland, Ky. In 1925 the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance company issued a policy for $2,500 on the life of R. R. Trail, Smithland, then 21. About Christmas week, 1927, Trail left with his announced destination "the southwest."

Trail was last heard from March 24, 1928, when he wrote a letter to a relative at Smithland. There was no further word from the man. Then, in July, 1935, L. L. Wilson, a brother-in-law and an employee of a Smithland bank, was designated as executor for Trail to recover the amount of the policy on the theory that he had not been heard from in seven years and no one knew of his whereabouts and therefore he was probably dead and should be so declared legally.

Federal Judge Elwood Hamilton declared Trail legally dead at the Panhandle court in March, 1935. The insurance company subsequently paid $2,679.11 plus costs of $73.35.

In June, 1943, the insurance company heard Trail was in Smithland. An investigation proved that Trail, now a soldier, was in the army several years. Then he was transferred to England.

After correspondence with Trail, Wilson paid to the insurance firm $3,859.09 representing the face value of the policy plus interest.

The insurance policy, still in the hands of the company, had been marked "canceled by death," the usual notation. Then the company brought out the policy and canceled the death cancellation, and re-wrote: "Reinstated June 8, 1944," just as if there had been no litigation over the policy.

Treasure Hunt Pays Off; Find $6,000 in Old House

PORTLAND, ORE.—A map-guided treasure hunt in an old house occupied for many years by elderly bachelor brothers now dead, has yielded $6,000 in gold and silver coins, and an estimated $7,000 to $10,000 more is believed buried in the premises.

The attorney handling the estate is maintaining secrecy to protect the premises from volunteer treasure hunters. Searchers are working from maps left by the owners, one of whom died two years ago and the other recently.

Approximately $2,000 in silver coins were found in money bags in bureau drawers, $300 in silver in an old unlocked safe, and $276 in an old pair of trousers hanging in a closet. An old stove in the basement contained a glass jar holding $3,000, mostly in $20 gold pieces.

Claws 4 Zeros Slightly, He Wins Highest Medal

WASHINGTON.—The Congressional Medal of Honor has been awarded Lieut. Robert M. Hanson, marine officer who accounted for 25 enemy planes in the Pacific. He reported missing in action. Twenty planes of Hanson's score were downed in six consecutive days. The medal was awarded specifically for his attack on six enemy torpedo bombers over Rabaul on New Guinea subsided entirely on crabs, which they catch by the unique method of dangling their tails in the water from the edge of a flat rock. Two Cars Are Wrecked
And It's All in Family

CINCINNATI.—Husband met wife in an automobile collision, which police consider to be "one for the books." Driving a sedan, Mrs. Martha Ahrens, 61, ran through a stoplight, police reported. Her car was struck by another sedan driven by her husband, Herman Ahrens, 58. Mrs. Ahrens' car was overturned. Suffering from a possible left leg fracture and severe scalp cuts, she was taken to the hospital. Her husband was uninjured. Both cars were badly damaged.

Boy, 4, Plays Soldier, Kills Mother With Rifle

OKLAHOMA CITY.—A four-year-old boy playing soldier fatally wounded his mother with a rifle. Mr. and Mrs. James C. Hamilton were resting in the back yard of their home when their son, Jimmy, picked up a rifle his father had used on a recent hunting trip. He pointed it at his mother. "I'm a soldier," he said. . . . and fired.

It's Simple Furniture With Frills, Ruffles

IF YOU have been wondering if quaintness, frills and ruffles were going into the decorating scheme after the war, the answer is—can afford the war, the answer is—modern rooms but there will be rooms also in which all the war years' pent-up longing will burst forth in the most romantic versions of the traditional. Home-sweet Home with variations according to taste.

Period themes and quaintness will be stepped up to have a dramatic quality. Modern ideas will creep in and add to this effect.

Simple furniture will be built in and fabrics will be cut and sewn especially to fit the spaces they are to fill. The bed curtains for the slanting wall in the sketch are an example—and the triangular shaped window curtains to give extra fullness. Frills will be even fuller than those of our dreams, and many a homemaker who never before used her sewing machine attachments will be learning the mysteries of the ruffer and hemmer.

NOTE.—Why not let your dream room now with a skirted blanket chest like the one in this sketch? It is grand to have extra covers hand for shoe storage and the padded top makes a comfortable seat. Pattern 2265 gives complete and fully illustrated directions for details and materials needed for making the chest, full skirt and top cushion. SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER Consumption of reclaimed rubber in the United States increased more than 50 per cent from 1940 to 1943. Reclaimed rubber plays an increasingly important part in the manufacture of the same articles from which it was reclaimed.

In 1943 gasoline and motor vehicle tax revenues combined accounted for nearly 30 per cent of the total state revenues. Next year will mark the thirtieth anniversary of the use of motor vehicles in the rural free delivery mail service. Rubber-tired mail cars had a bearing on the passing of the first federal aid highway law in 1916.

TEMPLE CHURCH

Interest is increasing in every department of the Church work. We had 106 in Sunday School last Sunday and everyone stayed for church. Most of the church service Sunday morning was taken up by Rev. Hickman in giving instructions to the newly elected church and Sunday school officers and teachers.

At 7 p. m. our C. A. met. There is more interest in the C. A. work than there ever has been before. If you miss this you are losing a great opportunity. After the C. A. we had preaching by the pastor. He is giving a series of sermons from The Revelation. Do you thoroughly understand Revelation. If you do not, now is your chance to hear it explained each Sunday night by one who is very well informed. His discourse is given in simple plain language so that anyone can understand it.

JESUS THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

LESSON TEXT—John 9:1-7, 13, 34-41.
GOLDEN TEXT—The light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in the darkness, but shall have the light of life.—John 9:12.

Light is a fascinating subject for study, and especially is that true when we speak of spiritual light. In the lessons of the next three months we are to see the light which Christ sheds on the problems of life today.

How appropriate to begin that study by recognizing Christ as the one true "light of the world." He it is who brought us out of darkness, and it is from His light that we too are lighted and become God's lights in this wicked world (Matt. 5:14-16).

The story which presents our Lord as the light and the light giver is that of the man born blind. Four choices confront us.

I. Guesswork or God's Glory (vv. 1-5).

Men have an inordinate curiosity about those who are handicapped or crippled. Even the disciples of Jesus had fallen into the sad tendency of seeing in one who needed their help, a case for theological speculation rather than one in whom God's glory could be revealed.

Need without power to help is a depressing thing, and may encourage man to a bit of scientific or religious guesswork. Here is a specimen—let us examine it. How did this happen? Who was responsible? But when we know the power of God, guessing and theorizing is gone. Here is help!

Jesus declared a great truth here—suffering is not necessarily the result of sin, nor for the purpose of judgment or punishment. This man was here that God might show His grace and power.

Those who suffer in our day may be the means of declaring God's glory, by His deliverance from pain and sorrow, or by His grace to bear the burden graciously and for His glory.

II. Impossibility or Obedience (vv. 6-7).

"Clay cannot bring sight to a man's eyes—anyone knows that! All such a covering can do is to make the darkness of sightless eyes even more impenetrable." The blind man might have reasoned that way. He would have been entirely logical in so doing—and he would have gone right on being blind.

It is possible to thrust from you God's richest blessing by insisting that God's work be done in accord with your ability or understanding.

But the blind man chose the obedience of faith—"he went . . . and washed, and came seeing." Jesus is the light of the world to those who will believe. The blind man found it also—we may also find it to be true, if we will believe. The impossible becomes possible—with God, for with God all things are possible." Jesus said it (Matt. 19:26); let us believe it and act on it.

III. Controversy or Confession (vv. 13, 34-38).

This is a great chapter, one in which we see the glory of faith contrasted with the controversial smallness of unbelieving men. The Pharisees were religious men, but they hated Jesus (a combination possible even in our day), so they sought in every possible way to discredit Him, to deny the miracle, and to destroy the one who was healed.

Against that background the light of this man's faith shines the more brightly. The more they tried to confuse him, the deeper they entrapped themselves, as he answered in simple faith.

"Testimony is a tremendously effective thing, even though it must cling to the elementary and blessed truth 'I was blind, now I see' (v. 25). But note that he went on, and under the tender ministry of Jesus, he received his spiritual, as well as his physical, sight. 'I believe'—what majestic words, what transforming words, what world-shaking words! Friend, do you believe on Christ? If not, will you do it right now?

IV. Healing or Hardening (vv. 39-41).

The same sun which softens the wax also hardens the clay. The light which attracts some out of the dark places causes others to shrink farther into the shadows lest they have to give up their dark deeds and thoughts.

So it was in this case. The blind man who had faith, saw, and that sight was the sight of the soul as well as of the body. But the embittered Pharisees were only hardened to their sin. Because they boasted of their spiritual sight which made the ministry of Jesus unnecessary (as they thought), there was nothing for Him to do but to leave them in their darkness.

The light of Christ, which is the light of the problems of life in the lessons of the three months ahead of us, will either bring men to the light in faith, or confirm them in their unbelief. Which is it to be in our cases? That of those to whom you minister?

A Cottage All Paid For

By Cpl. E. SMOLLETT
McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

TWO couples were straggling along behind the rest, but the guide shrugged. Nobody got lost in the Broomburg Caves.

That elderly couple had most likely used up their wind climbing the hill from the hotel. As for the towheaded corporal and his pretty bride—they just didn't know anyone existed. Kids like that came to Niagara Falls because they had blissfully planned to come. Once they were there, the rest was hazy. They looked at each other, they ate, they breathed. They toured the caves because the caves lay behind the old Broomburg Hotel, and the tour was free to its patrons.

"Look, Hattie," white-haired Sam Smith said. "This one here is called—what's it say?—Acoustics Cavern."

His wife peered into the dimness. "Well, we've missed hearing the guide explain it, haven't we? But, Sam, look. Benches!"

Inside, they sank down and admired the pale grace of the stalactites that coned in silent splendor from the ceilings, and the stalagmites that shimmered upward.

After a moment, the Smiths laughed and bent and eased off their shoes.

"I wonder," Hattie Smith mused, "why they call it Acoustics Cavern?" That was when the younger couple caught up with them. "Some day, honey," the towheaded corporal was saying, "I'll show you the real thing—those big caves down in New Mexico!" He stopped short with his slim bride, seeing the Smiths. The Smiths and the little. Then they stopped smiling, in surprise, for the corporal exclaimed: "Heck! I thought we'd be alone in here!"

And his bride replied, just as clearly, "But it's only that old couple, Ted. They look nice and not smoochy. Let's go sit across from them."

The Smiths turned to stare at each other, catching their breaths a little. Then it struck them both at once, and Sam Smith grinned at his wife. So they called this place Acoustics Cavern, did they? But it was too late to put their fingers in their ears. . . .

"Beautiful, isn't it?" The girl leaned her brightest head on the young corporal's shoulder. "Ted, just look at that pinkish stuff, the way the light hits it. The whole place is lovely. Even . . . even those two people sitting there, Ted . . . Why, it's just like seeing into a crystal!"

"What do you mean, honey?" "Oh, Ted, I don't exactly know. Just that—Ted, what will you bet they're on their second honeymoon, maybe, even celebrating their golden anniversary?"

Sam Smith's hand crept tenderly over his wife's still fingers.

"I'll bet they're not," the corporal said. "I'll bet they always wanted to come to Niagara Falls just as we did, and he got a good war job or something, and it's the first time they could ever afford it."

" . . . with the kids all grown up and married," put in the girl boldly, "and the cottage all paid for, and maybe their grandchildren coming to stay every summer."

They looked at each other, smiling. "I guess I understand now what you meant about seeing into a crystal," the towheaded corporal said softly. "All those things are what we're going to have, aren't they, honey?"

"Yes, Ted. All those things . . . You can tell, by the way fate put us here, looking at those two!"

The Smiths sat very still. They heard the corporal say, though he seemed only to be whispering it: "Hurry, you mustn't ever be afraid I won't come back. I'll bet they went through a war too, and he came back! So, you keep right on looking into your crystal, and everything will come out O. K."

When they rose to leave, the Smiths followed them with their eyes. The corporal and his bride stopped at the entrance. "I wonder," he said, "why they call this place Acoustics Cavern? See the sign? I didn't hear anything funny in there. Did you?"

When they turned to each other's wife, and Sam Smith took his wife's trembling hands in his. She said, "Sam, I'll never forget for a day what you said. That's . . . that's the way I'll think about us from now on. I'll believe in all those things about . . . about our golden anniversary, and our cottage all paid for, and the children staying for the summer."

Sam Smith grinned. "All right, Hattie; dream if you like, but I'm going to think of us just as we are! Nothing could have been more wonderful than the way you came into my life—not that anything's too much to expect from war-patient women. There I was, foreman for a good twenty years, with never a female in the place!"

"And there you are," said Hattie Smith as they bent to fasten their shoes, "never finding the right man till I took a job filing books for Navy planes. . . ."

The elderly couple left Acoustics Cavern just in time to merge with the other sightseers, now on their way back. The guide glanced at them out of the corner of his eye.

Nice old pair. The kind that always stopped to take their shoes off, to get their second wind.

Meat Point Pointers... Rice Balls in Mushroom Sauce (See Recipes Below)

Flavorful Meats

You'll be using more of the lower grades of beef as time goes by. Most of the AA and A, top grades of beef, are going to armed forces and utility or lower grade beef will be more available for civilian consumption.

That calls for pulling out the old-fashioned, flavorful recipes that will really make this beef taste good. We used to do, and can still do it as long as we pull the bunny of ingenuitly out of the proverbial hat, or cookbook, as the case may be.

Inexpensive cuts of meat can be made tender by several methods. Round steak can be pounded with a small hammer or mallet to break down the tissues, then braised with liquids and seasonings to savory goodness. Stewing is another good method for cooking this type of meat. Adding tomato juice, spices, mushroom soup and other liquids gives peak flavor.

Here are recipes which may be made with utility beef, but which will have just as much flavor as the more expensive cuts:

Swiss Steak.

(Serves 6)

- Round or Arm steak, cut 2 inches thick
Flour
Salt and pepper
1 onion, thinly sliced
2 tablespoons lard
2 cups tomatoes
1 carrot, diced
1/2 cup corn
1/2 cup water
1 small green pepper, sliced
1/2 cup water

Mix flour, salt and pepper; pound into steak. Brown steak in lard. Add vegetables and water. Cover pan and cook in slow oven (300 degrees) for 2 1/2 hours. Add more water if needed. Serve with vegetables poured over steak.

Short Ribs With Vegetables.

(Serves 6)

- 5 pounds short ribs of beef
3 teaspoons salt
3/4 teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons lard
8 medium-sized potatoes
8 small onions
4 parsnips
4 carrots

Wipe meat with damp cloth, sprinkle with salt and pepper and brown in hot fat. Add water, cover and allow to simmer an hour. Prepare vegetables. Add whole potatoes, onions, parsnips and carrots cut in half. Season vegetables, cover and continue cooking until vegetables are tender. Serve meat on platter garnished with vegetables.

Lynn Says

Point Pointers: Use low temperatures in cooking meat, regardless of the method. High temperatures shrink meat unnecessarily.

Save all the meat you buy. If a roast is boned at the butchers, bring the bones home and use them for soup.

Different seasonings add interest to meats. Try onion gravy with beef. Mushroom soup, diluted and heated, goes well with lamb. Horseradish adds pep to pot roast or short ribs gravy.

Pork gravy is good with a dash of sage, lamb gravy with a bit of curry.

Leftover vegetables such as peas, carrots, celery, lima beans and green beans added to gravy make it colorful, different and more nourishing.

3 pounds chuck steak
1/2 teaspoon cloves
6 medium-sized onions
1/2 teaspoon peppercorns
2 tablespoons salt
1 teaspoon allspice
6 bay leaves
12 gingersnaps

Wipe meat with damp cloth. Place in a saucepan and cover with a mixture of half water and half vinegar. Add 2 tablespoons salt, sliced onions, bay leaves and spices. Let stand at least 24 hours. Place on stove and simmer gently until meat is tender. Take meat out and let drain. Strain broth through a sieve and let it come to a boil. Then add gingersnaps which have been softened into a paste with cold water. This will thicken broth so that it will have to be stirred about 3 minutes. Return meat to gravy and let stand for about 15 minutes before serving.

The favorite combination of ham and sweet potatoes takes a new turn in this following recipe:

Ham and Sweet Potato Roll.

(Serves 6)

- 3/4 pound ground ham
1/2 cup ground pork
1/2 cup cracker crumbs
1 egg
3/4 cup milk
Pepper

Combine all ingredients except potatoes. Spread on waxed paper to 1/2-inch thickness, making a rectangle about 6 by 10 inches. Spread with seasoned potatoes and spread like a jelly roll. Place in dripping pan and bake 1 1/2 hours in moderate (350-degree) oven.

Potted Veal With Dumplings.

(Serves 6)

- 2 pounds veal shoulder
1 onion
1 quart water
2 teaspoons salt
3/4 teaspoon pepper
1/2 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
2 cups diced potatoes
6 carrots
4 tablespoons flour
3/4 cup cold water

Remove fat and cut meat into 1-inch cubes. Simmer veal and sliced onion for 1 hour. Add salt, pepper, sauce, potatoes and sliced carrots. Continue cooking for 15 minutes longer. Thicken mixture with flour and water. Prepare dumplings and drop by spoonfuls on top of meat. Cover closely and steam 12 minutes.

Dumplings: 1/4 cups flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder, 3/4 teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons lard, 3/4 cup milk. Sift flour, measure and sift again with baking powder and salt. Cut in fat and mix to a fine crumb. Add milk and mix to a dough.

Many dishes are made better by the addition of mushrooms, or by a mushroom soup that combines both the goodness of the mushroom and a well-blended white sauce. Try:

*Rice Balls With Mushroom Sauce.

(Serves 6)

- 1 pound hamburger
1/2 cup rice
1 10 1/2-ounce can condensed mushroom soup

Mix together meat, salt and rice which has been washed and drained. Shape into small balls. Brown them in hot fat. Add mushroom soup which has been diluted with an equal amount of water. Cover. Simmer for 1 hour.

ARTURO DE CORDOVA could have spent the entire lunch time discussing his first American starring role—that of the swash-buckling pirate in "Frenchman's Creek," the picture Paramount's said to have spent about four million dollars on. He could have told about his work in Mexico, where he made more than 30 movies, or told that he's going right ahead, playing opposite Betty Hutton in "Incendiary Blonde," because he's so good. But he chose to talk about Joan Fontaine, the heroine of "Frenchman's Creek"—about how well she handles a role quite different from her others, about how lovely she looks in it—in short, about Joan.

How's this for shooting the works on a single picture? Metro announces as the principals for "Week-end at the Waldorf" Ginger Rogers, Lana Turner, Walter Pidgeon and Van Johnson. The picture will be in the general pattern of "Grand Hotel."

Paul Guilfoyle is enjoying ideal working conditions—a set for "The Master Race," in which he has one of the top roles, has been built practically in his back yard at Encino.

Watch the lad who does an extra-special jitterbug routine in "Youth Runs Wild." He's Pat Kane, 19, who was blinded in one eye by shrapnel in the Pearl Harbor disaster. He and his partner, Laura Hale, were among 24 hepcats called in for the picture; he's a former Missouri state champion jitterbug, she won the national tango and rumba championship—and they've started on a promising picture career.

Members of one of those Radio City guided tours paused in front of the RCA building. "High above you you'll see the Rainbow Room, on the 70th floor, where a cocktail party is being given for Fred Waring," said the guide. But the sightseers looked not at the towering building, but at the man getting out of a taxi at the curb—Gary Cooper, who also towered above them.

THIS IS NO DREAMED-UP HEADLINE—no "tone poem" conceived on an inspired typewriter. It's the way the army explains the command "Fix bayonets—charge!" Only the Infantry has it put to them in these words. As one doughboy said:

"I'll remember those eleven words the rest of my life."
Remember? How can he forget them? They describe the climax of the Infantryman's assault—they describe the most cold-blooded action on a battlefield. Yet Infantry officers and men have advanced, countless times, to kill or be killed... at Saratoga... at New Orleans... the Argonne... New Guinea... Salerno. There's no rescinding of this order—no retreating—no nothing but plain killing.

Right now, the men of the Infantry are closing in for the final kill. They're advancing every day—advancing to the order of "kill or be killed." Remember this the next time you see a doughboy on furlough. Remember this the next time you almost forget to write that letter. Remember it till your dying day. You can't pay the doughboy back—but at least you can be forever mindful of his role in this fight for freedom.

"Keep your eye on the Infantry—THE DOUGHBOY DOES IT!"

Memorial Services
For B. B. Headley

The memorial services for Pfc. Bill Benjamin Headley who was killed in action June 23rd, this year, will be held at Refuge Baptist Church, five miles East of Clanton on the First Sunday afternoon in October.

Mr. Headley was the husband of Mrs. Pauline Lockhart Headley and son-in-law of the Rev. M. Lockhart. The services will begin promptly at 3:00 O'clock and the arrangements for the service is as follows:

March from home to Church (Family reside near church).

Song, "The Star Spangled Banner".

Prayer, Rev. N. E. Cook, Pastor.

Song, "America".

Last letter received by Mrs. Headley from her husband, written just before his death will be read by the Rev. Cecil Little. It carries the news of his conversion.

"My Service To My Country," by Rev. G. G. Williams.

Message, Rev. J. W. Jones.

March to cemetery, Song, "Onward Christian Soldiers".

Benediction, by Rev. J. W. Jones.

Efforts are being put forth to secure a military band and also a group of soldiers. If there are any service men at home on furlough and wish to attend this service, we will be glad to have them and give them a special invitation. We would be glad to use all that can attend.

A group of military wives will accompany Mrs. Headley and her young son, Richard, as they march. Flower girls will also be in procession. It will not be a lengthy service.

COTTON WILT AND RUST CAUSING LARGE LOSSES

Auburn, Ala. — Many South and Central Alabama farmers this year let high pressure seed salesmen talk them into buying and planting non-wilt resistant cotton varieties on wilt infested land. This has resulted in greatly reduced cotton yields on hundreds of farms in the state.

Using low grade fertilizer with too little potash also has resulted in many cotton fields being hard hit by "rust" or potash starvation, especially in Southeast Alabama where dug peanuts have robbed the soil of much of its potash.

These conditions are reported by J. T. Belue, APL extension cotton specialist, who says:

Despite the fact that farmers have been warned against planting anything except wilt resistant varieties on wilt infested soils, some farmers in the southern and middle parts of the state still take a chance by planting non-wilt resistant varieties such as DPL 14, Stoneville and others.

Second only to milk, eggs are the most important source of protein for growing children.

Nothing can be done to overcome the loss being suffered this year but the situation can be partially corrected in 1945 by farmers planting only highly wilt-resistant varieties on wilt infested land and using more fertilizer with a high potash content.

Reports indicate that a large number of bushels of non-wilt resistant varieties were planted on wilt infested land in Autauga, Butler, Chilton, Choctaw, Clarke, Coffee, Conecuh, Covington, Crenshaw, Dallas, Escambia, Geneva, Houston, Lee, Lowndes, Macon, Mobile, Monroe, Montgomery, Pike, Sumter, Washington and Wilcox counties.

Excellent Hay
Yields Received
From Sericea

W. B. Strock, whose place is about two miles west of Coopers on the Enterprise road, seems to have found the plant for upland pastures.

In March 1943, under a plan made with the North Central Soil Conservation District, Mr. Strock seeded about 3 1/2 acres to sericea. The land was well prepared and most of the area received about 600 pounds of superphosphate per acre. An excellent stand was obtained, and growth was good the first year, except on the small part receiving only about 200 pounds of fertilizer per acre. However nothing was removed so that the sericea developed its root system throughout the entire growing season.

This year Mr. Strock has taken 5 tons of hay from this field in two cuttings. The first cutting was made on May 19, the second on July 17.

Soon in August the sericea had again reached a height of 3 to 4 inches so it was decided to graze it. A wire was thrown around the field. A mule, 3 milch cows and 3 yearlings eat the sericea readily and are doing well on it. The area will carry them until frost, which means each acre will have furnished nearly 4 animal-months grazing in addition to producing 1.4 tons of hay.

It's worth investigating. See the place if you can, and consult Mr. Strock. The County Agent or the Soil Conservationist working with the District will be glad to give you details as to how it can be done on your farm.

ANNUAL ALL-DAY SINGING
AT MONTGOMERY OCT. 1ST

The Annual All-Day Singing in the Sacred Harp will be held at the Courthouse in Montgomery Sunday, Oct. 1st. All Chilton County Singers are invited to be with us. We will have singers from all over the State. Dinner will be served on the ground.

JACKSON CHAPEL

Our Sunday School was well attended last Sunday. We had Bro. J. D. Wesson and family with us. We was glad to have them and invite them back again. Bro. Kirby didn't come for some reason. We're sorry he didn't come but maybe he'll be with us again. Everybody come next Sunday and get new books.—Mrs. Rennie Baker.

Cotton leaf worms have been reported in Marion, Pickens and Lee counties, but W. A. Ruffin, extension entomologist, believes that cotton, except for a few extremely late fields, is too far advanced for them to do a great deal of damage.

Second only to milk, eggs are the most important source of protein for growing children.

Nothing can be done to overcome the loss being suffered this year but the situation can be partially corrected in 1945 by farmers planting only highly wilt-resistant varieties on wilt infested land and using more fertilizer with a high potash content.

Reports indicate that a large number of bushels of non-wilt resistant varieties were planted on wilt infested land in Autauga, Butler, Chilton, Choctaw, Clarke, Coffee, Conecuh, Covington, Crenshaw, Dallas, Escambia, Geneva, Houston, Lee, Lowndes, Macon, Mobile, Monroe, Montgomery, Pike, Sumter, Washington and Wilcox counties.

"BEST LIMEY CAN DO"

S-SGT. L. D. EASTERLING

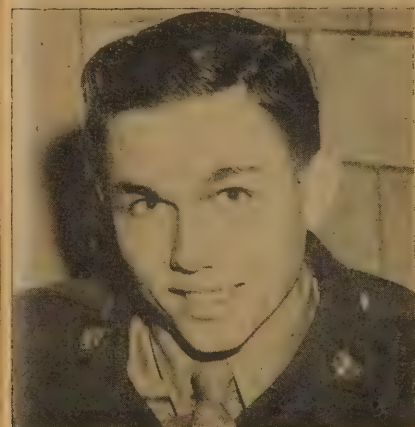

PFC. MARVIN M. ELLISON

Letter from Sgt. Easterling this week informs that he spent a week in France recently and had himself a time. Found a nice Hotel room, complete with shower, nice soft bed, all just vacated by the Germans. D. says the Germans left Paris so that they left practically everything they had.

Pfc. Marvin M. Ellison, son of Mrs. A. J. Ellison, of Clanton Route 1, says the above picture of himself isn't so 'hot' but it's the best that the Limeys can do. He is in England and doing o.k. he says. Wants us to tell all his friends hello and maybe it won't be too long before he can see them all.

S-SGT. FRANK A. MARTIN

Staff Sergeant Frank A. Martin of this city, has 35 missions against the Germans and is now spending a turgid hete with his parents and friends.

Sgt. Martin arrived in New York on the 20th of this month and his first quest, as he disembarked from the Trans-Atlantic plane of the Air Transport Command, was for an ice cream soda which had been unobtainable since he left the states eight months ago. Martin was tail gunner on a B-17 Flying Fortress on all of his missions. For his 35 combat flights he was awarded The Distinguished Flying Cross and Air Medal with four clusters, the fourth of which was awarded him for shooting down a German FW-190 during a mission over Germany.

Pfc. Frank Presswood from Fort McClellan, Ala. was here for the weekend with his family and friends.

War Chest Drive Committee Name Community Chairmen

Community Chairmen have been named in every community in Chilton County in preparation for the War Chest drive that will start on October 17th. The drive, in fact, has already started but the opening date is the 17th.

Donald Blacketter, County Chairman, stated Tuesday that it was his, and the Executive Committee's desire that the County quota be reached not later than the 21st day of October. To accomplish this every community chairman will be compelled to work tirelessly for the few days duration of the Drive.

There are 22 agencies sponsored or maintained by the National War Chest, among them being USO, United Seaman's Service, War Prisoners Aid, and American Field Service.

A list of community chairmen and their quotas will be run in the next issue of the Chilton County News.

Patrol Rushes Child To B'ham Hospital

Quite a bit of excitement and anxiety was created in Clanton Tuesday afternoon.

It seems that a Mrs. Griffin of Troy was on her way to Birmingham to see if someone could remove a penny from the lungs of little 14 months old Alice Davenport, also of Troy. The child had swallowed the penny given her by Mrs. Griffin and Mrs. Griffin immediately rushed her to the hospital at Troy and then to Montgomery. They did not have the necessary instrument to remove the penny so she was trying to get her to Birmingham. When she reached Clanton on the bus, everyone became interested, including the Highway Patrolmen Glenn and Stewart, who called the Jefferson County Patrol, and the Clanton Patrol took the ladies and the baby within 30 miles of Birmingham where they were met and the Birmingham took them the rest of the way to the hospital. The penny was removed and little Alice is doing fine.

Ladies Night At Pilot Club

The annual Ladies Night of the Clanton Pilot Club was held in the basement of the Methodist Church, Tuesday night, Sept. 26, with the Pilots, their guests, and the guests of the Club, totaling sixty-one in all.

Each organization of ladies in Clanton was represented either by the president of the organization or some one designated by the president.

The Womens Christian Service of the Methodist Church was represented by Mrs. Omar Reynolds; the Baptist WMCU by Mrs. Houston Nivens; the Music Club by Mrs. W. H. Klinner; Child Welfare Work by Miss Molly Megginson; Crippled Children Clinic Miss Lillian McKee; The Red Cross Mrs. Burber Farley; The T-B Assn. Mrs. Joe Mullins; The Dorkas Society of the Seventh Day Advent, by Mrs. R. G. Wilson; The Study Club Mrs. J. P. Hayes; The Band Mothers Mrs. Jimmie Taylor; The Grammar School P-T. A. Mrs. Walter Fleck. Each of these representatives told the outstanding work of their organization.

The speaker of the evening was Dr. Hallie Farmer, head of the History Department of Alabama College at Montevallo. She spoke on "What Price Democracy" pointing out the fact that democracy is something we must work to keep, we must think clearly and individually and stand by our convictions.

Democracy does not just naturally exist and could be lost if the American people are not willing to pay the price to keep it.

Dr. Farmer also pointed out that 60% of the voters this year will be women, for the first time in history, and they should enlighten themselves, vote intelligently, and prepare themselves to hold office.

Mrs. Lois Mills directed the music for the evening and presented two of her music pupils in parts on the program. Miss McGowan gave a vocal number and Miss Rosalind Owen a piano selection.

This was a happy occasion for the Pilot Club and they look with anticipation for Ladies Night again next year.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL PARENT-TEACHERS MEET

The Oct. meeting of the Grammar School P-T. A. was held Tuesday of this week at the Grammar School. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. Walter Fleck.

Mrs. Reid Mullins brought the devotional message.

A most interesting talk was given by Miss McKee after which the minutes of last meeting were read and much new business discussed. Room count was made and the Fifth grade gets the half holiday.

The meeting for November will be held on Nov. 9th at 8 o'clock p. m. This will be Father's Night and all fathers are expected and cordially invited to attend this meeting. Remember Nov. 9th at 8 o'clock.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Nazis Fight to Check Allied Advance on Industrial Center; Study Plans for Postwar Reich

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Wherever in this column, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Two doughboys double up on makeshift cot for rest behind battle lines at Aachen, Germany, while others loiter around armored car.

EUROPE:

Decisive Battle

Greatest battle on the western front raged around the Dutch town of Nijmegen as Britain's Second army under command of Lieut. Gen. Miles Dempsey, aided by air-borne reinforcements, struggled to turn the vaunted Siegfried line above its northern terminus and open the gateway to the Ruhr valley, heart of German industry.

Themselves declaring that the entire course of the war in the west could be determined by an Allied breakthrough in this sector, the Germans used increasing numbers of troops and large quantities of equipment to stem the British thrust, and the Luftwaffe made some of its infrequent appearance in strength to bomb British concentrations.

As advance columns of General Dempsey's Second army thrust northward in the Nijmegen area, the German launched persistent attacks on its supply lines running southward to Eindhoven, and the British were hard pressed to keep the roads open for the transport of material. As they fought to clear the main highway, alternate roads were established to the east and west.

Aiding the Second army's thrust were appreciable reinforcements of men and material by air, with the famed "Red Devil" division west of Arnhem fighting to the last to hold open the bridge above the Neder Rhine and set the stage for a swing around the Siegfried line down to the Ruhr.

While the big battle raged around Nijmegen, big guns of Lieut. Gen. Courtney Hodges' First army raked German positions east of Aachen on the road to Cologne. In the Nancy sector, Lieut. Gen. George Patton's Third army advanced in the face of stubborn German counterattacks designed to slow its drive on the industrial Saar basin. In the Belfort Gap between the Vosges mountains in France and Switzerland, Lieut. Gen. Alexander Patch's Seventh army encountered heavy enemy fire from prepared defensive positions guarding the open plains to Germany.

Pressing forward from beachheads along the Yugoslavian coast, Allied forces sought to cut off Nazi troops moving northward from the Balkans.

Their "Gothic" line breached by the Fifth and Eighth Allied armies advancing under cover of murderous artillery and aerial bombardment, Nazi armored columns in northern Italy sought to stem the U. S. and British forces pushing on the rich Po valley by repeated counterattacks.

Declaring that Finland's withdrawal from the war no longer made it necessary for them to protect the Finns' flank by occupying the Baltic states of Estonia and Latvia, the Germans announced they were breaking off the battle in those countries and pulling out.

Even as the Germans spoke of the detaching movements, the Red army popped down on Nazi ships seeking to evacuate troops from Baltic ports, and the Russian armies pressed toward complete occupation of Estonia and Latvia.

As the Germans further shortened their lines on the contracting eastern front, strong Russian forces poised for a major drive against East Prussia, while still other units fought on the mountainous threshold of Czechoslovakia and skirted the Transylvanian Alps to advance on the broad Hungarian plains.

FOLLOW FOOTSTEPS:

Back Near Rhine

Americans battling their way into western Germany with the other Allied forces are following the footsteps of an earlier generation of U. S. fighting men.

In 1918, the American army of occupation clogged against a strong German drive to the east bank of the Rhine in accordance with terms of the armistice following the collapse of the Kaiser's once formidable war machine.

PARITY PRICES:
For Cotton, Wheat

Proceeding in accordance with a recent act of congress to equalize farm income, the War Food Administration announced plans for purchase of all 1944 cotton and wheat in loan at parity.

In stating that it would buy all 1944 loan cotton in suitable storage at parity, which approximated 21.08 cents August 15, the WFA also revealed that the Commodity Credit corporation would be permitted to sell the staple at not less than the equalization price.

Under the WFA's wheat purchase program, it will buy all unredeemed 1944 loan wheat May 1, 1945, at parity, less marketing charges for the storage year. In the instance of wheat, the equalization price is figured at the loan rate, plus 15 cents per bushel.

Markets Bound

Down a week before with the prospects for a bumper grain harvest, grain prices shot up with the announcement of the WFA's parity program for wheat and cotton.

Moving in sympathy with wheat and cotton, the market on corn, oats, rye and barley also advanced, although traders believed that some revision would have to be made in the case of the latter two grains if they are to hold up, since loan prices on them are much below parity.

In all of the grains save corn, and in cotton, the WFA's parity program led to a wave of futures buying that reached the permissible price limit for one day.

CIGARETTES:

Boost Tobacco Quota

There were prospects of easier supplies of cigarettes with the War Food Administration's allocation of 624 million pounds of flue-cured tobacco to manufacturers for purchase during the present marketing season as a result of the big 1944 crop of 1 billion, 47 million pounds.

With production estimates hiked over the billion pound mark from 834 million pounds in July, 1944 allocations will almost equal the amount of tobacco manufacturers used during the last year, and fall just 2 per cent below purchases from the record crop of 1939.

Allied and other friendly nations were allotted 391 million pounds.

Remembers Buddies

Picture shows Marine Sergeant Martin F. Taylor (center), Potsdam, N. Y., standing over makeshift grave of one of four buddies who had been killed by his side on Guadalcanal in 1942.

After hastily burying them in trenches and fashioning crude crosses of sticks and bayonets to mark the spots, Sgt. Taylor was forced to move on, but not until he had vowed to come back some day to arrange a decent burial. Two years later, Sgt. Taylor returned to find the bodies and fulfill his vow.

BUTTER:

Day-to-Day

With the government reserving 126,000,000 pounds of the 138,000,000 pounds of butter in storage for itself, civilian supplies are on a day-to-day basis, the American Dairy association reports.

The tight situation promises to last up later in the year, however, with the government's withdrawal from the butter market next month. The government has been diverting much butter fat from butter producers for powdered milk and other uses.

Normally, 178,000,000 pounds of butter are held in storage for civilians at this time every year, instead of the current stock of 12,000,000 pounds.

WAR PRODUCTION:

Items Lag

Despite the heavy overall output, manufacture of some war material ran behind schedule during the first eight months of 1944.

Only 45 per cent of the year's heavy truck program is complete, and the 1944 aircraft user cent in big shell production and 28 per cent in aerial bomb output are required to round out goals.

Found heartening was peak production for heavy duty tress, B-29 and B-24 super bombers and heavy artillery ammunition in August.

WAGES:

Hit Peak

Showing a fractional increase over the previous month, hourly wages in the manufacturing industries averaged $1.07 in July, the national industrial conference board reported, to rise 41.2 per cent over those prevailing in January, 1941.

Despite the fact that weekly earnings showed a slight dip from the previous month, they averaged $48.87 in July, 59.7 per cent over the January, 1941, level.

Washington Digest
World Conferences Aid In Bettering Relations

Personal Contact Brings Parties Closer

Together, Churchill Says; UNRRA Good Example of Friendly Cooperation.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

The world has entered a period of international gatherings, the number and scope of which have never even been approached before in history. On their success or failure depends the winning or the losing of the peace.

In the fields and the factories of the United States were produced the materials whose weight in the balance sealed the victory for the Allies. Now, will America be willing to contribute to the conferences which are struggling to deal with postwar problems that "town-meeting" spirit which has made our own "league" of states a success? With out this help no trail to peace can be blazed.

There was a moment in Quebec, last month, at the one gathering when press and radio stood face to face with Roosevelt and Churchill, when a human meeting entered the atmosphere that struck me forcefully. The prime minister was speaking about the speculation over the various persons who had been called into the Quebec conference and concerning a human meeting which had been much speculation, not only Foreign Minister Eden, but also Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau.

The prime minister developed a theme which the President has often used and which in both cases I believe, represented the considered opinion of men who had learned by experience. And that theme is that many difficult problems become simplified when they are discussed face to face. Mr. Churchill remarked it was hard to underestimate the inefficiency of the printed word (as compared to personal contact) and he also said that already a number of friendships had developed from Anglo-American meetings which he decided asset to both nations from the diplomatic standpoint.

Individuals can learn to get on together especially when the goal ahead of them is something above party beyond their own personal desires.

UNRRA's Staff

Pledged to Fairness

I was discussing this very point recently with a member of the United Nations Rehabilitation and Relief administration. He believes firmly that the conferences of an international nature already called, have for the most part shown a great enough degree of success to justify the hope for considerable progress toward world understanding.

Some of the facts concerning UNRRA itself, not generally realized, are worth presenting here before they seem to support this optimism.

UNRRA has just completed its second session in Montreal and I must say there was an air about that meeting which gave one a feeling of the vitality of the organization. In the first place its director general, former Governor Lehman of New York, is so thoroughly absorbed by his job and imbued with enthusiasm for it that his influence energizes the whole staff.

This is one of the intangible things about this international body which makes one have some faith in the ability of the peoples of different nationalities to get together to do things. And so also makes one feel less intangible but recognizable as a force for unity, is the spirit of the UNRRA employees which is symbolized by the oath they all have to take. In this point let me point out that the employees of the organization must not be confused with the 44 members of the council, UNRRA's policy making body. The council members are all plenipotentiaries representing their respective countries, just as members of congress represent different districts.

But the employees, from the director general down, who are the employees of the 44 nations, take an international oath in which they swear they will serve all countries equally and will not allow national prejudice of any kind to enter into their decisions or their conduct. The result is an objective attitude which is hard for a person making no such conscious effort to attain, even to comprehend. I recall something similar on the part of members of the Belgian relief commission in the last war. Their ability to remain in occupied Belgian territory depended on demonstrating to the complete satisfaction of the German military commanders that they were neutral and their conscious effort to act utterly disinterested brought about a really neutral viewpoint.

Of course, this strictly non-partisan attitude is not, nor is it expected to be, adopted by the representatives of the member nations, and the controversy which arose at the recent session concerning UNRRA's activity in former enemy territory was due to the play of emotions which takes place when hate has been nurtured for a long time, as Axis nurtured it. According to the UNRRA rules, no relief can be administered in former enemy country unless a majority of the council so votes and if the enemy country pays for such services and supplies as it receives.

It was natural that some of the nations which suffered as they did under the Nazi or Fascist heel, would be prejudiced.

UNRRA Ready to Move Into Balkans

So much for the solidity of UNRRA. It has only begun to function, of course, and its latest meeting was the first when attention could be given to matters other than fundamental policies. It is now in operation and the number of technicians attending was greatly increased.

Meanwhile, however, UNRRA men are ready in Cairo, at the moment, the military is able to give the word, to move into Greece and Yugoslavia and first, assist the army relief work and then, when the army is ready to turn these functions over, take over.

Reparation is a very important part of any European relief since millions of people have been evacuated or driven or have fled from their own homeland and are scattered all over the world. UNRRA has taken over the work of the Middle East Refugee relief and has charge of the placement and maintenance of 50,000 Greeks and Yugoslavs in Palestine and Egypt.

It has a new camp located in Algeria where the climate represents less of a change than the desert from the homeland of the refugees. The poor people suffer enough in morale, they are either women, children or aged, and need the kind of grouping for a cheerful society and life on a desert is not popular with many people even when they have congenial company.

UNRRA's accomplishments so far, the excellent press it has had and the enthusiasm with which it has been received—even the few unpleasant stories circulated about it—indicate that it is a going concern even though it is only intended to be a temporary one.

We might go down the list of other conferences, past or pending, and report a good deal of progress on most of them: the Bretton Woods Monetary conference, the one on food and agriculture, both resulted in the creation of permanent organizations. A meeting of the ministers of education of the United Nations held last April in London, I am told, will undoubtedly contribute to the promotion of wider educational opportunities in education.

A general economic conference, recently called by Secretary Hull, and one on aviation are yet to be proved.

It is only when you get into realm of the military or the political that you begin to run into snags. It might be argued that the reason for this is that military and political goals are purely selfish.

Petroleum may be in continuous process of formation in the beds of gulls and oceans, according to Professor Denis L. Fox of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography. He recently analyzed many samples of mud, some with an estimated age of 6,000 years, and found them well supplied with well-preserved pigmented organic materials. He also found some of the muds inhabited by bacteria which are able to directly synthesize petroleum.

BRIEFS... by Baukhage

A Tokyo radio program announced recently that American pilots getting short of pilots' because "Americans are using many women pilots in the Pacific battles."

The census bureau pictures the average American father in the United States as 44 years old, married, living with his wife and with one or two children.

The Berlin radio has announced that the government will provide "generous" indemnification for all damage caused by enemy action and that "those who buy new furniture and household equipment will get paid immediately for whatever they own." German radio reports have indicated that there is virtually no new furniture and household equipment in Germany.

SNAPPY FACTS
ABOUT

Relining of tires and government agencies estimate that it has been responsible for cutting in half the annual scrap of used cars.

In 1941 the U. S. consumed some 766,000 long tons of natural rubber, an all-time peak, but in 1944 the country is expected to use only 164,000 long tons. Added to this, of course, is an enormous tonnage of synthetic rubber.

Talking of tire conservation, dry driving, with "stop and go" conditions, causes seven times as much wear on tires as 25-mile-per-hour driving in rural sections. Also, nine times as much wear on city roads as in normal tire wear.

PEACE IN EUROPE SHOULD NOT BE CLAMOROUSLY CELEBRATED

The Executive Committee of the Chilton County Missionary Baptist Association met in regular session recently and while dealing with other matters, discussed at length the importance of celebrating the peace in Europe in the right spirit.

We believe that VICTORY will come, and when it does we are going to have many things to guard against. Certainly, we should give God all the praise and honor because without him there would be no victory at all.

There is certainly nothing radically wrong in making plans to celebrate this great victorious hour, but at the same time we should be very careful that our plans are threaded into the perfect will of God.

Then, too, may it be remembered that when Germany surrenders, the whole task will not yet have been accomplished, but we will be far on the way by the help of all mighty God who is able to carry through to the end anything He begins.

It is with much regret that some of our latest cities have already seen fit to place hundreds of extra policemen at their discretion when victory is declared. No one can look upon this action with horror, but it should not have to be done. Let the American people brace themselves against this final wave of debauchery because the sacrifices which have been made has been thoroughly mixed with the blood of humanity.

We, the humble servants of this association who are in full sympathy with every parent, wife, friend or sweetheart who has loved ones in the service and especially to those who have received unwelcome news extend to one and all the sense of gratitude of the entire association in advance for the support and cooperation in helping to maintain a peaceful peace when the news of victory comes to our shores.—Action of the Executive Committee of the Chilton County Baptist Association.

IN MEMORIAM

BELOVED DADDY

In memory of our beloved daddy and husband who left us the 24th of July, 1944.

Dear daddy how we miss you. If you could have stayed a little longer. But God knows best. We now know that you are no longer suffering.

We know that you suffered your share the last 8 months of your life.

We know you are at rest if we could only went with you. Oh! How we miss you dear daddy. Everyone has been so nice to us but no one can ever fill your place.

When we wake in the morning your whistling and singing is missing. It really does not seem that you could have left us without telling us more than you did. You know we can never be happy again as we were before you were taken ill.

We sure hope that we will meet again in Heaven and be just one little happy family.

We hope and pray that we will meet you soon.—Mrs. H. B. Owens and family.

those who took part in the services, but the writer would like to refer you to a 'Card of Thanks' elsewhere in this paper for further statements.

Several relatives and friends of Pfc. Bill Benjamin Headley attended the Memorial Service from Louisiana and Mississippi. The overflowing crowd spoke well of the many, many friends of Bill who gave his life for his country in France.

The wife, Mrs. Mildred Pauline Headley, just recently received a letter from a Mrs. Mavis Hilyer of Opelika whose husband was a buddy to her husband and stated that they went to Sunday School together, wrote their letters together and went into combat together, praying that they might get to come home to their families. Pfc. Hilyer, according to his wife, stated that Bill was very near his heart, and did not want to think about him being taken away from him, but would tell us more if the Lord saw fit for him to return home. He also stated that Bill was only ten steps behind him when he (Bill) was killed on June 23rd. Hilyer himself was seriously wounded in the same battle and has been in a hospital ever since.

Peace be to "Bill" ashes, and hoping that they can be returned to us after this terrible war is over. Our prayer goes out to all those who have and will travel this way. Will you pray for us?

Remember the services here next Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night.

FOLKS & THINGS ABOUT TOWN

—By BEN.

We're enjoying this week very much a visit from an old, old friend, Wesley D. Ballard and wife from Los Angeles, California. Mr. and Mrs. Ballard have visited Alabama for the past three years, each summer, and all-enjoying ourselves very much. Of course last week I did have quite a bit of that "California fog" but things are clear again and both are having a grand time in our midst. And we are having a grand time having them.

One of the things we are very sick of—Out of town businesses writing us and stating that because of the shortage of this and that, will we contact their customers and try to sell their product for them, and maybe we will get a small advertising account for our trouble. What makes us mad is, we can't even get enough help to contact our own customers for advertising, let alone do another job on the side.

I watched them tearing a building down, A gang of men in a busy town. With a ho-heave-ho and a lusty yell They swung a beam, and the sidewalk fell. I asked the foreman: "Are these men skilled, As the men you'd hire if you had to build?" He gave a laugh and said: "No, indeed!"

PLEASANT GROVE

There was not much Sunday School Sunday because of absences. Every one try to come to church and worship for what we do for God will never repay for what he does for us.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Martin has as their Sunday guests, Mr and Mrs. Pink Martin of Union Grove.

Mr and Mrs Wilson Clements and sons spent Sunday with Mr and Mrs Edgar Askews and family near Verbena.

Miss Myrtle Price spent the week-end with her sister in Montgomery.

Mrs. Hunter Rasco and Mrs. Tom Childress spent Saturday afternoon with Mrs. Hollis Cherry (Glovey Giles) and small son, Hollis Derral.

Mrs. Hubert Wright of Miami, is visiting his parents Mr and Mrs John Wright. Mr. Wright seems to be improving.

Mr and Mrs Charlie Childress and children, Mr and Mrs R. V. Compton and children and Miss Belma Price attended the funeral of Mrs. Ed. Compton's sister at Eden Sunday.

Mrs. Edie Childress spent a few days last week in Birmingham with relatives. Alvin returned with her for the week-end.

Tommie Patterson spent the week-end with Mr and Mrs Lonnie Rhodes and family.

Mr James Rasco spent the weekend with his parents.

Mrs. Roxie Price has her guest Mr and Mrs Goves Price and son Shelton.

Miss Pearl Thrash, Burl and Chas. Thrash spent the week-end with Miss Helen Price at Lomax.

Mr. Albert Jones spent Sunday with Mr. Jim Wright.

This cotton picking situation is getting serious. Why don't the merchant and all, declare a 'holiday' from the businesses and all hands get out in the cotton fields and help the farmer out. After all, if the farmer doesn't make anything, the merchant sure will suffer too. Now take yourself, for instance, we could probably pick on a few pounds or less per day, but enough people pick a few pounds to aid to the farmers would be immeasurable. Think this over. As we said it, thing is getting serious. The time do something about it, is now.

TIRE'S

Are still hard to get. Rationing more than ever is necessary because although more civilians have been made eligible for new tires, rationing boards have not been allotted any more tires for distribution than in previous months. So this means that as soon as your tires run smooth you should get them because if run beyond this point you will not get replacements, and if you do you will not be cooperating with the war effort. This is a very important part of it --- for our armed forces need more and more tires and we are determined that they shall have first choice over us here at home.

You wouldn't believe it but the average life of a tire on the battle front is only 2 hours.

So that's the answer to the tire shortage. Come in and see us Recapping and Repairing and let us help you to get more milage from your tires and we'll both be doing our small part to help do a big part in winning this war.

We also have a good stock of grade one truck and passenger tires and plenty of grade three tires.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to take this means of expressing our sincere thanks for the many kind things said and done since the news came of the death of our husband Pfc. Bill Benjamin Headley who was killed in action in France on June 23rd.

The "Memorial Service", which was held at Refuge Baptist Church on the first Sunday in October 1944 in honor of our husband and father of our little boy, (Richard), was somewhat sad but at the same time gave us comfort to know that so many friends were in full sympathy.

We desire to express our gratitude to Rev. J. W. Jones and N. E. Cook for their words of comfort; to W. G. Easterling for the reading of the last letter to the audience, which we received from our husband concerning his conversion; also to Mr. White (Funeral director) for his fine services and to Mr. Martin for furnishing a large flag.

We especially appreciate the many nice flowers. We certainly could not fail to mention the services rendered by the soldiers from Craig Field, Selma. Then, too, we were glad to have one of our own sailors from our own community to take part, Howard Baker, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Baker.

Mrs. Mildred Pauline Headley, and family.

Postwar Sign Post

By Rufus T. Strohm
Dean, International Correspondence Schools

THE job of planning for the post-war world is as bewildering and tangled as a South Sea jungle, but there are a few certainties that ought to help us begin to cut a road through.

It is certain that our domestic problem is chiefly industrial. If we build a sound industrial prosperity, most other problems will be solved without serious trouble.

It is certain that industrial development will be more technical than ever. It will need them depend upon still further application of the most advanced discoveries of science.

It is certain that postwar industry will depend upon highly skilled technicians. It will not be able to wait a year or two while they go to school. It will need them immediately with the coming of peace, and it will have to take men as it finds them and train them as they work.

It is certain that most men discharged from the armed forces or released from war production will not have the knowledge and skill that industry will need, yet they will want jobs.

The needs of industry and the needs of the men both point to one line of action that will be of major importance in the postwar world-- spare-time study. This is the only way industry can get the men it needs and the men can get the jobs they need.

It is fortunate for the country that tens of thousands, both in the armed forces and in war industry, are already training themselves in this way for the task that lies ahead.

MORAL ECHOES
Rev. D. W. Haskew, D.D.

Did you read that interesting story of an American flyer who was crossing the ocean all alone? Before him appeared a storm that was coming upon him with lightning speed. He looked to see if he could go beneath the storm, but he saw that the waters were boiling with fury. He saw that it was impossible to go around the storm. There was but one thing to do and that was to lift his frail craft above the storm. He made it 3,500 feet into the air when the storm struck him with all of its fury. The air became as dark as midnight, as he battled with a hurricane, cyclone and a typhoon, all in one. In the midst of the darkness he climbed on and all of a sudden his ship climbed out into the sunshine and the calm above the storm. There in the heavens he worshipped God. The way up with him was the way out. His way is our way also.

In crossing the Rockies in your car down into the dale. Hardly aware that you are climbing, you go up from a few feet of altitude until you are more than ten thousand feet in the air. You do not know that you have been climbing, but now you look in all directions and you find yourself on top of the world. Men are asking if the world is getting better. In spite of our world being in the valley and wallowing in the mud of war, yet our world is getting better. In spite of our ups and downs, we too are making progress. May God help us to travel on and finally get on top of the world.

The pilot of a plane must learn to fly on the beam as they call it. The flying field at Marianna, Panama City and Montgomery, each has its own radio beam, and each pilot knows the beam and he can follow it to his own landing field and to safety. The pilot may be in the dark, he may be in the midst of a storm, but he can follow his beam and go home. God has given to each of us a heart that can follow the beam of God's guidance if we will just keep tuned in on Him. We can fly our plane of life on the beam of God if we will only listen to His call. Yes, God is calling us that we may be guided safely home.

One morning the parson walked in to the store of the chairman of his board and the layman observed that the preacher had one of his fingers bandaged. "Preacher, how did you cut your finger?" inquired the good layman. The preacher replied, "This morning I was shaving and thinking about my sermon and I cut my finger." Then the chairman of the board gave this good advice, "Parson the next time you had better think about your finger and cut your sermon." If preachers would think harder, many of them would do some cutting on their sermons. Brevity is not only the soul of wit, but it is the soul of a sermon, or anything else that is worth while. Did you know that the story of creation was told with six hundred words?

Soup Makes the Main Dish of This Meal

(See Recipes Below)

Soup Suppers

When cooler weather arrives, there's nothing better than a hot bowlful of soup to satisfy the appetite. If the soup is hearty enough, it can even make the main dish for the meal.

Chowders, bean soup, pea soup, flavored with a ham hock or ham bone, cream soups rich and satisfying—all these can provide appetite satisfaction for hearty appetites. Make enough of the soup while you're about it to last for several meals. That will solve quickie lunch problems or provide the hot food for many a school lunch box.

If soup is the mainstay of the meal, build a salad and a substantial dessert around it. All are easy fixing, and won't take too much time on a busy wash day or a time when you need to do something equally important.

An old-fashioned beef and vegetable chowder, fortified additionally by the perfect food, milk, is excellent eating:

*Beef-Vegetable Chowder

1/2 pound round steak
2 tablespoons shortening
2 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
3 cups boiling water
2 tablespoons chopped onion
1 cup cubed potatoes
1 cup cubed carrots
2 tablespoons flour
1 quart milk
1 cup cooked or canned peas

Cut the meat in 1/2 inch cubes and fry in shortening until brown, stirring frequently. Add 1 teaspoon salt and the pepper, water and onion. Cover and cook slowly for one hour. Add potatoes, remaining salt, and carrots and cook 20 minutes longer. Mix flour with 2 tablespoons milk to a paste. Add remaining milk and pour into the meat and vegetable mixture. Cook, stirring constantly until thickened. Add peas. Serve very hot.

If you can't get along without the taste of potatoes for a meal, you'll enjoy this recipe:

Potato Chowder

(Serves 6)
3 large potatoes, pared and diced
3 cups onions, sliced thin
2 1/2 cups water
2 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper

Lynn Says:

Soup Fixings: Save all celery leaves, bits of parsley and spinach leaves and use them when making soup to give good, all-vegetable flavor.

Brown meat first when making soup so that it will have good, brown color. Be sure that it is well seasoned before serving.

When meat is cut up into small pieces, soup making time can be cut down considerably.

Use leftover meat bones from roasts and chickens as a base for making soup.

When the butcher trims off bones and pieces of meat from the roast, make sure he gives them to you. They can be used for soup.

Toasted rye bread, rusk, rolls are good accompaniments for soup.

Salad suggestions for soup main dishes: fresh fruit salad, cheese sprinkled toast, shredded carrots with chopped greens with chopped hard-cooked eggs and bacon dressing, molded grapefruit and carrot salad, sliced tomatoes on crisp lettuce or other greens and fruity cold slaw.

Lynn Chambers' Point-Saving Menu

Beef-Vegetable Chowder
Toasted Rye Bread
Jellied Grapefruit Salad
Custard with Chocolate Sauce
Beverage
Recipe Given

1 1/4 cups evaporated milk
3 slices bacon, cut in 1/2 inch pieces
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
Dash of paprika

Cook potatoes and onions in water until tender. Do not drain. Mash thoroughly or put through a sieve. Stir in milk slowly, add bacon pieces, and heat thoroughly. Add chopped parsley and paprika.

If you're doubling as chowder, cook and war work, then cut down soup making time by using frozen vegetables. Try this chowder:

Corn and Tomato Chowder

(Serves 6)
2 tablespoons chopped onion
1 tablespoon chopped green pepper
1/4 cup celery
2 tablespoons fat
2 cups canned or stewed tomatoes
1 box quick frozen ground sweet corn
1/4 teaspoon soda
1 1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon sugar
3 cups milk, scalded

Saute onion, green pepper and celery in fat until golden brown. Add tomatoes, frozen corn and cook 6 minutes. Then add soda, salt, pepper and sugar. Add hot milk and serve at once.

Hearty Bean Soup

(Serves 6-8)
1/2 cup dried navy beans
3 cups cold water
2 tablespoons shortening
1 clove garlic
3 tablespoons chopped onion
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
1 cup chopped celery
1/2 cup shredded cabbage
2 1/2 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1 cup canned tomatoes
1/4 cup cooked noodles

Wash and soak the beans in water overnight. In the morning, bring the beans to a boil in the same water and then simmer until tender, adding a little more hot water, if necessary. Melt shortening in a skillet and saute finely minced garlic, onion, parsley, celery and cabbage until lightly browned. Add to beans with salt, pepper and canned tomatoes. Simmer 30 minutes longer. Add cooked noodles and serve.

Dried split peas with the flavor of salt pork, ham hock or ham bone puts together one of the favorite soups of all times:

Split Pea Soup

2 cups dried split peas
3 stalks celery
3 quarts water
1/2 cup flour
4 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon sugar
2 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1/2 pound salt pork, or ham hock, or ham bone

In the evening, place peas in a pot in cold water. In the morning, bring to a boil with the same water, salt pork, ham hock and cook until tender. Remove celery and pork, and put peas through a sieve. Add seasonings to soup. Melt butter and blend in flour. Add 3 cups of strained soup, stirring constantly. When this is smooth, add rest of soup.

Mails Letters, but

Forgets $10,992 Wad

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—Late at night Patrolman W. T. Bryant picked up a bag, perched on top of a mail box. It was very heavy and felt like a bag full of money. It was an employee of a local firm, on the way to a night depository, had stopped at the mail box to mail some letters and had forgot the bag, containing $10,992.

Girl's Name Lucky For Yankee Plane

Tot's Charm Wins Hearts of American Fliers.

LONDON. — A lot of airplanes have been named for a lot of girls, but little Geraldine, a blonde, blue-eyed three-year-old, is probably the only girl who can look out of her window and see the bomber to which her name has brought good luck.

Geraldine lives in a cottage on the very edge of the air field occupied by "Nye's Annihilators," pioneer Ninth air force Marauder group in England, commanded by Col. C. Nye of Raleigh, N. C.

Her name graces the nose of one of the group's veteran twin engine medium bombers, a war horse of 84 smashing attacks against the enemy in western Europe.

Sgt. Wilbert L. Brindle of Tarentum, Pa., and Tech. Sgt. James W. Neal of Clearwater, Fla., mechanics on the bomber, declare the little girl's name has brought their plane unusual good luck.

Formerly named GI IV, the bomber was continually battered by flak during 45 missions. Both engines and bomb bay doors had been shot up so badly they had to be replaced and the wings and fuselage had been peppered repeatedly. But during 39 attacks under the name Geraldine, the plane had received only four minor flak hits.

The mechanics met Geraldine and her parents one day during a lull between the Marauder's pre-invasion attacks. Now they have a standing invitation to come over for a pot of tea and visit with Geraldine whenever they aren't busy. In appreciation of the hospitality, the boys bought their mascot a complete Easter outfit this year.

When Geraldine's baby brother was born recently he was christened Martin in honor of the Martin Marauder.

Pet Woodchuck Enjoys

Life Down on the Farm

PITTSVILLE, WIS. — Peter the Great, a pet woodchuck of the George Yetters near Pittsville, has become domesticated, and from all indications he likes living on the Yetter farm as well as any woodland home.

Mrs. Yetter found the baby woodchuck last June at Castle Rock near Sparta. He was huddled near a path, trembling with fright. She brought him to their farm, named him Peter and fed him milk with a medicine dropper until he became a seven-pound, playful little animal.

One day last September, Peter wandered into the garden, dug his first hole and hibernated for the winter. In April he left his den, and was found wandering in the garden by Joe Arnold, a road patrolman. Mrs. Yetter was summoned, and Peter seemed tickled to see her again.

Again he was fed with an eye dropper, for he had lost four pounds, but now he eats all he can get. He is very fond of lettuce, and has developed a taste for sweets, especially ice cream and cookies.

Peter makes himself at home in the Yetter house. When the Yetters are too busy to play with him, he amuses himself with an old rubber ball, and when he is tired he climbs up on the davenport for a nap. The farm cats are afraid of the woodchuck, but Peter has no friends with the family's big yellow-haired dog.

Loyalty Sneer Leads to Death, Murder Charge

MONACA, PA.—One man called another a slacker. They fought with bare fists. One is dead, the other held on a charge of murder.

Frank Lyons, 37, died of a broken jaw and fractured skull. His alleged assailant, Joseph Thomas, 26, Monaca war worker, is held to answer to a charge of murder.

The two men quarreled on the street. Police learned Lyons called Thomas a "slacker." Lyons was knocked down with a blow to the jaw and fell, striking his head against the curb.

Colonel's Bonnet Is Too,

Too Divine; He Blushes

WITH U. S. ARMY IN NORMANDY. — A colonel looked very dashing as his jeep slid to a halt on the gravel road. Strips of green and brown camouflage cloth fluttered from the netting of his helmet like the plumes a knight might have worn.

He blushed when questioned about his headgear. It seems he had given his helmet to a soldier to have camouflage attached. Not until later did he discover that the soldier in private life had been a woman's hat designer.

Monkey Business

By HELEN THOMPSON

McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

WHAT if you suppose those guys are up to now?" groaned Bill Simpson, Williams' Wonder Circus' advance agent, as he watched the gang from Dr. Lyle's Miraculous Medicine Show pulling up to our lot.

The first man off Lyle's lead wagon was none other than Dr. Lyle himself. "Well, well, well," he yelled, striding across the lot fanning himself with his broadbrimmed Stetson. "If it isn't Williams' Wonder Circus, famous in show history as the outfit that manages to get along season after season without any customers!"

"Sorry I'll have to run out on you, Doc," growled the boss, "but we're just getting ready to start our afternoon parade."

"I know," Doc announced. "And I'm going to follow with my new band. They've got a lot in common with your fellows so I want them to see your people work." Then he looked over at his wagons. "Send the new squad out here!" he bawled.

Eight little monkeys in red suits with gold braid, almost exactly like the uniforms of our band, came scampering across the lot. Each one was carrying a miniature cornet or trombone. And when they started to play, the racket was ear-splitting.

Well, we never had a worse parade in all our history. Doc and his monkeys tore ahead and waited for us on every corner. They sure wrecked our music. And, worst of all, the crowd didn't look twice at our procession. They were only interested in Doc and the monkeys.

"How did Doc ever train those apes, Jim?" Bill was watching Doc's band go through its paces.

"It's easy," said Jim. "Each one of those mouthpieces is pushed out a little. Inside the mouth, a short reed that'll sound on the slightest suction."

"How did Doc ever train those apes,"

And right behind that there's a place where you put a piece of food candy. So, when the monkey sucks the candy he sucks the reed too, and you get this racket."

Just then Doc came alongside the apes. "Nice of you guys to work for my show, especially when you're not getting paid for it," he gibed.

"Do you think we'd work for an outfit that stooped to put on fake acts like that monkey band?" Bill drawled. "They don't make any noise with those horns. They've got whistles in their mouths or something."

"I'll stake my reputation as a showman on the fact that those brasses are genuine miniature instruments!" Doc raged.

"Can I come over to your lot and examine them?" Bill asked.

"Absolutely!" Doc bellowed.

"What's the matter with you?" Jim said after Doc had gone.

"Didn't you hear me tell you those horns are the real thing?"

Bill looked at his watch and straightened his tie. "I got an idea," he said with a wink. "Meet me at Doc's show tonight."

At eight o'clock Doc started his spiel about his Rare Simian Stunted Apes.

Then the curtains parted with a flourish and there stood the eight monkeys, each with his instrument up to his mouth and his tail curled around his feet. The audience applauded wildly. At a signal from Doc, the animals let go. But instead of the usual gasp there was a series of little squeaks.

The monkeys were amazed. First they shook their instruments and tried to take them apart. Then they looked at one another. Finally, they all threw the horns on the floor and sat down with their heads in their hands. And no amount of cajoling by Doc could make them try again.

In a minute those cries which are a showman's nightmare began coming from the bleachers. "Fake!" "Gimme my money back!" "What'd you do?" Jim demanded as soon as they were out of the tent.

Bill offered Jim the contents of a small paper bag.

"No, this is it," Jim said. "And stop holding out on me. Give me the low-down."

"So you don't like these things either," Bill said. "Well, I do, because from now on I can get the inside of a monkey out of Doc by replacing eight little pieces of striped peppermint candy with eight little slices of very sour pickle."

It is not safe to buy land or to lend money and accept land as security without first investigating the Title of the land. Often there are unpaid mortgages and judgments or other liens, affecting the Title, which an Abstract would set out. Therefore, when the buying land or lending money thereon, it is important that an Abstract of Title be furnished. A few dollars spent for an Abstract is cheaper than going ahead and having a law suit a little later on.

Your Place In Peace

By Rufus T. Strohman

Dean, International Correspondence Schools

THE more trained men there are, the more jobs there will be in the period immediately after the war.

That statement sounds contradictory, yet it holds one of the important keys to post-war prosperity. Whether or not American industry can make a quick swing about from producing for war to producing for peace, more abundant life will depend in great measure on whether there are enough trained leaders capable themselves of training and supervising millions of workers who will have to learn new jobs.

To produce 120 billion dollars' worth of manufactured goods for peacetime use, our country must have an adequate supply of highly skilled workers capable of industrial pioneering in such new fields as synthetic rubber, plastics, electronics. The laboratories and pilot plants have opened these and other fields for development. Much of the industrial equipment already in existence can be converted to such development. But it will take many thousands of technically trained men to do the job—to turn all the great possibilities into realities.

Fortunately one out of every three men in the armed service and over half of the workers in war industry are more familiar with the elements of science than ever before. Men in service with experience in aviation, radio, photography, mapping, bridge and road building, and especially in managing men, can broaden this basic experience by further training for peacetime jobs with little or no lost motion.

By meeting the challenge of producing in three years what the Axis has taken from fifteen to thirty years to accomplish, American workers have learned lessons not only of mass production but of producing better and faster than any nation on earth. This discipline and confidence lays the groundwork for further training for peace.

By spare-time study, to fit yourself for more important work and greater responsibility, you will not only be advancing yourself on the road to personal success. You will also be doing your part to increase employment for others and to build the prosperity of your country.

Official solicitor will call for contribution most any time now, save time, and to make it easier the whole War Chest Organizing, please have your contribution to the War Chest workers as early as their time and effort to the drive and they receive no compensation, except perhaps the cheering some homesick soldier seeing the suffering of some of our fighting men in a German or Japanese camp.

More than half the total fund will be the three agencies that aid our fighting men, the USO, United Service, and War Prisoner's Aid. The remainder will be distributed to the nineteen allied relief agencies for shelter, clothing, medical and care for them in desperate need. The fighting lines of our allies, who are in so far as safe as the Mt. Creek quarry will be over by Oct. 15th, and that Mrs. Adams, Mrs. James Kyezer, Miss Long, Mr. Tom P. Duffey, agreed to help with the drive. J. L. Hollis of Mitchell Dam with the help of Mrs. J. Ross, Mrs. A. B. Stanley, with her co-chairman, Mrs. J. G. will have their drive complete Oct. 21.

Archie J. Taylor chairman at reports that she and her co-workers, Mrs. O. Z. Kelley, Mrs. Orville, Mrs. Joe Morgan, already have their money ready and will expect to have their quota Oct. 21.

C. Caldwell and his co-workers Ernest Wilson of Pletcher, collected $320.00 of their quota and ended that on Friday 13, they were the top.

Rocky Mount chairman Mr. E. Long, has reported that the drive will be over in Rocky Mount by Oct. 21 and that T. J. Glass, Lera will have agreed to help in the drive.

J. Bates chairman for the Mill Village, along with R. M. and Lon Baker, will have their quota raised by Oct. 21.

With the desire of the War Committee to have the Drive completed by Oct. 21. We believe that cooperation of everyone that counts on going to CARE TO SHARE ENOUGH.

MR. R. L. OUSLEY CAPABLE ROAD MAN

According to a communication from Dr. T. M. Martin, of Plantersville, Ala., our present County Commissioner, Mr. R. L. Ousley, is a capable and efficient road man. Dr. Martin also says, "He is a real friend to the people of the District he serves." That seems to be the opinion of the larger percentage of the citizens of Chilton County and Mr. Ousley should be returned to his office for another term this November 7th.

CLANTON'S PICA-BOO MAN ON THE PROWL AGAIN

Reports of all kinds are going the rounds about a Peeping-Tom at work, (or play) here again. We have reports of every description from the fact that he wears ladies panties, he wears overalls, he wears dresses, he wears shorts, he's a Republican, he's a Democrat, he's black, he's white, just about anything you want to hear, but no FACTS about the case at all. However, keep your shades down and report to the proper authorities any prowler that you see around at night.

Thomas, 901 2nd Ave. Clanton, Ala., has been graduated from Denning Army Air Field, "The AAF's Border Bombardier School", it was announced recently by Col. Milton M. Murphy, Commanding Officer. He was commissioned a 2nd Lt. and awarded silver bombardier wings after successfully undergoing the rigid 18-week course in high-altitude precision bombing as well as important phases of navigation.

Before entering the Army Air Forces, Lt. Thomas was graduated from Chilton County High School and was employed in Clanton.

Robert E. McElroy, formerly of Lawley, Ala., has recently been promoted to the grade of Cpl. He is now stationed at the Army Air Base, Alamogordo, New Mexico.

James H. Blair, 18, 720 7th Street, Clanton, is receiving initial Naval indoctrination at the U. S. Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill. His recruit training consists of instruction in seamanship, military drill, and general Naval procedure. During this period a series of aptitude tests will be taken by the recruit to determine whether he will be assigned to a Naval Service School or to immediate duty at sea.

When his recruit training is completed the seaman will receive a period of leave.

McArthur Jones, 22, husband of Louise H. Jones, Rt. 5, and Arthur H. Poole, 22, husband of Frances I. Poole, 10th St. are now receiving their initial Naval indoctrination at the U. S. Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill.

When their recruit training is finished they will receive a period of leave.

MT. PLEASANT P-T. A.

The Mt Pleasant Parent-Teachers Association will meet Friday, Oct. the thirteenth at 2 o'clock p. m. All parents are urged to attend, as this is the 1st meeting of the school year.

WHERE THEY ARE AND HOW THEY ARE

Clifford Manning who is with the Merchant Marine has just returned from overseas and is spending some time here with his family and friends.

Cadet T. J. Raspberry from Maxwell Field, Montgomery, spent the weekend here with his parents.

Lt. Guy Higgins of the U. S. Army was here for the week-end with his mother and friends.

JOHN VAN DERVEER IN FRANCE

We just received an interesting letter from Cpl. John VanDerveer, Jr., who is now somewhere in France. Not having seen much of the country yet, he can't tell much about it, except the part he has seen it beautiful.

He says there are no large fields, they are all small and hedgerows are everywhere, taking the place of fences around every little field or pasture. The houses are old, some dating back centuries, all are made of stone with high pointed roof.

The people are rather reserved. In general they are faring pretty well, though they will trade anything they have for a pair of shoes. Cognac can be had if one knows where to make contact but money won't buy it. Only a pair of shoes or clothing will do any good.

S-Sgt Dan (Bottle) Alred, who has been overseas for some time, is now enroute home, according to a telegram received by his mother, Mrs. Hattie Alred, Monday. At the time of the telegram, Bottle was in New York and was expected home sometime this week.

Sgt. Alred was recently wounded in action against the enemy and has received the Purple Heart along with several other medals.

Capt. Melvin Weil, who has been overseas for a long time, was liberated from an Axis Prison Camp in Romania when the Allies swept into that country, and is now home with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Melvin S. Weil Sr. of Birmingham.

Capt. Weil addressed the Birmingham Prisoner of War Club at 8 p. m. Saturday at the Tutwiler Hotel. He is the grandson of Mrs. Calster Williams of Clanton.

John D. Herrd, (ed) son of J. H. Herrd of Maplesville, Ala., is based in the U. S. Army.

Set. Edwin T. Clapp, of Maplesville Alabama, is at present attached to a Troop Carrier Group somewhere in the European Theatre of Operations, that was recently cited for outstanding performance of duty in action against the enemy.

Sgt. Clapp is the husband of Margaret N. Clapp. Before entering the service in 1942, he was engaged in the retail hardware business in Maplesville, Ala.

VANDALS AT WORK AT POST OFFICE

R. W. Lowe, postmaster offered this week, a liberal reward to anyone furnishing information, leading to the arrest and conviction, of the culprits who are cutting the writing desks at the post office with their pocket knives. Someone has inscribed deeply thereon, "Chas." and the initials, "T" and "N". This is a federal offense and Mr. Lowe promises that anyone caught responsible for these acts will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

BELL HARDWARE STORE REMODELED

Jimmie Bell has done a mighty good job of remodeling his Hardware Store into one of the most attractive places in town. Much easier to shop in than before with a nicer display of merchandise, the new arrangement should be appreciated by all who enter to trade.

Jimmie says that he has 80 trouble now getting rid of his shotgun shells or 22 rifle cartridges at all.

PLETCHER MAKES FIRST REPORT TO WAR CHEST

E. G. Caldwell, chairman of Pletcher community, in the County War Chest Drive, was first to send in his report with his quota practically completed. Mr. Caldwell stated that he needed only $19.00 to go over the top and he promised that this would be raised before Friday October 13th.

Africa, and was recently promoted to Cpl. Prior to entering the service he was engaged in farming.

Capt. Thomas R. Bazzel left the 1st of Sept. for the Southwest Pacific where he will serve with the U. S. Air Forces. His mother, Mrs. A. A. Bazzel recently received a letter from him stating that he had landed safely.

Water Tender 2-C Earnest Smith has been serving overseas for the past three and one-half years and is now spending a few days leave here with his brother Joe Smith and other relatives.

Clifford Manning who is with the Merchant Marine has just returned from overseas and is spending some time here with his family and friends.

Cadet T. J. Raspberry from Maxwell Field, Montgomery, spent the weekend here with his parents.

Lt. Guy Higgins of the U. S. Army was here for the week-end with his mother and friends.

Chilton County High Defeats Isabella 54-0

(By R. E. Martin)

The Chilton Tigers romped to an easy victory over Isabella High Friday night by a score of 54 to 0.

Clanton's second string started except K. Smith and Wade. Clanton received the kick and scored in the first three minutes on a pass from Smith to Wade. The extra point was good putting Clanton out in front by a score of 7 to 0. The quarter ended this way.

Coach Tiffin started his first team the second quarter. With the help of the fine play by the line the Tigers scored twice in the second period.

C. Cox scored the second touchdown of the game on a bulk through center from the ten yard line. Clanton failed to make the extra point.

The third score came on an off tackle play by K. Smith. The extra point was good. The Tigers scored once more before the half on a pass from K. Smith to R. Cox for 30 yards. The half ended with the score at 26 to 0.

Clanton's first team started the third quarter. Clanton kicked to Isabella, Cummings of Isabella bringing it back to his own 35 yard line. After a series of passes Clanton took over again. After a number of first downs down the field on a drive of about 40 yards, Payton bucked it over from the ten yard line to score. The point after touchdown was good.

Isabella received again but as usual could not click on their offensive tactics mostly which consisted of passes. Clanton took over again and drove for another score. Payton making the touchdown.

Chilton scored again in the third quarter after holding the Isabella Mustangs for downs. Cox making the score.

Beginning of the final quarter brought in a new team. This one point was noticed all night, which shows a great improvement over the Tigers that were turned back at Selma. Both first and second teams showed a lot of improvement and Coach Tiffin substituted liberally all during the game. Coaches Tiffin and Adair deserve a great deal of praise for their work in this improvement.

The only scoring in the quarter came when Seales swept left end for 30 yards and another six points. The try for point was successful, Robinson catching a pass in the end-zone for the point.

The remainder of the game was uneventful, with both teams running the ball and failing to click for a score.

The line played a fine defensive game in holding the Isabella backs to a minus on their running plays.

INFANT DAUGHTER DIES

Infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hulery J. Bolton of Jemison died in a Montgomery hospital Thursday afternoon. Services were held Friday afternoon at three o'clock at Oak Hill.

Surviving are the parents, Pvt. Hilery Bolton of U. S. Army in Texas, Mrs. Emily Pate Bolton of Jemison, Grandparents Mr and Mrs. Bud Bolton and Mr and Mrs. S. E. Pate. Also several uncles and aunts.

JESUS' UNDERSTANDING OF MAN

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 12:3-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—And needed not that any should testify of man for he knew what was in man—John 1:15.

What is a man worth? That depends on your point of view. In a museum stands a collection of small jars containing minerals, water, etc., which make up the body of a man, and which are valued at less than a dollar. But there is more to man than his body.

And that "more"—intellectual and spiritual—is what determines his real value. Jesus understood (yes, and now He understands) man, and places a high valuation on him. That is worth knowing in a world where the price of humanity is often figured on the basis of his usefulness in warfare or the factory.

Jesus really understands man. He knows his

I. Need (v. 9).
The first thing Jesus saw in the synagogue was not the leaders, or the beautifully appareled rich, or the learned scribes. He saw a man with a withered hand, one who needed His help. The enemies of Christ complimented Him by expecting Him to see the crippled one—and they "watched him" (Mark 3:2), for it was the Sabbath.

Do we see the real need of humanity? Does it speak to us and prompt us to helpful action? If not, are we like our Lord and Master?

II. Value (v. 10-12).
They who would not hesitate to save a sheep in distress on the Sabbath did not want the man to receive help. Thus they put property above the person of man, and showed their low valuation of man. The dignity of man's personality, the fact that he is made in the likeness and image of God, the great potentialities which exist in every man—all these should urge upon the Christian church the need of a new and higher estimate of the worth of a man—or a boy or a girl. Let us look at them with God's eyes, and seek to win them for Him.

III. Faith (v. 13).
No doubt this man had tried countless times to straighten out that withered arm. It was the very thing he most wanted to do, but it was quite impossible. Is Jesus quite charging him with the impossible, asking him to do what cannot be done?

No, for He saw in this man the desire to be whole and faith in God's ability to make him whole. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan puts it well: "We turn from a contemplation of a withered hand and look at the face of Jesus. The moment we do this, we know that the command is possible because He commands it, however impossible it may appear. To look into that face meant inevitably have meant to be certain that He was not there to reveal His ability, save as He was also there to put an end to it."

IV. Enmity (v. 14, 15a).
Jesus saw the good in man. He also saw the evil. He was not unaware of the hatred and the dark devices of His enemies. Until the day when He was to permit them to take Him captive in the garden, He withdrew from them, leaving them to their evil designs and their wicked unbelief.

Sometimes when we see how the wicked seem to flourish in our day, how they appear to go on without let or hindrance, we are prone to forget that there is one who "sits in the shadows," and who knows and notes not only their ungodly deeds, but also their sinful thoughts.

He knows, and that is enough for us. Let us not be seeking vengeance, nor fretting ourselves because of evil doers. God knows, and He will care for it all.

V. Weakness (v. 15b-21).
Men hesitate to admit their weakness to one another, always try to keep up the appearance of strength and success. Well, there is no need of that kind of subterfuge with God. "He knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust" (Ps. 103:14).

Jesus sympathized with those who were physically ill and He healed them (v. 15). What comfort there is in knowing that He is present at the sick bed of every one who calls on Him. He is able to heal as it may be His will and purpose. Only He can do it.

But there is something even more precious here. Man is weak not only physically but spiritually. His spiritual light may at times be nearly out, just a smoldering wick instead of a brightly shining lamp. He might be tempted to say that it is so weak, so disagreeable, so smoky—let's put it entirely out. But not Jesus. He will, if permitted, fan it into flame again.

Then, too, man is like a broken reed. The picture is that of a stick used for support as one walks. And then it breaks—what shall we do? Break it into smaller pieces and throw it away? Yes, that is what we will do if we have not the spirit of Jesus.

ON THE telephone, from Beverly Hills to New York, the voices of Amos 'n' Andy had all the warmth and friendliness that have made their program a top-notch for 25 years. They packed a lot of information into that five-minute interview. Their once-a-week show is five times as much work as the old daily one, said they—they work on it at their office, keeping hours like any other business men. Guest stars must be used in believable situations—when Phil Baker appears with them next month, there'll really be a show within a show. Incidentally you'll be able to see as well as hear them when television comes; they have their show practically perfected.

The greatest number of prints ever prepared on a subject of its kind has been ordered by Warner Bros. for distribution of "The Battle of the Marianas," official U. S. Marine Corps film edited by Warners for the OWI. It portrays the conquest of Saipan and Tinian Islands and the recapture of Guam, and is being exhibited under the auspices of War Activities Committee-Motion Picture Industry.

Wounded American prisoners captured on D-Day and recaptured in a German hospital during the Brittany drive were among 9,500 soldiers who attended the first world premiere of a movie in liberated France—the film was "Casanova Brown."

For George N. Niese the tough break came first; a radio actor, he went into the army air force, suffered spinal injuries in a plane crash and was hospitalized for months. Then came the break that made up for it—RKO signed him, he made his debut in "Experiment Perilous," which co-stars Hedy Lamarr, Paul Lukas and George Brent—and in his first scene, he had to take holdy in his arms and kiss her!

Danny Kaye's next picture for Samuel Goldwyn will be "Fancy Free," a comedy built around a military policeman who gets into romantic trouble after the liberation of Paris.

New York city policemen in the midtown sector have been officially advised that Ralph Edwards' "Truth Consequences" is back on the air. Since some of the program's wackiest stunts are performed outdoors, Edwards found he saved a lot of time and trouble if he took the precaution of apprising the cops first.

Ocell B. DeMille's radio theater celebrates its tenth anniversary on October 16—during those ten years it's been responsible for a lot of things, one being the parade of big radio stars to the West coast. By 1936 most of its talent was coming from Hollywood, so the show moved to the movie capital. It has outlived all other shows of its type, years more than 1,100 actors every year.

There's never been a western picture that didn't make money, yet the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences refused to include western movie-makers in a special division. So the Western Motion Picture Awards association was formed and the first week in November will make its own awards, not at a stuffy evening session, but in Gilmore stadium, with guns firing and horses galloping.

ODDS AND ENDS—Geraldine Fitzgerald has checked in at "Warner's" for her costarring role opposite John Garfield in "Night of the Living Dead." "Ratcliff," the double talking spook who recently made his debut on the Hildegard program, has been retained on a permanent basis. "Frankie and John's" orchestra has been signed by RKO for one picture. . . . SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

John L. Collier, president of The B. F. Goodrich Co., believes that it will be at least two years after the first recognition of For East rubber-producing territories before normal operations can be restored. Meanwhile, synthetic and the constantly decreasing amount of natural rubber in the U.S. will have to take care of our requirements.

Every fighter plane in an escort of 1,000 fighter planes goes into action on the battle front or on a bombing raid, some 50 tons of rubber are being carried into the air. The U. S. War Department figures show that the average fighter plane has 105 pounds of rubber somewhere in its construction.

Cake Bazaars, Cookie Sales Boost Funds

Spice cake is hard to resist when it has a fluffy seven minute or marshmallow icing and is sprinkled lightly with coconut.

Church groups and women's clubs know that one of the best ways of raising funds for their activities and philanthropic purposes is by having cake bazaars or bakery sales.

Few can resist the appeal of home-made cakes and cookies at such sales, and it is truly an ideal way of meeting the year's budget. It is here where the good ladies bring their best wares, and finance committees really have their day.

For displaying the goodies, a well set table is necessary. It's a good idea to have a good looking table cloth, and flowers. The cakes and cookies will do the rest.

You will find today's recipes just as delicious as they sound, and not too expensive to make. I'm giving different types of recipes in case you want to clip the sheet and pass the recipes among the members of your particular group.

Lady Baltimore Cake
 1 cup shortening
 1 1/2 cup boiling water
 2 cups cake flour, sifted
 2 1/2 teaspoons baking powder
 1/2 teaspoon salt
 1 teaspoon almond extract
 1/2 cup milk
 8 egg whites

Cream shortening and sugar until light. Add sifted dry ingredients and milk alternately. Last fold in stiffly beaten egg whites and flavoring. Bake in three eight-inch layers in a moderate (375-degree) oven for 25 minutes.

Frosting
 1 1/2 cups sugar
 1 cup boiling water
 1/2 cup hot marshmallow cherry juice
 1/2 teaspoon light corn syrup
 1 tablespoon lemon juice
 2 egg whites beaten stiff
 1/2 cup chopped blanched almonds, toasted
 1/2 teaspoon grated orange rind
 15-20 maraschino cherries, cut in eighths

Combine sugar, water, fruit juices and syrup and bring to a boil quickly, stirring only until sugar is dissolved. Boil rapidly without stirring until syrup spins a thread when dropped from spoon and forms soft ball in cold water (230 degrees). Pour syrup into a stream over egg whites, beating constantly. Continue beating until a consistency to spread. Fold in remaining ingredients and spread in between and top of layers of Lady Baltimore Cake.

Red Devil's Food
 2 cups pastry flour
 1/2 cup cocoa
 1/2 cup shortening
 1 1/2 cups sugar

What Makes It So? If cake batter runs out of the pan when baking, it may be due to too much sugar or shortening, or too much leavening.

If the cake has a moist sticky crust, it is due to too much sugar in the recipe. If the crust is thick and heavy, the recipe may have too much flour, too long baking, too hot an oven, or not enough sugar or shortening.

If a cake humps or cracks on top it may be because it has too much flour or was baked in too hot an oven.

2 eggs
 1 teaspoon soda
 1 cup butter
 1 teaspoon vanilla
 1/2 cup boiling water

Sift flour once, measure and re-sift twice with cocoa. Cream shortening and sugar thoroughly. Add well beaten eggs and beat until light and fluffy. Add soda to buttermilk. Add dry ingredients alternately with buttermilk to creamed mixture, beating hard after each addition. Add vanilla, pour in boiling water and beat until smooth. Bake in two eight-inch greased tins in a moderate (350-degree) oven for 30-35 minutes. Spread between layers and top with Seven Minute Icing.

Graham Cracker Cake
 1/2 cup butter or shortening
 1 cup sugar
 3 eggs
 1/2 cup milk
 1/2 cup coconut or chopped nuts
 2 1/2 cups graham crackers, rolled fine
 2 teaspoons baking powder

Cream butter and sugar until light and fluffy. Add egg yolks which have been beaten until light and lemon colored. Add milk and rolled, sifted crackers alternately, then fold in stiffly beaten egg whites and baking powder. Bake in two "greased" eight-inch pans in a moderate (350-degree) oven for 30 minutes.

Orange icing can be made in a flash for it's uncooked. Cream two tablespoons of butter with 1/4 cups powdered sugar. Add the grated rind of one orange and enough orange juice to make a spreading consistency. Place between the layers and ice top and sides.

Platters of assorted cookies are the thing for your cake and cookie bazaar. You can expect lots of requests for recipes at such events.

For that melt-in-your-mouth quality, there's a spice cake that will fill the bill and then some. But this is not an ordinary spice cake, by any means. In addition to fine spices, it has the subtle flavor of bananas:

Spice Cake
 1/2 cup butter or substitute
 2 cups brown sugar
 4 eggs
 3 bananas, mashed fine
 1 cup milk
 2 teaspoons cinnamon
 1 teaspoon each, cloves, nutmeg and allspice

2 1/2 cups flour
 3 teaspoons baking powder

Cream together sugar and butter, add beaten egg yolks and mashed bananas. Add alternately the sifted dry ingredients and milk. Fold in the egg whites. Bake in a large square pan which has been well greased, in a moderate (350-degree) oven 35 minutes. Ice with marshmallow icing.

Pop corn nuggets are an interesting addition to your money-raising bazaar. They will go over with the ladies who don't like to be caught munching a big mouthful of popcorn.

Pop Corn Nuggets
 2 cups sugar
 1/2 cup water
 1/2 teaspoon cream of tartar
 2 tablespoons molasses
 1 tablespoon butter
 Few grains of salt

Place sugar, water and cream of tartar in a saucepan and bring to the boiling point and boil without stirring to 280 degrees or until syrup will crack when tried in cold water. Add the butter and salt, and boil, stirring constantly until candy becomes brittle, being careful not to let it burn. Have ready a pan of freshly popped corn; pour candy over it, mixing thoroughly. Spread lightly on a buttered slab or platter and when firm, cut into pieces or break up into little bunches of three to six kernels.

STATE OF ALABAMA A PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR

WHEREAS, the Legislature of Alabama, at the Regular Session 1943, ordered an election to be held by the qualified electors of the State of Alabama upon a certain proposed amendment to the Constitution of Alabama, which said amendment is herein set out, and ordered that said election be held at the next General Election after the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1943 Legislature; and

WHEREAS, notice of such election, together with the proposed amendment is required by law, and by the provisions of the Act submitting the amendment, to be given by a proclamation of the Governor to be published in each county in the State of Alabama once a week for four successive weeks next preceding the said 7th day of November;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Chauncey Sparks, as Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby give notice, direct and proclaim that on Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1944, an election will be held at the several polling places within the State of Alabama, in the manner and form provided by law, upon the following proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901:

"The Legislature of Alabama may hereafter, from time to time, by general or local laws, fix, regulate and alter the fees, commissions, allowances and salaries, including the method or basis of their compensation, to be charged or received by the Tax Assessors, Tax Collectors, Probate Judges, Circuit Clerks, Sheriffs, and Registers of the Chancery Courts and including the right to place any one or all of said officers on a salary and provide for the fees charged and collected by said officers to be paid into the treasury from which their salaries are paid, and provide the method and basis of their compensation, or consolidate any of said offices in the following named county: Houston. All Acts of the regular session of the Legislature 1943 heretofore passed and applicable or purporting to fix the compensation of said named county officers, on a salary basis, are hereby validated and confirmed."

I further direct and proclaim that notice of this election upon Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1944, upon the above set forth amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901, be given by publishing the same once a week for four successive weeks next preceding Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1944, in each county in the State of Alabama in a newspaper published in said county.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed by the Secretary of State at the City of Montgomery, on this 1st day of August, 1944.

STATE OF ALABAMA A PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR

WHEREAS, the Legislature of Alabama, at the Regular Session 1943, ordered an election to be held by the qualified electors of the State of Alabama upon a certain proposed amendment to the Constitution of Alabama of 1901, which said amendment is herein set out, and ordered that said election be held at the General Election in November, 1944; and

WHEREAS, the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1944, which is the 7th day of November, is the time for holding the General Election;

WHEREAS, notice of such election, together with the proposed amendment is required by law, and by the provisions of the Act submitting the amendment, to be given by a proclamation of the Governor to be published in each county in the State of Alabama once a week for four successive weeks next preceding the said 7th day of November;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Chauncey Sparks, as Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby give notice, direct and proclaim that on Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1944, an election will be held at the several polling places within the State of Alabama, in the manner and form provided by law, upon the following proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901:

"Section 194. No person who honorably served in the military service of the United States between January 1, 1917 and November 11, 1918, or between September 16, 1940 and December 8, 1941, or future, when the United States was, is or shall be at war with any foreign state, shall be required after the beginning of such service to pay the poll tax specified in the Constitution of Alabama as a prerequisite to the privilege of voting in Alabama; but, on the contrary, every such person shall be exempt from the payment of all poll taxes which have theretofore accrued and have not been paid or which may thereafter accrue: Provided, however, that if any such person is discharged dishonorably from said service the exemption herein provided is forfeited, and such dishonorably discharged person, as a prerequisite to the privilege of voting in Alabama thereafter, must pay the poll tax specified in the Constitution of Alabama as if such person had never been in such service. The term "military service" as used in this section includes service in the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, the Women's Appointed Volunteer Emergency Service, and the Women's Reserve of the United States Navy. The United States shall not be deemed at war with a foreign state within the meaning of this section at a time when an armistice exists between the United States and the foreign state. The Judge of Probate shall issue a certificate of exemption to a person exempt from the payment of poll tax by reason of this section under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Governor. This section shall be self-executing and retroactive; but the Legislature is authorized to enact laws designed to carry out the purposes of this section."

I further direct and proclaim that notice of this election upon Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1944, upon the above set forth amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901, be given by publishing the same once a week for four successive weeks next preceding Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1944, in each county in the State of Alabama in a newspaper published in said county.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed by the Secretary of State at the City of Montgomery, on this 1st day of August, 1944.

The Lord has been gracious to us this week. He has blessed us with good health and our souls have been fed on spiritual food from the Word. During the week we have had two Bible School lessons and two sermons by Rev. A. T. Hickman. His subject Sunday morning was "The Christian and His Bible". His text was Hebrew 4:12. Read it in your Bible. He is continuing his discourse in Revelations each Sunday night.

Next Sunday night he will preach on the church at Pergamos. Come and listen to him. You will certainly learn something that will do you good if you will put it into practice.

We think we have the best Sunday School in Chilton County and also the largest rural Sunday School in the county. We had only 96 present last Sunday but we hope to reach 150 before Christmas.

Mid-week services this week will be on Thursday night instead of Wednesday night. Sunday School at 10 a. m. Preaching at 11 a. m. and at 8 p. m. each Sunday. Visitors always welcome.

(Too late for last week)

Our Wednesday night services are of a new type. There is not anything like them in the state of Alabama that we have heard of. If you want to know more about them, come any Wednesday night.

Sunday school attendance was off a little last Sunday. We had a little less than 100. It was the first Sunday in the church year. It was therefore promotion day. Many were promoted to higher classes and given nice promotion certificates. The new teachers also had charge of their classes for the first time.

Rev. A. T. Hickman pastor, preached at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. He is one of the best informed preachers in the State. He puts in much time and study in preparation of his sermons. He makes his discourse simple and easily understood. If you are not sick or do not have a very important engagement you can not afford to miss his sermons. His message last Sunday night was on the Church at Ephesus. Next Sunday night he will speak on the Church at Smyrna. You are welcome at all times.

Don't Do This.

Recently war production was halted in an important Alabama industrial center, and electric service was interrupted at a military training camp, because a tree was cut down in such a way as to cause it to fall across power lines. Besides the interruption to war production and the military training program, the soldiers at this camp had to go without a meal and many homes served from this line were inconvenienced.

If you have trees on your property which are to be cut down and you have doubt as to whether there will be simple clearance between them and the power lines when they fall, please get in touch with our nearest office. Our engineers will be glad to make suggestions as to how the tree may be taken down safely and without interrupting service.

COST - SMITH

Mr. and Mrs. John P. Cost, of Clanton, Alabama wish to announce the marriage of their daughter, Jessie Vera Cost to Sgt. Robert Elliott Smith, U. S. Army, of Portland, Maine. The ceremony took place September 16, at 6 p. m. at the home of Lonnie G. Alverson of Calera, Ala.

The bride wore a brown crepe dress with a tight bodice and full skirt. The accessories were brown and tan.

The only attendants were Mrs. Lonnie Alverson, Miss Fay Grey and Mr. Lester Cornell of Clanton.

The bride and groom took a short wedding trip to Birmingham, after which the bride returned to her home in Clanton where she will reside with her parents.

Sgt. Smith returned to his duties at Maxwell Field, Ala.

HERE'S WHY IT PAYS TO BUY IHC PARTS

THEY'RE GENUINE. That means they are exactly like the parts that were in your machine when it was new. You bought a Farmall, or any other McCormick-Deering product, because you figured it was the best. It wasn't delivered to you with any substitute, "just-as-good," make-shift parts in it. And it's poor business to put that kind of parts in your equipment now or any other time.

Insist on genuine IHC parts. You'll get your money's worth and keep your equipment in first-class shape—just like new.

With a war on and more food to raise, you need all the mechanical help you can get. Our shop, our mechanics and our big parts department are ready to do everything we can. McCormick-Deering is our line and Service our middle name.

MORAL ECHOES

Rev. D. W. Haakew, D.D.

I was shown a beautiful leaf in the summer time, but soon its beauty was gone. One sent me a beautiful flower and I nourished it with care, but it faded and the petals fell to the floor.

Many years ago I looked upon a face that was flushed with beautiful fire, but now that face is wrinkled and the beauty is there no more. The eye loses its youthful luster and the forehead has lines cut across it. When we are not thinking old Father-time comes along and sprinkles our heads with a handful of snow. The beauty of this world fades away, but not so with spiritual beauty. That beauty increases in splendor as the years are passing by, and in Eternity it will shine like the stars forever. Be beautiful within.

When the great musician Beethoven was young he had a great horror of deafness, but one day he discovered that his hearing was fading. In sadness of soul he went to doctors and quacks in search of his hearing, but all in vain. He made many ear trumpets to assist him in hearing, but he lost all sense of sound. The time came when his only means of knowing the outside world was by writing. Yet it was after he was dead to all sense of sound that Beethoven wrote his grandest music. In spite of his deafness he continued his efforts, and out of his calamity came the sweet music that charmed many a heart. Suppose that we do have a misfortune, that is no reason why we should give up and quit. You can make your life worth while in spite of a calamity that might befall you.

MILLIONS OF MEN WILL BLESS YOU

GRATITUDE will flow from millions of hearts for your gift this year. Servicemen at home and overseas who find a "home away from home" in U.S.O. clubs, merchant seamen, war prisoners, millions of war stricken victims of our allied nations will bless your generosity. You give this once for all of them. Here's what happens to your dollars:

"Oh boy, me a father and everything's okay. Molly writes that everybody was well. Our home town family service helped her while the baby was coming, arranged medical and hospital care. Boy, am I happy!" (Thanks to your dollars.)

"Last night a U.S.O. Camp Show with Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy cracked the gloom wide open in this dump. The G.I.'s are still laughing. Those comedians meant a lot back in the states, but you got to get 4,000 miles from home to really appreciate them." (Your dollars did this.)

U. S. S. Seamen's Service and War Prisoners' Aid—all aiding our own fighting men—receive more than half the funds you give to the Alabama War Chest. The rest will be shared in the form of food, medicines, clothing by peoples of our allied nations who have suffered so much more than we.

"There's thousands like me in prison camps. We'd go crazy if we didn't have the sports and music study and entertainment material the War Prisoners' Aid gets through to us." (Your gift penetrates barbed wire.)

"Ever hear of 'convoy jitters'—the thing we merchant seamen have to fight ferrying the invasion past the subs to Europe. We sure thank the United Seamen's Service for helping us fight them—with clubhouses and good beds ashore, and help for our families." (Your gift does it.)

and presented them to his mother. They were large and fine, and the mother asked Sammie where he got the berries. The lad held the basket over his feet as he answered, "Mother I picked them from the vines in the middle of the patch." He was silent about the briar thorns in his feet, and said nothing about the scratches in his flesh. The act of Sammie should teach us a great lesson. We should present our berries and say nothing about the thorns and briars of life.

NEWS FROM—ENTERPRISE—SCHOOL

(To late for last week)

The attendance of Enterprise School has been much better since the crops have been nearly gathered.

Enterprise School lunch room is doing splendid work this year. An A Grade lunch with milk is served every day. A majority of the pupils patronize the lunch room.

The fourth grade teacher, Miss Juanita Newell has been absent for several days because of illness. Mrs. Joe Williams of Clanton is substituting for her.

The Junior Red Cross Christmas boxes were filled and overflowing in every room of this school.

The fifth grade have taken the beautifying of their room as a project. They have hung colorful new curtains as their windows and have several pretty potted plants in their room.

The Home Ec girls and shop boys have renovated and redecorated the Library.

On last Friday the seventh grade had charge of Chapel. It was outlined with the following:

The white elephant characters were Wyldedean Martain, Annie Mae Popwell, Alton E. Williams and Ollie Headley.

"Bud's Prize" characters were: Marshall Green, Gilbert Green, Lora Rhodes, Betty Jean Burkhalter—Evelyn Johnson, Reporter.

How women and girls may get wanted relief from functional periodic pain

Cardui is a liquid medicine which many women say has brought relief from the cramp-like agony and nervous strain of functional periodic distress. Here's how it may help:

1 Taken like a tonic, it should stimulate appetite, aid digestion, "loose" help build resistance for the "time" to come.

2 Started 3 days before "your time", it should help relieve pain due to purely functional periodic causes. Try Cardui. If it helps, you'll be glad you did.

FOLKS & THINGS

ABOUT TOWN

—By BEN

We have witnessed carelessness in many forms but the lady who was feeding her youngsters bananas last Saturday morning and throwing the peelings on the sidewalk right in the heart of town, deserves a citation of some sort for being the most thoughtless person alive. We think just desert would have been for her to have stepped back on one of the peels.

Don't forget to remember the Post Number 6 American Legion Carnival that starts October 16th, and runs for a week here. Forty-two attractions in all which sounds like quite a bit of amusement scheduled our way for that week.

Several have mentioned that they didn't like the new head we have used at the top of this column for the past several weeks. They had become used to the funny lookin' picture at the top of the old column and had got accustomed to locating it better. Thus we return this week to the "old head" that has been there so long. Which reminds us that last week "Folks & Things" celebrated its fourth birthday. First appearing on Oct. 1, 1940.

Hear about the automobile thief when arranged before the court said: "Your honor, it was like this. The car was parked in front of the cemetery and naturally I thought the owner was dead."

Well, the gypsies, or Cherokees or Fortune Tellers, have folded their tents and strolled quietly off into the night. And we hope that statement doesn't get us into the hot water that just such a statement did a couple of years ago. If you will remember they were camped up about J. R. Williams Shell place when the Woco Pep Gasoline storage tanks caught on fire. We had a little fun at their expense and thought we were going to get our scalp lifted and hung to the nearest telephone pole. Anyway, the present 'troupe' have completed their stay here, which we believe is for the betterment of Clanton.

WHEN IT COMES—

There are some here already planning on how they will celebrate the arrival of Victory day in Europe. Many cities have ordered all liquor stores closed for that day while Wisconsin has made it a statewide closing order. Already certain popular night clubs and restaurants have reservations to overflowing for V-Day guests. Our exuberance will no doubt be with the usual American fervor for intoxication and exhilarated joy. Perhaps the rejoicing will be overdone as far as soberness is concerned. After all this does not mean a complete victory. Japan is to be defeated and war with her may go on for another long and death-dealing year. Consider recent losses in China and look to a grim battle ahead. And although we will be glad that war with Germany is terminated, it doesn't mean demobilization is at hand, that the liberated countries can be forgotten, that the problem of demobilizing industry here at home has been solved. The reconversion of our war production plants to care for the boys who will return seeking employment, to end war contracts, dispose of war property, protect prices and not lose our buying power by an end of one war, are all reasons enough to keep V-Day celebration from being a complete victory. Much lies ahead in fact many intelligent minds warn that the hardest job as citizens, lies after the war is over. Is it reason then to get drunk to celebrate, to lose our heads and go slap-happy on the highways in racing autos?—Butler County News.

Where Time Doesn't March On...

... unless you step in now to help men in prison camps fight that deadly "barbed wire" boredom

THE CLOCK has a hundred hours on its dial and each hour has 60 minutes when you're penned behind barbed wire.

Nothing to see but that wire, the barrack's wall, and a sentry's back. Nothing to hear but the tramp of his feet, the beeps of your comrades.

So you go slowly, grimly, and sometimes not-so-quietly, progressively towards the "barbed wire disease" unless...

Unless you're lucky enough to have the folks back home get behind the War Prisoners' Aid (one of the 22 participating agencies of the National War Fund) and provide the money to provide the things to feed the hunger of your heart and soul and mind.

Books and baseballs and tennis rackets. Textbooks and technical equipment so you can continue studies the war interrupted. Grease paint and playscripts for your own camp shows. Games of every sort. Anything and everything it's humanly possible to provide to start Time marching on again.

This is just one of the many, vital jobs your contribution helps perform when you give to the Alabama War Chest. Your dollars go to work on six continents and ninety-one countries—including your own.

And don't just give a "token" contribution. The job is too big for that. Give—really give! Remember that no matter how much any of us gives in money it's still little compared to what the people you'll help have been given in "blood, sweat, and tears."

War Chest Donations Support Twenty-Two Agencies Like These

More than half the funds subscribed in the appeal of Alabama's War Chest will be used to maintain the services of agencies that aid our own fighting forces, prisoners of war and members of our Merchant Marine. The rest will be distributed among 19 Allied war relief agencies that serve on six continents and ninety-one countries. Pictured here are some of their activities: (1) A bomb blitzed home in Britain and (2) one of the child victims cared for by British War Relief. In 80 days alone, bombs damaged 870,000 English homes, killed 5,817 people, seriously wounded 17,036 others. (3) Soldiers in Lt. General Hodges' Third Army receive visit from a USO Mobile Kitchen. USO makes a "home away from home" for all in our armed services. It operates 3,000 clubs and units, providing recreation and home comforts for thirty million men and women monthly. USO camp shows also bring the boon of entertainment to more than 2,000,000 men monthly in all war theaters. (4) Refugees on a long trek to safety from Nazi oppression. Thousands like these are aided by Refugee Relief Trustees. (5) Through War Prisoners Aid, our fighting men, held prisoners by the enemy, receive craft tools, books, recreational equipment to maintain their morale until victory brings freedom. (6) Women doctors and assistants dress the wounds of China's daring guerrilla fighters. This bombproof cave ward is one of many supported by United China Relief. (7) American merchant seamen of a crew rescued after a torpeding in the Mediterranean are landed at the residential club in Algiers, operated by United Seamen's Service.

SAVING SWEET POTATOES IS IMPORTANT JOB

Alabama farmers are now faced with the annual job of putting away their sweet potato crop.

"The old reminder that they should be dug while the ground is still dry and weather is warm is very important," says Lyle Brown, extension horticulturist. "Sweetpotatoes must never be permitted to get chilled."

Curing and keeping sweet potatoes is not difficult or beyond the ability of any farmer. They are kept very long in a wide variety of storage spaces. Curing houses built for the purpose are best, of course, but as long as given a reasonable amount of ventilation and not permitted to get below about 45 degrees, they can be kept most anywhere. Storehouses, basements, dwellings, cribs, etc., are used satisfactorily.

Digging early is very important because at that time the outside temperature is such that he bruised and broken places will heal over naturally and soft rot infection will be kept at a minimum. Then too, the soil is usually dry and will more easily shed off the potatoes, leaving them clean.

SINGING AT-- PATES CHAPEL--COMMUNITY

A large crowd attended the singing at Pates Chapel. The opening song was "Amazing Grace" sung by the Chairman Mr. A. A. Jackson. Prayer by Rev. Crumpton. A few lessons were sung and then that old time God called preacher, Rev. Crumpton delivered a wonderful sermon and then there was a wonder dinner spread. Everybody enjoyed themselves.

The afternoon director was Bro. A. A. Jackson, the Chairman, who is one of the lovers of old music. Uncle John Hayes, Marvin Jackson and Roy Jackson, G. B. Williams, uncle Joe Cobb, J. L. Hayes, Lorenza Sanders and W. A. Hayes.

Thanks to that good community for their cooperation. May God bless them all--J. Lawrence Hays, Secy.

NAVY COMBAT AIRCREWMEN BADLY NEEDED

Young men between the ages of 17 and 27 are urgently needed for training as Navy Combat Aircrewmembers, according to M. H. Potter, petty officer in charge of the Montgomery Navy Recruiting Station.

"Young men who enlist under this particular program will be given 12 months training at the Naval Air Station at Memphis, Tenn.," said Chief Potter, who explained that the training formerly had been given at Jacksonville, Fla., but now had been shifted to the nearby Tennessee city.

Qualified applicants receive 12 mos. training in radio, gunnery or ordnance and upon completion of the course receive silver wings and petty officer ratings. There is no particular educational qualification required to make application and men who have not finished high school are being accepted now after passing an aptitude test.

Chief Potter said the finest training in the world is given young men who qualify as Aircrewmembers, adding that much of the training will earn the Aircrewmembers a living after the war in radio, electronics, or the automotive or aviation business.

Full information can be obtained from the Navy Recruiter who visits Clanton every Monday and maintains headquarters at the Draft Board office.

ANNUAL MEETING IN HONOR OF REV. J. D. HUGHES

REV. AND MRS. J. D. HUGHES

Three years ago a meeting was held at Poplar Springs honoring Rev. J. D. Hughes, who had been preaching for more than fifty years. The third annual session will be held at that church Sunday, October 29th, beginning at 9:30 and continuing throughout the day. All preachers of all denominations who were baptized by Bro. Hughes, and all preachers who were baptized by these preachers, are urged and expected to attend, as well as friends throughout this and adjoining counties. It is hoped that an enjoyable and inspiring rally for the old veteran will be held that day. Everybody come, bring dinner and spend the day. An enjoyable program has been arranged. Come praying for each messenger that God will be glorified.

FREE SHOW AT AIRPORT NEXT SUNDAY

At 2:30 o'clock next Sunday afternoon there will be a free exhibition at the Airport given by Eddie Lee, who has more than 500 parachute jumps to his credit. He will entertain the crowds here with a delayed jump, falling several thousand feet before opening his chute. The public is cordially invited.

STATE OF ALABAMA
A PROCLAMATION
BY THE GOVERNOR

WHEREAS, the Legislature of Alabama, at the Regular Session 1943, ordered an election to be held by the qualified electors of the State of Alabama upon a certain proposed amendment to the Constitution of Alabama, which said amendment is herein set out, and ordered that said election be held at the next General Election after the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1943 Legislature; and

WHEREAS, the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1944, which is the 7th day of November, is the time for holding the next General Election after the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1943 Legislature; and

WHEREAS, notice of such election, together with the proposed amendment is required by law, and by the provisions of the Act submitting the amendment, to be given by a proclamation of the Governor to be published in each county in the State of Alabama one week before the said election; and

WHEREAS, the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1944, which is the 7th day of November, is the time for holding the next General Election after the expiration of three months after the final adjournment of the regular session of the 1943 Legislature; and

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Chauncey Sparks, as Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby give notice, direct and proclaim that on Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1944, an election will be held at the several polling places within the State of Alabama, in the manner and form provided by law, upon the following proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901:

"The Legislature of Alabama may hereafter, from time to time, by general or local laws, fix, regulate and alter the fees, commissions, allowances and salaries, including the method or basis of their compensation, to be charged or received by the Tax Assessors, Tax Collectors, Probate Judges, Circuit Clerks, Sheriffs, and Registers of the several Courts and Inferior Courts, to be charged or received by the right to place any one or all of said officers on a salary and provide for the fees charged and collected by said officers to be paid into the treasury from which their salaries are paid, and provide the method and basis of their compensation, or consolidate any of said officers in the following named county: Houston. All Acts of the Legislature of Alabama of the regular session of the Legislature 1943 heretofore passed and applicable or purporting to fix the compensation of said named county officers, on a salary basis, are hereby validated and confirmed."

I further direct and proclaim that notice of this election upon Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1944, upon the above set forth amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901, be given by publishing the same one week for four successive weeks next preceding Tuesday the 7th day of November, 1944, in each county in the State of Alabama in a newspaper published in said county.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and the Great Seal of the State to be affixed by the Secretary of State at the City of Montgomery, on the 1st day of August, 1944.

CHAUNCEY SPARKS, Governor.

STATE OF ALABAMA
A PROCLAMATION
BY THE

"At any general election hereafter held for county officers all nominees for county officers of any political party which at the general election for county officers then next preceding the election cast more than twenty-five percent of the entire vote cast for county officers must have been nominated by primary election held in accordance with the statutes now in force or hereafter enacted, and in determining the total vote of a political party the test shall be the total vote cast by each political party for its candidate for county officer who received the greatest number of votes."

I further direct and proclaim that notice of this election upon Tuesday, the 7th day of November, 1944, upon the above set forth amendment to the Constitution of the State of Alabama of 1901, be given by publishing the same one week for four successive weeks next preceding Tuesday the 7th day of November, 1944, in each county in the State of Alabama in a newspaper published in said county.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and the Great Seal of the State to be affixed by the Secretary of State at the City of Montgomery, on the 1st day of August, 1944.

CHAUNCEY SPARKS, Governor.

"Section 1944. No person who honorably served in the military service of the United States between January 1, 1917 and November 11, 1918, or between September 16, 1940 and December 8, 1941, or at any time, past or present or future, when the United States was, is or shall be at war with any foreign state, shall be required after the beginning of such service to pay the poll tax specified in the Constitution of Alabama as a prerequisite to the privilege of voting in Alabama; but, on the contrary, every such person shall be exempt from the payment of all poll taxes which have heretofore accrued and have not been paid or which may thereafter accrue: Provided, however, that if any such person is discharged dishonorably from said service the exemption herein provided shall not be set out, and such person shall be liable as a prerequisite to the privilege of voting in Alabama thereafter, must pay the poll tax specified in the Constitution of Alabama as in such person has never been in such service. The term military service as used in this section includes service in the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, the Women's Appointed Volunteer Emergency Service, and the Women's Reserve of the United States Navy. The United States shall not be deemed to have a foreign state within the meaning of this section at a time when an armistice exists between the United States and the foreign state. The Judge of Probate shall issue a certificate of exemption to a person exempt from the payment of poll tax by reason of this section under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Governor. This section shall be amendable and retroactive, but the legislature is authorized to enact laws designed to carry out the purposes of this section."
